"These letters got mixed—the letter to Miss K. being addressed to the old lady, the letter to the old lady to Miss K.

"Bearing nothing I was on hand with the horses, and a very disappointed young lady requested an explanation of the letter. Whether the old lady was ready that afternoon I never knew, as I sent a cover to captain mullen."

In the matter of fact, I met a great and very merry lost a wife."

Still Believe in Witchcraft.

How many Bluebell readers who have read the witch trial of Vienna know that such women as Maile Gabel, persecuted for her sixth child, are to be found here? Marie Jemes is a well known fortune teller, judge for fancy of the Hungarian shepherd, Stephen Szuhacsics, who lives in Vienna and who sells charms and in whom she believes. He made her "mark," which was to be often found before, that this world is not a solitary area and that the judge is wrong. A great part of mankind is in the middle ages, if it is not, it is at least in the nineteenth. The credulous Austrian women also believe that her husband could be a good of experience—he is a "wise" of the Hungarian, and Marie Nejedly, who would time for a small consideration to insure him a passport to some place of expenditure, habits, has many French and English fellow-lovers. White and black witches flutter in many parts of this country. Not a few of the latter are only charlatans but not a few of them really believe in their own charms, as the Marie Nejedly asserted that she did.—London Outlook.

FIND MISSING BONDS.

PRESENTED FOR PAYMENT AFTER THIRTY-FIVE YEARS.

Securities of old Road Date Up in Akron, Ohio, but Interest Money Has Been Appropriated — City Hunts in Distance.

Many bonds have come up again issued by the Akron and Cuyahoga Western Railroad in the form known as "Ohio." There is about one bond taken from the safety deposit vault of the company that is supposed to accompany bonds issued for purposes in Cuyahoga County, Ohio. In June, the company was formed, before organized July 20, 1871, the date the bond bears. The actual organization and issue of bonds took place in 1872. The company was unable to meet the interest on the bonds, and finally in 1875 the company was sold under foreclosure and reorganized as the Akron, Cuyahoga and Western Railroad Company. The bonds were not paid, but some time after the reorganization the company paid the interest on the bonds, and during the years they placed any one on the market.

Since the bonds were due, the company has paid no interest on them, as he had from the time reorganized the company. The other company is the Hedding-Sugg collection agency of Akron, Ohio, which has been working on the case for some time, also aggressively became responsible in behalf of the issue of the bond and was driven home.

The attorneys, Messrs. Hedding and Sugg, are in Akron, Ohio, and are now in the Northern District of Ohio, and are now in the Northern District of Ohio, and are now in the Northern District of HARBOR DREDGING.

Congressman Bishop Gets Even With the Lake Dredge Combine Before Leaving Congress.

A Washington special says: Congressman Roscoe P. Bishop believes that he has gone quite a long way in getting even with the interests which he holds largely responsible for his political defeat. He quietly slipped into the rivers and harbors bill provisions which are interpreted by his friends as hard blows at the alleged dredge trust. And the Ludington statesman said nothing about the effect of his apparently innocent legislation until after both the house and senate had passed finally upon his proposals.

The most important blow at these alleged political enemies is stricken in these words: "That section 4 of the act of congress approved April 28, 1902, entitled 'An act providing for the preservation or maintenance of channels or of river and harbor improvements, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby repealed."

The effect of this veiled repeal clause is to annul a step which Bishop's friends allege was taken by congress in 1902 in the interest of dredge owners upon the great lakes. That legislation of 1902 provided that the war department could not without specific act of congress, have constructed a dredge for use north of Cape Henry—upon the great lakes, and the Bishop repeal clause makes it possible for the war department to place and control its own dredges upon the great lakes whenever its judgment prompts.

The full significance of this successful step upon the part of the Ludington congressman can be appreciated only in the light of knowledge of his struggle to secuning the dredge Gillespie for the lakes, and of the fight which dredge owners are alleged to have made against him at that time.

Upon the advice of Bishop, Gen. Gillespie, then head of the engineering branch of the war department, ordered a survey of the dredge, without congressional consent. But when the dredge was completed, and passed for from money appropriated for Michigan harbors, Bishop was unable to get the dredge into Michigan waters.

Meanwhile, it is alleged that political influences had been at work in high military circles, officials argued that right at the crucial point of a national campaign, the dredge people had shown that they could be helpful in saving the republic. Necessarily, from the republican stand point, provided only assurance was given that no government dredge should be allowed to get a foothold upon the lakes. Moreover, Bishop's friends assert that he was warned by those same dredge interests that, if he did not quit his fight for a government dredge, his political goose would be cooked at the next opportunity.

Unable to secure an explanation why the dredge was not at work on the Atlantic coast, instead of on Lake Michigan, Bishop introduced a clause into the rivers and harbor bill, commanding that the dredge Gillespie be sent to the great lakes. A hard fight followed upon the floor of the house, in which prominent political leaders of the opposition, fairly opposed the Bishop provision, and were in turn pretty pointedly referred to by the Ludington statesman as friends of the dredge trust. And the house adopted the Bishop provision by a round majority.

How hard the dredge people were hit by this legislation it is claimed by Mr. Bishop's friends, is shown by the cuts which they made in their subsequent bids for excavating. While they had charged about 27 and 28 cents per yard for plain sand excavation, they dropped their price to 10 and 11 cents per yard. But that drop was made only as to points where water of the depth of 20 feet could work. At other points, where the water was too shallow for the big government dredge, the old price was charged.

Besides having all restrictions upon the use of government dredges upon the lakes, Mr Bishop has struck a further blow, the purpose of which is to lower the charge at all points. This is effected, in the view of his friends, by the provisions of the present rivers and harbors bill that certain harbors, heretofore free dumps for the Gillespie, shall be made of sufficient dig it for it. The places specially mentioned in this connection are Kewaunee harbor and Kalamazoo river, Douglas harbor and White lake. The other more important harbors are already in sufficient depth for the G. Bagley.

I kept this treatment up for a few weeks when he was perfectly well. He has worked steadily since at carpenter work. Dr. King's New Discovery saved his life." SCHOOL NOTES.

Monday morning the High School together with the Commercial and Normal students, were favored by an especially interesting program, in which each selection was rendered exceeding well:

Cornet Solo.....Lawrence Adams
Vocal Solo.....Byron Cook
Violin Solo.....Miss Zellmer
Reading.....Margaret Wise
Instrumental Solo.....Ralph Cook

We were all glad to see Professor Woodley back from Chicago, where he has been the past week at the meeting of Superintendents, and we expect to hear later, as one of our Monday morning talks, the valuable addresses of the city, which no doubt, was accompanied by interesting as well as negotiable events.

Miss Lucy Pepperman, who is a graduate not only of the Charlevoix High school, but also of the Normal, was a visitor at the rooms of the latter, the other day. She has a fine position as teacher in an Antrim county school.

There doesn't seem to be any particular news from the Domestic Department this week, which can be mentioned as a big step in which the students relentlessly thump the pipe writer and appear perfectly delighted with their accomplishments. However, this is to splendid contrast of the work being done in the training school, which is superintended by Miss Hood, and over room by Miss Hines.

On Monday evening of this week, after the "Roosted Mats" practice, a surprise party was given by the cast, for their supervisor, Miss Cook, and a very pleasant evening was reported by each one present.

The High School Orchestra, will give another of the series of their dancing parties, at the Rock House this Wednesday evening and a good time is anticipated by all.

Dear Sir: You'd strike it rich if you could find a way to shave your customers in less time for less cost, and make the shave last twice or three times as long.

You wouldn't shave the same person so many times, or get so much of his money, but the whole town would be talking about you, and everybody would come to you for a shave.

I love bad and she is exactly that in paints. It takes fewer gallons and it wears longer. Costs less for the job, and you don't have to do it again for years and years—six years at least.

A Buried Illusion.

One of our customers writing from Chicago, says: "I am now frank to confess after having the opportunity to visit some of the factories in Chicago and elsewhere, where they make the Rugs from old carpets, that conducting a "Sanitary Factory" as you advertise is a point well taken seeing how dust-full you were in preserving clean surroundings for your workmen and work during the summer I have spent at Petoskey. In Chicago especially fifth and 48th Avenue and half paid weavers work on in an atmosphere laden with germs of Scarlet Fever, Diptheria, Small Pox, and Consumption, which in turn are woven into the Rugs. I often wonder if mothers give this a thought when sending Rag orders away through agents that possibly there are lurkings into the house terrible germs to take away loved ones. You certainly deserve the patronage of thinking people and all I can do shall be very gladly done."

Pretty Compliment Was That Paid to President Fallieres by His Fellow-Townsmen—Curious Custom Among Indians.

A very pretty compliment was paid by his fellow townsmen to President Fallieres of France upon the occasion of his visit to his birthplace, the little town of Mezin. To widen the street the house in which the President was born had been pulled down seven years ago. What was to be done? The people of Mezin, for their hands to gether and when their distinguished fellow citizen arrived, imagine his delight at finding an exact reproduction of his old home in paper mache! All was perfect, down to the very furniture, part of which had been collected from the country around and not impoverished in furnishing the president thanked his friends in a voice broken with emotion, and he actually strummed down his checks as he finished his little speech.

The late French president, M Loubet, was once the recipient of an interesting present in connection with his native town. He received from the municipal council of Montelimar a box of crown candies relating to his visits to Italy and to Sardinia. The album, which is of some value and richly bound, contains not only cuttings, but photographs and illustrations of all kinds. It forms indeed, a complete chronicle of his life, written in many different people, and in more than a dozen different languages.

In India the native rajahs consider it the highest possible compliment to be presented with fine specimens of wild beasts, and consequently both King Edward and the prince of Wales has been the recipient of many gifts of this description. But when, one few days two splendid lions arrived unexpectedly at Sandringham, King Edward was driven to remonstrate "I have accommodation" he said, "for horses, dogs, cows, cats, mice, and even rats, but I must draw the line at tigers."

An odd gift was received by the crown prince of Germany upon his coming of age. A deputation of Prussian officials, bearing a huge and magnificent steak, upon the surface of which was written in red, greetings to the future monarch.

The late Prince Bismarck once received from some miners in Westphalia a lump of himself carved in coal and it is said that this odd present was always carefully preserved by him and looked upon somewhat in the light of a lucky talisman.

A complaint which had serious results was said to an actor named Hanson, at a little mining town in Pennsylvania. The audience was so stirred by Mr. Hanson's acting that some persons began throwing presents upon the stage, like spectators at a Spanish bullfight. One lady minor, having nothing else handy, hurled a lump of gold ore. Unluckily it hit the actor on the head and knocked him down. He was badly injured, and it was weeks before he was able to play again.

Perhaps the oddest idea of paying a compliment belongs to a tribe of Indians on the Alaska coast. When a chief wishes to do honor to a distinguished visitor he invites him to a "potlatch" or feast. Then when all have eaten their fill the chief goes to the edge of the cliff and solemnly casts—not the sun as many of his people believe—but his idols he can afford. This is held to be the highest form of compliment and much superior to merely giving presents to the guest.

Books and Kitchen.

The habit of pampering books is a vice of the age. And we are glad to find Sir Lowder Brunton, in the Lancet, writing in a way that shows him to harbor no weakness of that kind. Sir Lauder has discovered that dust is often responsible for so-called cold in the head. Whenever he turned over the books in his library he found that a cold followed. His remedy is to scrub the top of a book with a solution of carbolic acid before opening it. Splendid idea.

THE SUN SPOT. PERHAPS.

The Impending Fate of Charlevoix May Be Due to Solar Disturbances.

Can it be that Charlevoix is tottering on the brink of perdition? Is Charlevoix to suffer the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah, in company with Cheboygan? We have been given to understand that the only difference between Cheboygan and hell is that Cheboygan is surrounded by water. We expect to hear from up the Straits some time in the near future, that the only difference between Charlevoix and hell is that a river runs through the center of Charlevoix. The steeper the hill, the more humor in climbing it.

We frankly confess that we do not believe all the people in Charlevoix are saints; and we do not deny that there are bad things in Charlevoix. Influences that most of us would like to see eradicated. But, be it true, as alleged that the city is going to everlasting demolition on the lightning express?

Is it true that our church members are hypocrites, and our women thoughtless, pleasure seeking, painted creatures of corrupt society? Is it true that leading and upright citizens are "reprobates"? Not so!

It may be that we are not the divinely commissioned defender of any man or woman, any more than an "evangelist" is the divinely appointed judge of any man or woman; but the SENTINEL has for nearly forty years been the champion of the good name of Charlevoix, and it has earned the title. We lay down this proposition:

There is not a town of its size in Michigan where more men, women and children respond to the Sunday morning church bells than in Charlevoix. There is not a town of its size in Michigan that contributes more to the support of the Gospel than Charlevoix. There is not a town in Michigan that can count a greater membership in societies that have for their object the moral and intellectual uplifting of the people, nor a town that can boast of a greater number of such societies. There is not a town in Michigan, of its population, that is better governed, or more orderly—than Charlevoix. To say otherwise is a slander!

But a modern St. Paul has come down from Ephesus, and upon Mars Hill sends forth the thunderous proclamation "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are superstitious and altogether unholy."

The editor of this paper, with his dying breath, will defend Charlevoix against calumny. Wised under the surgeon's knife, one of Napoleon's old guard said, "Monsieur le docteur, ben you cut one inch nearer my heart you would have found the Emperor!"

We know Charlevoix; we have lived in Charlevoix from boyhood; we shall die in Charlevoix. Until our tongue and good right hand are paralyzed we shall use both in defense of Charlevoix and its people.

"Judge not, that ye be judged."

TOO CHEAP

Newspapers at the Same Price With Cost Greatly Increased.

If any class of business men ever had good reason for the formation of a trust with a view of advancing prices, the press of this country presents that justification at this time.

The white paper alone on which many papers are printed cost more than double to the purchaser for the printed edition. The cost of white paper has been advancing for years. Printing ink, first class, has at the present time, and wages were never higher, yet the price of the output has been retained. The newspapers of the country in their columns seem to point out everything in the news line pertaining to the formation of trusts in sugar, paper, coal, steel and almost every commodity in general use, but they entirely overlook the fact that they could and should point with great interest to the fact that newspapers are supplying the public with the news of the world under a greater expense of production than at any time previous, while the comparative cost of advertising has not been greatly increased.

The newspapers have been in the front rank in the development of civilization, civilization, and today they give more to the purchaser for the investment than it is possible to receive in any other channel or expenditure. Any thoughtful person who will carefully consider the increased publication cost of newspapers and the vast amount of information and pleasure the people derive from them at old time prices will agree with us in this proposition.

THE CARNEGIE LIBRARY.

Question Not Settled—The People Would Like to Be Consulted—A Factor in the Transaction.

We know not from whence the edict has been issued that Charlevoix has accepted the offer of Andrew Carnegie to the city $10,000 library, subject to the conditions imposed in the tender, but we have read in several outside papers that such is the case.

It is true that Mr. Carnegie, through his secretary, has written here that the money is ready for us when the city council guarantees that ten percent of $10,000 shall be contributed by the city annually for the maintenance of the library.

It is fact that the proposition is a generous and a tempting one. It is also true that it comes within the realm of educational development. It is equally true that a public library is a powerful moral agency. In the search for truly philanthropic opportunity we do not think a pathway could be blazed that would, as pointing toward both intellectual and moral uplifting, be less sinuous than that which would lead up to a well equipped and well governed public library.

But there are several things to be considered in connection with the proposition, chief of which is the matter of compliance with the conditions of the gift. We cannot see how any such guarantee could be given by either the common council of the school board. The council cannot legislate in perpetuity. The present council could vote to spend $5,000 upon the tax roll for library purposes, but the next council might refuse to do it. No council can bind its successors. A council can pass an ordinance that may be operative through six generations, or it may be repealed in three months by the successor of the council enacting it. What then?

Then the question arises, shall $1,000 per year maintain a $10,000 library? Could the salary of a competent librarian, the pay of a janitor, fuel, lights water, and funds necessary to make good the natural retrogression on the book shelves, the purchase of papers and magazines, and many other expenses that would surely show up, be kept within the limit of $1,000 per year? We will not take the responsibility of saying that it could not because there are good, level headed citizens who say it could. But the matter should be carefully considered.

The question of "taxes" always comes well to the front in questions of this kind, many times warping judgment and preventing the rendering of a fair verdict—for, strange, the average tax payer will "blow" a dollar unnecessarily, and then, if, for some good purpose his assessment is fifty cents more this year than it was last, he will kick over the stove in the treasurer's office. Therefore, striking a true balance between benefit and cost, we place very little stress upon the tax feature of it.

The present library costs for maintenance, which includes all items of expense mentioned above, about an average of $500 per year. Of course nobody would for a moment consider a proposition to close up the place to save the $500. The Carnegie library would just double this cost,—and this is a feature of the proposition that justifies calm and careful consideration.

The Charlevoix Historical Society has about you volumes of good books and about that many dollars, which, it is understood, is willing to turn in to help along the public library enterprise.

The addition of $500 to the tax roll would increase the tax about forty five cents per one thousand dollars of assessed valuation. This is the situation in a nutshell. It does not seem, considering the unquestioned cumulative moral and intellectual value of the library, that the burden would be excessive.

But we are driven back to the really vital question of how a great series of permanent compliance with the conditions can legally be given. The matter has been referred to city attorney Kane, who has written Mr. Carnegie that assumes the school board (which really governs the library, or the city council, has any legal authority to appropriate money in perpetuity, and here the matter rests, awaiting a reply.

SAND BRICK PLANT.

Company to be Organized For Operation in Charlevoix.

Last Saturday Mr. G. L. Wagner, of this city, secured title to the five acre lot belonging to the city, formerly a part of the old Medad Thompson farm, and for some time past used as a detention hospital. The lot runs to Pine Lake, and the P. M. Ry. runs through it.

The property was secured for a sand brick plant, which will be erected there this spring. Mr. Wagner is backed by abundant outside capital, and the composition is already in process of formation. The process is a patent, the product being manufactured entirely of sand and lime, and are said to be far superior to the ordinary, clay, brick, both for finish and durability.

The factory will have a capacity of turning out 20,000 brick per day, and will, on the start, employ from twelve to fifteen men, which will unquestionably be increased as the industry develops a demand for the goods.

Mr. Wagner who is thoroughly familiar with the business has been working up the enterprise the past year or more, and has great confidence of the success of the undertaking.

NEW INSPECTION RULE

Lake Vessels to be Overhauled Three Times a Year.

A stringent and far-reaching order has been issued by the supervising inspector general of the United States lake marine, approved by Secretary Strauss of the department of commerce and labor, concerning the inspection of vessels. Local inspectors in all the districts under federal supervision are ordered to begin immediately a reinspection of the various steamers within their respective districts, paying particular attention to boats carrying passengers. Executive steamboat men are to be examined by the inspectors, and it is especially specified that no notice of the contemplated reinspection of a vessel shall be given the owner or master thereof.

After the regular inspection or examination of boats, three additional inspections must be made during the season it is in commission, and where assistant inspectors are employed one man cannot make operative one inspection of one boat. Where a boat is found unfit for service or where her equipment is not fully up to the standard demanded by the rules now in force, such boat must not be permitted to navigate.

Notwithstanding their largely increased duties, local inspectors declare they will be amply able, with their present force, four in number, to properly and faithfully discharge their duties with fidelity in their government and safety to mankind.

The Standard Cement Co.

Notice have been sent to the stockholders of the Standard Portland Cement Co., announcing a meeting in Detroit this month, to arrange for the holding of the corporation.

It is proposed to issue bonds to the amount of $500,000 for the development of the company's property here.

Latest advices are to the effect that operations will be resumed on the plant this spring, and that the cement plant will be erected the coming summer and fall.

The SENTINEL repeats what it has often said, that the Standard enterprise is one of the best business propositions in the State.

DOOMED.

By WILLARD MacKENZIE

"Come inside—the cottage," he said, holding her to. "No one is here, I think. Come inside—quick."

"I had lost my way," I mumbled at the door, but as she moved, she had indeed let in, with the frame of looking glass one to make impossible, and was out at the door against I could enter frantically, and then I saw that was to my cause."

"You have spoken wandering about here in the hope of seeing me—of meeting me accidentally? Was it so?"

"Yes," she again answered sweetly, all her spirited manner.

"Why, then, do you not consider it a compliment, and be glad to see me?"

"Oh, you are so strange!" I cried pleadingly.

"Why, pray, do I have been there before?"

"Ever since we first met, I have been there."

"Ever since we first met, I have been there—ever since you first saw me, I have been in my heart of hearts, I have been in your thoughts, I have been in your heart, and there I shall remain, and there I shall stay, and there I shall remain, and there I shall stay, and there I shall remain, and there I shall stay

Charlevoix Sentinel
WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

Why Not Tell Truth.

A scientific gentleman in Washington, a recognized authority on chemistry, has a letter in the Washington Star on the subject of the tariff, but omits to the readers of the Sentinel the name of the writer. The gentleman states that the cost of the raw material of crockery is a reduction in the Wilson bill of 1 cent per ton, and that the duty on the finished article is increased from 45 to 60 per cent. The gentleman goes on to say that the manufacturers of crockery have not asked for any protection, and that the duties were placed on the crockery schedule against the wishes of the manufacturers by the Senate committee in order to which to trade off the duties on other articles. For example, the number of people engaged in agriculture has increased from 7,670,493 in 1870 to 11,222,097 in 1895, while in the same 25 years the value of farm property in the United States has advanced from $3,967,000,000 to $26,500,000,000. In 1870 the value of farm products was less than $2,000,000,000, in 1895 this value had reached the tremendous total of $7,500,000,000—says Mr. Edgerton. Contrast this mighty exhibit of the prosperity which has come to the farmers of the country, with the few cents or 10 or 15 years ago, and in doing so bear in mind that 70% is only enough of what we must eat, to form life. In passing through this phenomenal period of prosperity the cream of our wool-farmers will we suppose still have their cheap clothing, could be profitably compared in dollars and cents for which a profitable market could be found in Europe. Now, chainless bicycle growth, with its millions of consumers, added to home requirements, has reversed the tide.

The chief cause of agricultural prosperity in the United States is shown in three words: "Protection to industrial growth." Ten years ago, when our population was nearly twice what it is, the blight of tariff reform disappeared, the value of our farm products was not above $2,500,000,000, or one-half of the value to-day. The value of our farm property represented a value of just little more than $10,000,000,000 in the year 1885, and the value of farm property represented a value of just little more than $14,000,000,000 in the year 1895. The Democratic tariff reform blight had blighted nearly little to do with producing these astonishing advances in value of farm produce and of property. The more potent has been the home market.

What Germany Covets.

Germany seems to have taken note of the silence on the tariff in the president's message, and it has expressed some dissatisfaction over the omission of the question. It has no garden as very important. But the German papers may not have taken the last month our exports exceeded those of the same month last year to some $22,000,000. The United states is doing what all the foreign nations that also could hope to do under the most favorable conditions. While Germany is trying to "get even" by taxing our own imports and at the same time extend her exports, Germany proves the position in trade held by this country and thinks in some way or other to reach it through the tariff. But the same needs American agricultural products and the cattle of our farms. Without them the German industrial classes can not have meat enough to satisfy their wants, and without it some parts of Germany will be out of all range as far as the masses are concerned. The United States can lose consumers in Germany simplying the tariff question and when they return and make peace no more as right of course, know a great deal more about this subject. In the meantime President Roosevelt is worried at mention of the tariff.—Cedar Rapids Republican.

Should Not Be Necessary.

The defeat of Congressman McCleary of Minnesota, and Congressman Lacey, of Iowa, is being referred to with great satisfaction to opponents of protection. It will not be doubted that these two men were leaders in Congress of the Republican party, and that their defeat is greatly regretted by friends of the cause they so well advocated. But there were hundreds more conspicuous friends of protection than was William McKinley when he was defeated in his 45th district in the same issue, or than was President Benjamin Harrison when he failed of reelection because of the desire of the people to try a season of tariff reform. It may be necessary for history to repeat itself in order that the lesson which followed the defeat of Jefferson and Harrison shall be learned anew. But it should not be necessary.—Detroit, Mich., Times.

INDUSTRIAL GROWTH

Has Added Enormously to Wealth of Farmers.

In a well conceived analysis of the present conditions of national prosperity, Bradford H. Gilbreath, editor of the Industrial Journal, of Philadelphia, in the interview in Business, says: "Protection to industrial growth has added enormously to the wealth of farmers. Ten years ago, when our population was nearly twice what it is, the blight of tariff reform disappeared, the value of our farm products was not above $2,500,000,000, or one-half of the value to-day. The value of our farm property represented a value of just little more than $10,000,000,000 in the year 1885, and the value of farm property represented a value of just little more than $14,000,000,000 in the year 1895. The Democratic tariff reform blight had blighted nearly little to do with producing these astonishing advances in value of farm produce and of property. The more potent has been the home market.

Gen. Butler's Identity Made Known by His Own Quotation.

Gen. B. F. Butler built a house in Washington on the same plan as his house in Lowell and his plans were purchased to identify the house was. The original and the house of Mr. Blaney, afterward city clerk of Worcester, and the two houses were connected by tunneling between the two places.

One day a senator called upon Butler to visit Lowell and the next day in Washington early in the hall and his secretary opened upon the same with, on both occasions.

"Butler, Butler, Blaney, don't you ever say," he answered the senator.

"Yes," said Butler, "Gen. Butler finds some old-fashioned stuff for life hands in the."

Chicago, arose, and bowed, saying: "General I never was gone until now I am who say nothing wise. I had heard this rumor, but I always disbelieved it."

To Say and to Mean.

"I don't know how it happens, but the harder I try, the worse luck I have with my friends," a young man said to a friend not long ago. "Why, I've gone to a poet's house with poetic sentiments and I've left it with unkind things over asked.

"Yesterday I thought I'd know to write really charming verse, but it is only verse, and he knows it. He seems to do something really fine, you know.

"Well a short while ago he was assaulted here and showed me a poetry little poem he called earth last night, and I asked him if he had sent it to a magazine.

"No, I core it up," he said. I thought that was foolish, and I said: "Can it be, Charles? Why that was the cleverest thing I ever knew you to do. And do you know, he seemed to get offended and I can't to save my life see why. Can you?"

Martyr.

The multimillionaire was in great sorrow of a kind that would generally be considered to the rich.

"Why, what's the matter, old chap? Nothing but money, is it not a pin-hole?"

"You" replied the tugger at the gate and I call it capital punishment—my son drives a four-in-hand and does a Bayes name."

The multimillionaire shook his head.

"Why, I'm publicity private, when a man is condemned to capital punishment he immediately dematerializes it, so I can take my chances like a man.

And then he rolled out his $10,000 bank and drove the beggar off the premises.

BELIEFS DIE HARD

OLD SUPERSTITIONS PREVALENT IN GERMANY.

Outlandish Ideas and Practices—Some Remedies for Diseases Grewsome and Others Grotesque—Unique Is Cure for Erysipelas.

Some one has been making an investigation as to the survival of medieval superstitions in Germany, and his discoveries have been reported in the Gesundheits Ingenieur. Zinking All sorts of outlandish ideas and practices were found in active prevalence in the morass lands of the Weser, north of Bremerhaven, in the Lunebourg heath, a forest region between the Elbe and Aller.

In both these districts the touch of a corpse's hand is still regarded as a preventive of many local ills. In the Wesermarsch the practice is to bind recently into the room where the dead person is laid and with the dead hand stroke the affected part. In the Lunebourg heath the application is superstitious, and is a cure for warts and for cramps in the stomach.

Loss sympathetic is the remedy for hernia and applied in the marsh country. On the night of St. John the luminaria day, June 24, the patient must be dragged through the eye of a cleft ash tree. Three men leaning the first name of John must perform the operation, and it must be conducted in dead silence.

Some of the cures depend, on the contrary, upon verbal formulas. Persons suffering from sore eyes, a little wooden bridge over a stream, on every matter in rain-blinds with their manly drainage disease. As the disease in turn must repeat the nursery rhyme:

Sickness on to grasper, alter dat ssen
Bleiben dat wat ik jo ssen wag.

This bit of dialectic German may be translated:

Disease and I went over the bridge
I went on, through fair to the dells.

For erysipelas a fire is lighted and a pitch of salves from it is rubbed on the skin to the accompaniment of a saying to the effect that the salve and the sore went over the Red-sea together; the salve came back, but the sore never again. Numerous other rhymes, supposed to have the force of charms, namely when uttered simultaneously with some action, are quoted. The Lunebourger, for instance, who has warts makes the sign of the cross on the warts while gazing at the crescent moon, saying: "What I see that I sin, what I touch, that decay pass." It rhymes in the German of course.

Sometimes the formula is not spoken. The Wesermarsh folk have a saying which they write on a slip of paper when any one has fever, then they burn the paper. The Lunebourgers have no formula, but they use the same year of birth and birthplace of the sick person in a lonely place three nights running. Other remedies for fever consist in swallowing spiders or dust fled from a church bell.

When a tooth comes out the loser must throw it backward over his head. Their combines tooth-pick for lovers. Birds are used in the cure of many diseases. For big gallstones of 10 or 20 birds, say, you might as well come here and take George Wilson's job.

"Dr. Tucker Wise, our superintendent told me, traced to cause of consumption, malaria to canaries, and a large aviary was in his opinion the cause of the death of an entire German family of 11 persons."—Chicago Chronicle.

Animal Born Only to Die.

The instances of animal death in the animal world are conspicuous, in comparison with those in the vegetable world, for their greater variety and complexity. There seems to be ends that the manner of death established itself independent in the different groups of animals.

Fifty years ago an American naturalist, Dana, discovering on the surface of the sea a little animal of an shape is a character that he named it "medusiffa." It is a small crustacean, akin to the cyclops so common in ponds. But while the latter are furnished with all that is necessary to capture and digest their food, the medusiffa has neither apparatus for seizing prey, nor digestive tube. It is simply provided with muscles, nervous system, organs of sense, and sexual organs, it only lacks what is necessary to prolong life by alimentation. The monastrilla is doomed therefore to natural death.—Harper's Magazine.

The Old Man's Fortune.

"Old man Bell has lost his cut off by a railroad."

"You don't say!"

"It's a fact, so he made enough out of it to paint the house, take the mortgage off the home and buy Sue a piano."

"My! but ain't Providence on the side of some folks?"

Things Soldiers Don't Use.

A writer in the Philadelphia Public Ledger informs an amazed public that soldiers never use umbrellas during wars. Another peculiarity of the warrior is that he never uses a bayonet, a bottle of smelling salts or a fan in a bayonet charge.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE FARMER'S ADVANTAGE.

Sells in Best Market Because His Products Are Consumed at Home.

There is a double advantage to the American farmer in the protective policy, which is will not be difficult to see if the results of the application of the protective principle in this country are carefully noted. Not only has American labor been continuously employed at remunerative wages, since the Dingley tariff law went into effect, thus making it possible for him to purchase the products of the farm, but the protection afforded to infant manufacturing industries has enabled them to build and equip, with labor saving machinery, the largest establishments of the kind on earth, thus reducing the cost of manufacture those articles the farmer needs in the lifting of his self until they can be sent at less price than ever before. This double advantage means that the farmer receives the highest possible prices for the product of his fields, by reason of the splendid home market afforded him, and at the same time is able to purchase his implements, wagons and buggies at lower prices than he could during the days before the application of the protective policy had secured such vendors to the industrial world.

In view of these conditions, the existence of which none will deny, it is passing strange that any intelligent American farmer would think for a moment of returning to the dark days of a revenue tariff. Mr Bryan talks long and fondly of the evils of the protective policy, but mere eloquence can count for any little in the face of demonstrated facts. The average farmer has a distinct memory of the days when Mr. Bryan's party was in power in both branches of the government and made an onslaught on the protective tariff principle. He remembers that what he had to sell went at prices as low as to scarcely cover the cost of production, leaving no margin for profit. It is but natural for him to compare those days with the days of prosperity since then, and it would be very foolish in him, with the experience behind, to go back to led into so gigantic a mistake as to vote for free trade by the simple eloquence of a musical voice.

Mr. Bryan, of course, like a major, of all free trade orators, who are so able to explain the marvelous prosperity of the country under the operation of the Dingley law, omissions in his rhetorical eulogy the trusts, declaring that the tariff is the mother of them. This sort of argument, however, will not deceive the intelligent voter. In England, where they have a revenue tariff, but such a tariff as Mr. Bryan professes to want, they have greatly early as many trusts as we have in this country, the difference, if any, there be, being in the fact that we have more form the paper. The Lincoln lawyers have no formula, but they wage his position on political questions tends to lessen American employment and wages. It would also limit American opportunities for the poor man, which was Mr Bryan's condition ten years ago, when, with a great flap of promotion, he was placed at the head of one of the leading parties and gulped, as by some magical stroke, a place in the attention of the world. Such an event could happen nowhere except in this great Republic, now its most prominent one under the policies of the party which Mr. Bryan seeks to defeat, though its control for nearly two years has been marked by immense strides forward and by highly important legislation in behalf of a fair deal for all the people.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Perplexing Reversal.

What are the free traders and "progressive" tariff revisionists going to do about this case? A steel making concern in Pennsylvania has contracted to supply the Italian government with $1,000,000 worth of armor plate at $140 per ton more than the United States government has to pay for the same article. The reversal of the alleged rule of selling abroad cheaper than at home is troublesome and perplexing to all "reformers." If only it had been the other way! The truth of the matter would undoubtedly be found to be, if all export invoices were open to publicity, that a very large proportion of goods sold abroad by American producers are sold at higher than home prices and that the general average would show that foreigners are not favored with our rates. It is additionally interesting that the American armor plate concern, even at $140 a ton over the American price, was able to get the Italian contract away from all European competitors.

Many Measures Appropriated than at Any Previous Session—Important Work Accomplished Includes Much that Is of Interest.

Washington correspondence.

With a record of gigantic unfinished business to the public, congress has closed the work of the second session which ended formally at noon on March 4. Here are some of the outstanding features of the work of the 59th ninth congress.

Congress has made appropriations in the aggregate of $2,000,000,000 or more.

Congress has not passed a single bill for the relief of any of the great industrial interests of the country.

Congress has passed the most drastic railroad rate regulation bill that has been before any legislative body in the history of the country.

Congress has not passed the Philippine tariff bill.

Congress has not passed the Panama canal appropriation bill.

Congress has not passed the Alaska railroad bill.

Congress has not passed the bill for the relief of the Indian tribes.

Congress has not passed the bill for the reorganization of the Indian service.

Agricultural Districts Are Suffering from Lack of Hands—Many Thousand Workers Need Employment to Be Taught Country Work.

The development and commercialization of California's agricultural industry is now in full swing, and the demand for men and teams to do the work is more than the supply. Thousands of men have been drawn to the Sunny State and will be drawn there by the gold and silver mines, but there is a great demand for workers on the farms and in the orchards, and the demand will be met only by the importation of men from other states. The Sacramento Bee, the leading newspaper of the capital city, says:

"The demand for men and teams is known to all those who are familiar with the work of the Associated Farmers of California, and the Associated Farmers have been doing all in their power to meet the demand. The Associated Farmers have been in close touch with the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Agriculture has been in close touch with the Associated Farmers. WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

The casting of a vote on election day is of more importance and value in its contribution to the influence that sustain and strengthen a government by the people than the preparation of many years on theoretic reforms. The hand that casts the vote is the hand that rules the country.

• • •

This election on justice of the supreme court, regents of the University, members of the state board of education, and county commissioners of schools in every county in the state, all for terms of four years and longer, make the duty and privilege of the voter of Michigan on the coming first day of April of unusual importance.

• • •

Michigan's unique standing and unequaled reputation among the other states of the union is due more to its educational institutions, to its school system and to its supreme court, than to any of its many important lines of material products. These are the interests especially to be served through the coming state election, to be held Monday, April 1st. Every republican vote in the state should be cast on that day, not less as a compliment to the dignity and value of the offices to be filled than as a practical preparation for next year's presidential campaign.

• • •

One of the most important political contests in American history will be the presidential campaign of next year and its precedents. It looks promises to include questions that will lead to determination by the people as to whether or not the practical purpose of our national government shall be radically changed. There will be safety and value to all the important prospective business movements of the present year in having it known long in advance just where our own state will stand on these questions. Every republican vote at the coming spring election will be a recorded pledge of safety and sanity to nation at efforts and for business conditions as we now so happily have them.

• • •

The republicans of Michigan will be pleased to learn that the democratic state convention held at Flint last week was one of the largest and most successful spring conventions that party has had in a number of years. It is well recognized by republicans that the existence of an aggressive, unified, principle representing democratic party is far more desirable from every point of view than the continuance of the condition of that party as it has been through recent years. No legitimate interests in Michigan will suffer through the existence of two nearly evenly divided political parties, if only it shall be true that both parties represent the honest convictions and sincere principles of their members.

New Light Houses.

In the excitement attendant on the passage of the river and harbor bill and the efforts to obtain one on the South Shoal near Frankfort, some minor, but important items for which appropriations were made were overlooked by the Washington correspondents. Thus items were for the construction of several lighthouses.

One of these will be erected on White Shoals, straits of Mackinaw at a cost of $40,000. When completed it will be one of the costliest lighthouses on the lakes, but it is a necessity to vessel men. The station will also be equipped with fog signals.

An appropriation of $50,000 for a lighthouse on the northern end of North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan, was also secured. This will mark the dangerous shoal at that point.

Work on the various improvements will begin as soon as the money becomes available.

The main part of the boat is over 20 years old and it is said that the timbers in her hull are still sound. The boat will be altered considerably and made so that she will be fit for many more years of service. She is used considerably as a tug and in carrying small loads.

The following dispatch from Petoskey, is taken from the Grand Rapids Herald of Monday: Several capitalists have been in this vicinity the past week examining right of way that was granted the proposed Traverse City, Alpena & Western railway several years ago. It is supposed they are working in connection with the Manistee & Northeastern road with a view of getting to a Lake Michigan port. They claim they are prepared to start construction as soon as the weather permits. They have asked for a franchise for a depot site here."

DEATH OF CAPT. WM. HULME.

The Passing Away of a Good Man and a Relic of the Old School

Capt. Wm Hulme Sr., died at his home in this city on Saturday afternoon last, passing from earth peacefully and painlessly, after a long illness, of paralysis.

The death of Capt Hulme takes another from the ranks of that class of "ancient mariners" who spent their lives on ocean and lake, and who made their progress from the fore yard and forecastle to the quarter deck through years of strenuous duty in days that tried men's souls, testing their bodies to privation and hardship and their hearts to danger and disaster.

William Hulme was born in Cheshire, England in 1824. During his boyhood days he worked in cotton factories. At the age of 15 he went to sea, making voyages to China, the south seas, and the Indian ocean. In 1853 he made a voyage to Australia, remaining there for several years. He was one of a party that made the first survey for thirty five hundred miles up the Murray River. Later he spent some time in the gold fields of Australia, and visited Tasmania and New Zealand.

In 1858 he returned to the sea, and also to England. In 1860 he came to America and sailed the lakes for a time, taking up a home steadily in Lelanau county, this state in 1862. In 1869 he was married to Esther Ann Mayall a native of Yorkshire, England. To this union six children were born, two dying in infancy, the remaining four now living to and about Charlevoix—Mrs. Arthur Beattie, of Muskegon, Mrs. M. K. Chew, of Hayes; and William and Herbert, of this city.

Capt. Hulme, during his residence in Lelanau county, sailed the lakes during the season of navigation and was interested in the vessel business up to the time of his death. He came to Charlevoix in 1885, as owner and master of the schooner Peoria, which he sailed for several years with his sons as mates. About five years ago, the infirmities of age beginning to tell upon him, he surrendered the command of the schooner to his son William and has since lived quietly.

Few men have seen more of the world, or had more shipbreakth "escapes" than has Capt. Hulme. He has breasted many an ocean gale, been shipwrecked, and has drifted on shortened rations with a mutinous crew and a tyrant captain, but never yet, on sea or land, has he departed from the pathway of honest manhood and sterling integrity. No greater heart ever beat on the breast of man.

The funeral was from the house Tuesday afternoon under the auspices of Round Lake Lodge 292, of which he was an honored member.

Rev. E. A. Cook, formerly Capt Hulme's pastor here, but now pastor at Durand, preached the funeral services.

Courtenay Morgan.

The management of the Charlevoix Theatre takes pleasure in announcing the appearance of the distinguished artist, Miss Courtenay Morgan, on the evening of March 29. On this occasion Miss Morgan will present, Madam Sarah Bernhardt's remarkably stirring and beautiful drama "A Woman of Mystery."

This is one of the strongest romantic dramas ever staged and was produced by Madam Bernhardt for 300 nights at the Renaissance Theatre, Paris.

It is of intense interest and delicately shaded. Between suicidal and rippling fountain with its pretty love scenes in the first act and the dark and sombre convent with its accompaniment of supple emotion, in the fourth act, there is wide divergence of dramatic treatment, giving Miss Morgan ample opportunity to display the histrionic powers of which she is so singularly endowed.

Central Lake had a fire Monday night, that destroyed a saloon, a store building and a laundry.

Death of Alexander Stewart.

Alexander Stewart died at his home in this city Saturday last, after a long illness, of paralysis. The funeral was from the house Monday afternoon, Rev. Ira Wright officiating.

Mr. Stewart was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, June 27, 1829. When a child he came with his parents to Canada. In 1839 he was married to Margaret Sherman. To them were born two children, Edward A. Stewart, and Mrs. W. J. Stevenson, who both now reside in this city.

He came to Charlevoix in 1884, where he has since continuously resided. He came of sturdy Scotch ancestry. Reared in a religious atmosphere he early learned to love and reverence sacred things. He united with the M. E. church of Charlevoix in 1887, and to the hour of his death was a faithful Christian.

Mr Stewart was a kind father, loving husband and honorable citizen. Those who knew him best esteemed him most highly. For many years he and his faithful wife shared the joys and sorrows of wedded life.

Death of Rev. B. H. Whitman.

The sad news was received here Sunday of the death of Rev. B. H. Whitman, at his farm home, near Deer Lake, this county.

Rev. Mr. Whitman was for many years an active member of the Michigan Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, and held charges in various parts of the Conference district. About twenty years ago he served four years as pastor at Charlevoix, and was noted for his piety and earnestness. On leaving here he was in poor health, and, having bought a farm in Hayes township, he moved there, where he remained for several years.

He returned to the ministry for a short time, but finally sold his farm in this county, moving to Illinois, Antrim county, where for some time he kept a store. About three years ago he bought and moved to the farm where he died.

In his younger days he was a farmer near Cobbwater, where he was converted, and where he recognized a call to enter the ministry. He was an earnest and forceful preacher, and always made many friends wherever he was sent.

How to Restock the Lake with Fish.

From the Detroit Tribune

The lake game warden in his annual report makes the usual moan over the rapid disappearance of the best fishes from the great lakes, and recommends that a rigid closed season be enforced during the spawning period. This happens every year—that is to say, the moan and some sort of recommendation of some sort of restriction on commercial fishing, but the depletion of the lakes goes on just the same, and probably will continue until commercial fishing is no longer profitable. Every remedy imaginable has been tried. All sorts of prohibitive provisions have been made as to the size of the mesh of the nets, closed seasons have been established, certain methods of fishing have been prohibited altogether and fry have been planted by the million, but all in vain, the process of depletion goes on. Lake Erie, which was once the chief source of whitefish, is now a herring and carp pond; hundreds of miles of nets were pulled out of the south side of Lake Superior last season because they did not catch fish, and the whitefishing in Lake Michigan and Huron barely compensates for the expense, and even the lake herring show signs of failing off. In Georgian bay alone of all the waters of the great lakes the fish seem to be still abundant.

Of course, statistics can be appealed to against this statement. The total catch may be nearly as great as ever, but the official statistics do not tell us how many feet of net are required to catch a given number of fish as compared with a few years ago. If enough nets are used the total catch may be kept up for years—and continued until there is not a fish left in the lakes.

What has become of the fish? Men set this question while they are in the very act that answers it. They have been caught and eaten. No prohibitions regarding closed seasons, no limitations as to the size, no measures whatever which human ingenuity can devise can prevent the fish in the lakes or prevent their early extinction, while the number of people who eat them, and who can afford to pay for them, increase so rapidly. Fish propagate with marvelous fecundity, but human stomachs to which they are accessible increase more rapidly. People overlook the most obvious facts right under their noses, and wonder all over for causes which might be found at the first step. Forty years ago, there were probably not more than half a million people to whose tables a fresh whitefish or trout could be economically delivered. Today there are nearly sixty times. Refrigerator cars and rapid express trains now carry lake fish to Denver and further. Formerly they could not be sent further than a few miles from the water in which they were caught.

A closed season during the spawning period will not halt the fish. The balance of the year will be quite sufficient to take the lakes from end to end. Canada has just given an example of the only effective method of dealing with the subject. Twenty-five years ago, when commercial fishing began in the lakes of Manitoba, there waters were alive with fish, white and trout. In many parts of those lakes now it has become unprofitable to set nets. The Canadian government has adopted drastic measures. Manitoba lake has been closed altogether against commercial fishing, and three quarters of Winnipeg lake to be closed soon. In five years at the very most, those waters will again swarm with fish as they did before the waste man began his wholesale dragging of them. The only way to restock our lakes is to stop fishing altogether for a period long enough to permit nature restock them.

Steamboat Inspectors Ordered to Enforce Law on Passenger Vessels.

Supervising Inspector Uhler is sending out circular letters to all local steamboat inspectors advising them that all sea and great lakes passenger vessels must observe the rule regarding apparatus for launching from in the event of fire, and to the letter that it has been brought to the attention of his office that some inspectors have failed to enforce the rule which follows:

"Every seagoing vessel carrying passengers, and every such vessel navigating any of the northern or northwestern lakes, shall have the lifeboats required, by law, provided with suitable local disengaging apparatus so arranged as to allow such boats to be safely launched whichever side they happen to capsize, and so as to allow such disengaging apparatus to be operated by one person, disengaging both ends of the boat simultaneously from the tackles by which it may be lowered into the waters."

Also board of supervising inspectors has adopted a form of general rules for this purpose and the names of the inspectors of each are in the hands of the local inspectors.

The letter states that it is expected without further orders that the local inspectors will carry out the provisions of the law and see that the requirement is complied with by the owners and masters of such vessels as the law requires.

At the present time few, if any, steamers of the great lakes are equipped with the device the law requires.

The village of Ontsuse can sell its bonds and proceed to the installation of a system of water works in connection with the electric lighting plant—at least Judge Shepard of the Cheboygan circuit decides it can. The village voted June 18, last to bond for $15,000 for a municipal water works system, also $6,000 to raise and strengthen the dam and enlarge the power house and to the accumulation of the pumping apparatus. Henry Hilbardt, head of the private system, claim wrongs, illegal, because from Judge Mayne a few days later a temporary injunction restraining the village from selling bonds for the water works, irregularities in the election were alleged. An application to the Supreme court for a writ of mandamus to compel the canvassing of the election was unsuccessful, the court considering the injunction purely a discretionary writ with the circuit judge and declining to interfere. The village asked for a change of venue and took the case into the Cheboygan circuit. It was tried the last of January at Petoskey before Judge Shepard of Cheboygan and the decision was rendered Saturday by order of the village.

DOOMED.

"In making my claim for the property, she said, I could carry it under my Homestead, without being at any expense or trouble."

"I'm quite willing and glad to do everything in my power," he assented, thinking. "But Rosamond, if you marry me, I shall want to live with you—you and I and Mrs. Hunter. I don't want to be parted from my little wife, and I don't think it would be fair to ask you to live in a house where I was not welcome."

"Mrs. Hunter will be very glad to have me, I know, and I shall be happy to have her with us. I shall want her to be my chaperon, you know. I want a young married woman to live with us, and she is the nicest I know. Mrs. Hunter is a lady, and she is very fond of me. I shan't be happy without her, and I don't mean to be."

"Well, I don't mind, if you like her so much," he said, reluctantly. "We have you settled so nicely, I don't like to disturb you."

"Oh, I don't mind being disturbed, if it means to be with you, Hubert," she said, pensively.

"Mrs. Hunter is a good deal more than a chaperon, Rosamond. She knows everything about me, and she knows I love you. I want a young married woman to live with us, and she is the nicest I know. Mrs. Hunter is a lady, and she is very fond of me. I don't mean to be parted from her."

"Well, I don't mind, if you like her so much," he repeated, with a sigh. "I wish we could be married at once, Rosamond. I want you so badly. I want to have you with me, and I want to be with you myself. I want a young married woman to live with us, and she is the nicest I know. Mrs. Hunter is a lady, and she is very fond of me. I don't mean to be parted from her."

"Hubert, you are laughing at me!" she cried, petulantly. "Why have you written so many times?"

"To see your dear face, of course," he answered, in a low tone meant for her ear alone. "I want to look at you, Rosamond, I want to see your dear face."

Mrs. Hunter, who was standing near, looked curiously at the lovers as they parted, and wondered what they had been talking about.

"Mrs. Hunter, Rosamond, I want you to be my chaperon," he said, presently. "We have you settled so nicely, I don't like to disturb you."

"Oh, I don't mind being disturbed, if it means to be with you, Hubert," she said, pensively.

"Mrs. Hunter, Rosamond, I want you to be my chaperon," he repeated, for the third time, with a sigh. "

GREAT OLD ENGLISH MANSION.

Rudy Castle Has Figured In History Since Fourteenth Century.

Rudy is one of the finest elizabethan mansions in England, and seemed that a part of the south front is as sound now as when it was first built. It was built by John de Neville of the end of the fourteenth century, and was the home of the Nevilles until they went to Flodden with the "Flowing of the Bonny."

Several original fireplaces in the house of Neville and panels in the wood had to be taken out to be sent to the museums of the world and put in central and odd places for twenty-one and upwards. Charles I. lodged at Rudy on his way to Oxford, and when he finally left, Cromwell's soldiers ransacked the place in a fashion of which the place showed the effects for years afterwards.

A substantial fortune is likely to the Rudy carriage, was which passed through the lower hall. It was a present this on the part of the former owner of Rudy to wish to drive his coach and four right through the gate and stand in the middle of the hall but it is not that in order to enable it to be placed there because the hallways are so spacious that we know. Some of the tenants of the estates have from father to son their family from the time of the Nevilles, and one family possesses an original lease in Latin dating from the reign of Richard VI.

Hand-Made Island.

In the lake of Neuchatel there was seen in a new land made island. The floral have gone to for improvements on a floral scale and have to a small, cabins or cottages. The republican candidates for regents of the University, Junius E. Beal and Frank H. Leland, are possessors of unusual qualifications for membership on the board which directs and controls Michigan's leading educational institution. They are graduates of the University and they are experienced in the details of institution affairs. It will be to them a matter of great personal pride to be connected in a directing way with the great school to which they owe so much, and it will be their duty and their privilege as well to guard fully the interests of the state in the business movements of that institution. Junius E. Beal and Frank H. Leland as regents of the University will be the right men in the right place.

Letter to H. S. Martin.

Chicago, Ill.
March 1, 1905.

Dear sir: The Trustees of the Fire Company, Gobleville, Mich., agree that if we will give 75 cents a gallon more for Dewitas, and no smoke. Two other parties apply for the work and take 125 gallons of their paint to cover the buildings.

Paint agreed put at at 1.25 or less. It takes 115.

We saved them 35 gallons of paint and painting costs $1 to $2 a gallon, as the painting costs two or three times as much as the paint; less 25 cents a gallon on 115 gallons. Say $28.75.

That's how to count the cost of paint. The cost of putting it on is $1 to $4 a gallon. You see what that means. Yours truly,

I often wonder if mothers give this a thought when ordering Rug orders away through agents that possibly they are bringing into the home terrific germs to take away loved ones. More Inspector Business.

By recent ruling of Inspector General Usher second mates cannot under any circumstances be examined for license as masters. Only such men having first class pilot's licenses, and who have served one year as such, generally known as river masts, are eligible for examination as masters. Several supervising inspectors differed in their interpretation of rule V, section 27, of the general rules and regulations governing examinations and inspections. Mr. Usher's decision determines the matter for all time. In this letter the inspector general says:

"A person with license as second mate or second pilot cannot under any circumstance be examined for master's license, and only a person holding a license as first class pilot or chief mate, within the three years next preceding the application for license can be examined for master's license of lake, bay and sound steamers.

"Any person who has served three years as master of sail vessels on the Great Lakes is eligible for examination for master's license of steam vessels on the great lakes or other inland waters.

"Masters of barge consorts on the great lakes, who have had three years actual experience as such and who have been licensed as first class pilots for one year or more may be examined and licensed as masters of steam vessels on the Great Lakes and other inland waters, if found qualified."

A Sad Misfortune.

Robert J. McNeill has very low at his home in this city, as the result of the amputation of his one remaining foot on Tuesday morning.

Nearly three years ago Mr. McNeill was so badly afflicted with blood poisoning that his left leg was amputated below the knee. The disease recurring, a second amputation was made necessary on the same leg. This was in a Chicago hospital.

He was brought home, and his family and friends fondly hoped for his recovery. But symptoms of paralysis began to show themselves, and he has since had very poor health.

Recently a sore appeared on his remaining foot, which rapidly grew worse, and it soon became evident that the malignant infection had remained in his system. The doctors decided that amputation was necessary, and on Tuesday morning the foot was taken off at the ankle.

Mr. McNeill rallied fairly well from the anaesthetic, but the worst is feared.

WANTED.—An apprentice girl at Mrs. Emery's Millinery Store.

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS.

Quite a sad and regrettable accident occurred on the logging road last week, in which one man lost his life and several others were injured, but not seriously. Nine belonging in a heavy train of logs, with both locomotives attached, and running along at about 24 miles an hour, the head engine struck something which caused it to jump the track, bringing the other engine with it, piling up ten cars of logs. This means a heavy loss to the lumber Co., as one locomotive was completely demolished, and it will take some time to repair the others.

The water is inside of the sunken point, and it will only be question of a few days when a boat can enter the harbor.

The remains of Amelie Gaudet who was killed in the wreck last week were brought by stage to Cross Village where they were taken to her home in Sutons Bay.

H. C. Little returned from Manistee where he had gone to attend the funeral of his brother.

A Mining made a trip to Cross Village last week.

Raymond McDonald is just recovering from an attack of "diphtheria."

Fred Sonnenburgh and Will Gribbs returned from Grand Haven with captains and engineers license.

Miss Anna Lafentere went to Petoskey last week.

At the caucus held in each township last week, all the old officers were placed in nomination again.

Local News.

—Reserved seat sale now on at Fletcher's for "A Woman of Mystery."

—The first thunder storm of the year came Saturday, and it was a very boisterous one accompanied by a violent fall of hail.

—The schooner Oliver Mitchell, Capt. Wm. Hallan, is chartered for Van Patten lumber to Erie, first trip, and is fitting out.

—Geo. W. Priest has begun operations on the enlargement and improvement of his residence on the north side.

—E. A. Burnett, who has been lumbering at Cross Village, was home over Sunday. He has wound up operations there, but has three winter more of lumbering there.

—The ladies of the Eastern Star will give a maple sugar social at Coldwater's cottage restaurant on Saturday of this week, from 4 to 10 p. m. Price, 15 cents. Go in and sweeten up.

—H. V. Iffenburg writes that he has arrived at Pierce, Idaho, after a trip of fifty miles over land, half the way on horseback and half in a buckboard. Hiram reports himself as well and hearty.

—Mr. Stewart of the U. S. hatchery, reports that trout eggs began to hatch saturday, and are now coming out rapidly. Five million of trout are to be hatched and thirty millions of whitefish eggs are expected this week.

—The advertisement of Graphos & Moutsatson last week contained an error that was embarrassing, and calls for correction in this column. In the last line of the ice cream list, the price should be 10 cents instead of 5 cents.

—Advices from Florida state that Frank Hines and Cal. Price are on a 300 mile cruise to Miami, in a gasoline launch. Miami is about the jumping off place, and is on the edge of the everglades.

—In the case of Eaglston vs. the Charlevoix Lumber Co., last Thursday, in circuit court, the jury returned a verdict of no cause of action. The suit was for $20,000 damages for the loss of their son, Art Eaglston by falling into the hot water of the log pit.

—No greater dramatic event has been booked for the Charlevoix Theater than Miss Courtenay Morgan, in "A Woman of Mystery." This great play is to be presented on Friday evening of this week, and the efforts of the theater management to produce only good productions should be endorsed by our people by a full house.

—The Episcopal church choir satisfied by other local talent, have begun rehearsals of the opera of "Pinafore" to be produced at the opera house April 20th. The famous production of Gilbert & Sullivan, is one of the greatest in the list of light operas, and has never ceased to be popular. The production will be for the benefit of the Episcopal church. The best of Charlevoix musical talent will take part, not only in the cast but in the orchestra.

—Round Lake is entirely free of ice.

—A flock of wild geese were seen on Pine Lake several times last week.

—The life saving station will be opened at midnight on Saturday of this week.

—Miss Hoffa Smith teacher in the Owosso high school is spending this week at her home in this city.

—Ed. L. McNeill, of Chicago, is here on account of the serious illness of his father, H. J. McNeill.

—Alex. Ross Jr., of Kalamazoo, was here over Sunday, visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Ross.

—Miss Courtenay Morgan, in "A Woman of Mystery" at the Charlevoix Theater Friday evening of this week.

—The fishbins are here. The robbin does not make a summer, but one lady saw six in her yard on Park avenue Saturday.

—Miss Sarah Levinson returned Tuesday from St. Louis, where she has been several weeks visiting her sister, Mrs Minnie Goldman.

—J. S. Baker began Monday evening for the erection of a new cottage on the property known as the Burns place, opposite the Beach Hotel, of which it will practically be an annex.

—Mrs. Nicholas Frazier, a sister, and Mr. Frank Collins, a brother of the late Mrs. Barrett, were here to attend the funeral. Both are from Cleveland.

—The Sunshine Evangelist will begin a series of 10 days meeting in the Methodist church on Sunday. He comes to our city highly recommended. You want to hear him.

—Capt. I. E. Welch, of Cheboygan, is here to take the tug Martin, which he recently purchased. The Martin is having considerable work done on her hull and boiler at Washburn's slip yard. The Martin will be used at Munising in towing pulp wood.

—Chicago vesselmen say that never before in the history of lake trade has the shipping outlook been so favorable as the opening of this season. There will be plenty of cargoes for all, notwithstanding new ships have been coming from the shipyards in unprecedented numbers.

—Inspectors Armstrong and Stripp removed cataract from the eyes of Mrs. Kuhn, a sister of J. A. Cameron, one day last week. Mrs. Kuhn has not been able to distinguish anything for twenty years, and, following the operation, she could see those who were attending her with distinctness. After some further treatment it is thought that her sight will be entirely restored.

—Cadillac papers speak in terms of highest praise of the work of Capt. Newberry, in command of the Salvation Army forces there. In a recent meeting there were thirteen converts. One of them, of Capt. Newberry's success, slide from his own earnestness, is the fact that the best people of Cadillac encourage and aid him. The Captain is a Charlevoix convert.

—Capt. Sam Rose, of this city, has bought the steamer Gordon, at South Haven, and left yesterday to fit her out and bring her here. She will be used in carrying freight for the Boyne City Tanning Co. and the Boyne City Dry Produces Co. and Capt. Sam will sail her. She is 103 feet long and 23 feet beam, and has a cabin for passengers.

—Charlevoix has not been favored with a really first class dramatic attraction the past winter. Now manager Bridge has succeeded in booking for Friday evening of this week, Miss Courtenay Morgan and a talented company, in "A Woman of Mystery." The play is one of the best, having been presented by Sarah Bernardt for more than 300 nights in Paris. It is really a great attraction, and the Charlevoix Theater management is to be congratulated.

—Capt. T. D. Walker, commander of the revenue cutter Tuscarora, at Milwaukee, believes that this year all revenue cutters on the Great Lakes will go into service considerably earlier than a year ago. The season of 1903 the revenue cutters did not go into commission until July 1, on account of the shortage of the insurance funds to maintain them. This year the appropriation available for this branch of the lake marine is larger and ready at any time, and therefore the boats will go into service not long after the opening of navigation. They are needed on the Great Lakes for patrol duty and maintaining the rights of the government in the various harbors and along the shores of the waters.

—B. W. Miller, the pioneer dealer, has a new ad. in this issue.

—The Card parties at St. Mary's school house will begin April 5th, the same committee being in charge.

—Harker Kirby, who has been at the Ferris Institute at Big Rapids, since the first of January, is home for the summer.

—Navigation has opened here Monday by the left tugs, when the Dalton, and Little Mattie went out and set their nets, returning safely. The Parquette went out the same day, and all tugs of the fleet are now in commission. The ice seems to be easily broken up, and cannot seriously obstruct operations from this port.

—The Historical Society will meet Friday evening of this week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Bedford, Park Ave. Programme as follows. Piano Solo, Pearl Emery; Current Events, Mrs. Henry Cooper; Reading, Mrs. John Hunter; Vocal Solo, Mrs. S. A. Manning. Interlude. Clarinet Solo, Lawrence Ackert; Paper, Prof. W. H. Woodley; Vocal Solo, Harker Kirby.

—Chas. Hamlin, eldest son of the late L. C. Hamlin and brother of Arthur Hamlin, of this city, died at Carson City, Mich. Saturday. Deceased was a veteran of the civil war, and for sixteen years was a sergeant in the regular army. He was commander of Carson City Post G. A. R., at the time of his death. He was well known by the older settlers, and was here on a visit last summer.

—Andrew Melster, a batchelor of thirty, living in Bay township, was adjudged insane in probate court here Tuesday, and sent to the Traverse city asylum. Melster was arrested near Petoskey last week, after he had assaulted and badly injured a woman whom he met on the road. He had threatened to kill several, and was restrained with difficulty. He was brought here with the above result.

FEARS FOR SAFETY.

Beaver Island Mail Carriers Thought to Be in Grave Danger.

Willie Gibbins and Raymond McDonald left St James at six o'clock Monday morning for Cross Village on a mail trip. The conveyance was a span of horses and sleigh.

Monday night Cross Village reported that they had not arrived, and that there was a broad expanse of water all along that shore. Beaver Island reports by cable that they have not returned, and that the ice in the channel between there and Garden Island has broken up, rendering it impossible for them to get back.

St. James people have hopes that they returned to Hog Island, and are there waiting to get home. Hog Island is the nearest island in the group that is traversed by the carriers on their way to Cross Village. There is a lumber camp on the island, and a number of Indian families.

The situation is one that gives Beaver Island people very much concern.

LATER.

Just as we go to press information comes that the mail carriers are on Garden Island, where they will probably remain until taken off by a boat. They made an effort to get to St. James in a boat but failed. They then built a log fire on the beach, and there men being seen near it, the Islanders are sure that the carriers are safe, and took this means to make it known.

The Spasm is Over.

Dan Shannon the "evangelist" is round up his work here Sunday. At the opera house Sunday morning he paid his compliments to the preachers. The fact that he has been here more than two weeks since the SENTINEL's first reference to him, and made no answer until his last day here is significant.

Dan said, in his "sermon" Sunday afternoon, that one of the two articles in the SENTINEL was not written by the editor, but that he knew who wrote it. Now, in excuse an editor of appropriating the work of another is equivalent to calling him a thief. Dan has gone, but if he left any information behind him bearing on that statement, and any of his friends will substantiate it, we will pay the Baptist church $5 for it.

Not a line has appeared in this paper concerning Dan that was not written by the editor. We say it not in a vainglorious spirit, but to elucidate the manifest truth that Dan don't know what he is talking about. If he would make such a deliberate misstatement as this, what credence can be any of his statements. But why should he wait until almost the day of his departure before getting back at the editor? There can be but one answer—Dan is a coward, as well as a fakir. Well, Dan has gone, and Charlevoix, smarting in sin, is left to her fate. Dan took about $700 of good Charlevoix money with him, and has left a bad impression in return for the money. It may be that the good Lord works all sorts of men and means to accomplish his purposes, and if Dan put anyone in the right path we are glad; but we cannot shake off the conviction that he has done more harm than good.

We cannot believe that vituperative attacks upon other denominations than his own; personal abuse of people in his audiences who are obviously forbidden to "talk back," the use of slang and coarse language in a place dedicated to the worship of God; the consignment of the mother who bore him to the torments of the damned; and praying sinners upon those who refuse to respond to his hypnotic efforts, is not calculated to inspire thinking people with confidence in either the intelligence or sincerity of the speaker. Well, good bye, Dan. We have called your attention to your faults, and we claim as good a right to do so as you, a stranger, have to abuse the people of this community.

REPUBLICAN CITY TICKET

The City Convention Tuesday Night Did Good Work.

At the republican city convention Tuesday night the following excellent ticket was placed in nomination.

Mayor Dr. R. B. Armstrong.
Clerk—H. C. Cooper.
Treasurer—H. W. Miller.
Justice—E. H. Green.
The ward caucuses made the following nominations.

First Ward—Supervisor, W. E. Hampton; Alderman, O. E. Wilber.

Second Ward—Supervisor, Harrison Bedford; alderman, F. E. Hines.

Third Ward—Supervisor, Louis Dykema; Alderman, E. R. Ward.

Dr. Armstrong, the nominee for Mayor, is popular, honest and capable, and will make an excellent mayor. The other nominations are all good ones, and there is no good reason why it should not be elected from top to bottom, if republicans do their duty.

Mr. Shanahan Makes a Statement. Not a Candidate for City Attorney.

To the Voters of Charlevoix:

It has come to my knowledge that supporters of Mayor Inflinger are already circulating the report that I am an aspirant for the position of City Attorney, and that Mr. Armstrong has promised to appoint me if he is elected Mayor. While the voters who are to choose a Mayor, may, or may not, attach weight to the fact that City Attorney, I do not wish to leave any possible excuse for Mayor Inflinger supporting to urge his election, and for this reason I make this statement, and I make it as emphatically as I can.

I am not a candidate for the appointment as City Attorney. I have never asked Dr. Armstrong to be appointed. I have never suggested or hinted to his friends that I would take the position if he should offer it to me. I would not, under any circumstances, accept the position, knowing as I do the position of assistant attorney for the R. M. R. R. Co. and so, once and for all, I wish it understood once thoroughly, that those who have asserted, or continue to assert, that I am to be City Attorney, are misled, or will see, for themselves, that I am not only making the fight for what appears to be right, but I am also making the fight for what I believe to be the best interests of the city, and our people as a whole as I see it.

Thanking the friends who have helped me with the nomination, and thanking in advance those who may see fit to honor me with their votes for this honorable position, I am,

Very sincerely,
H. R. ARMSTRONG.

Township Nominations.

Following are the nominations in the townships in this end of the county:

Charlevoix—Supervisor, Ava Smith; clerk, Alex McSwain; treasurer, Albert Hewson; school inspector, John E. Robinson; board of review, John Antrim; justices, Sim Baker, George Hanson, Wm. McLean.

So. James—Supervisor, W. J. Gallagher, clerk; D. E. McDonald, treasurer, James Dunlevy; highway commissioner, John Floyd.

Peaine—Supervisor, W. D. Gallagher; clerk, Phil. C. Gallagher; treasurer, John C. Gallagher; commissioner, Francis McGafferty.

Marion—Supervisor, James H. Adams; clerk, Wm. Suhay; treasurer, Robert Gregory; commissioner, Edmund Shapton; board review, Nat Burns; justice, Geo. Megghee; school inspector, Josephine Ingalls.

Hayes,—Supervisor, Frank G. Burnett; clerk, A. B. Chew, treasurer, E. H. Bagger; commissioner, Hiram Webster; justice, A. E. Struthers; board review, Jr. School Inspector, I. H. Scott.

Eveline—Supervisor, Malcolm A. McDonald; clerk, Joseph W. Flanders; treasurer, John Nason; commissioner, Peter H. Kendall; school inspector, John Dunlop; board review, James H. Nelson; justice, Andrew J. Bours.

Norwood,—Supervisor, John Bugbee; clerk, Harry Pearl; treasurer, James Cutler; commissioner, Joseph Kalebush.

To The Citizens of Charlevoix.

Having been nominated by the republicans of this city for the office of City Clerk, I wish to take this way to say just a word to the voters of my home city.

I did not seek this nomination. I am a very busy man, and I feel that I could not well spare the time to devote to the office. But the republican party has seen fit to choose me as its candidate for Mayor, and I have accepted the honor thus conferred. It is now up to the voters to say if they wish to further ratify that choice, and, which I am free to say, after office. It is due to my friends who have urged my name in this contest, and to the voters of the city, regardless of politics, that they know where I stand. If I am elected, I shall give the office the time it requires, and give the people as good an administration as I possibly can. It is impossible to please everybody, I shall try to do so, but I will do what is right, and what is best for the interests of the city, and our people as a whole as I see it.

Thanking the friends who have helped me with the nomination, and thanking in advance those who may see fit to honor me with their votes for this honorable position, I am,

Very sincerely,
LINCOLN SHANAHAN

"But, my dearest, I've made despair logic. The unfortunate lives are such by heritage, the unfortunate lives are such by choice." "Yes, I know, I know, but do you think, dear, that the sins of parents will bring a child into the world to suffer?" "Heavens! Your wife!" ejaculated Stafford, staggering as though he had received a heavy blow.

"Yes, until a certain time in our affairs is over. I wish the marriage to be kept secret from my father. Hal wished it so, too."

"Is this matter?" Are you sure?" Stafford's scared and pallid face, which was attracting the attention of some passers-by, said evidently such a question. "Yes, a sudden sickness." he said. "Hal is ailing, I fear. A little business and an subject in the hot I can stop taking care. I have some important business." I will drop you a line. Good-bye, Stafford."

And he hurried away, leaving Arthur standing thunderstruck with the pre-mature Mark as he tried to shake off such an one. Meanwhile, the sentence in which Stafford had uttered the news of his marriage made him sick at heart.

"Married to Miss Hunter! Married! Married! Married

Anglicized French.

For this metaphor we have been called "Frenchman" more than it did on a convenient lie it adequately, using the lights "out." And yet the middle classes in England do not seem to know a French and mannerless word at any place it does not mean "out." Out on the sidewalk, out on the sidewalk of the "out" table for dinnerwalk.

Too Much of a Hurry.

There is nothing like being enough even at funerals. An example of this comes from the Black Isle, where an investigation of the reported death of a shoemaker's wife, taken to be very ill, was found to have arisen through her husband having ordered undertaker Perry for her before snatching her, instead of doctor, to her bedside.

Thumbless Workers.

The railway difference between the hand of man and of the monkey are in the thumb. In the human hand the thumb has the opposing power which enables it to grasp the tip of each of any of the other fingers; in the same hand the monkey's thumb is unopposable.

Remarkable Austrian Church.

A novel building place in Austria, called "Church," has found of prayer was an Austrian architect at Vienna, in the suburb of Ottakring (Upper Austria), who is a great amateur of custom architecture. When it was finished the church was taken to pieces and packed in thousands of numbered cases for transportation to Ischwell. At that place it was overnight erected, and then made over to its inhabitants as a gift from the artist.

Rats Gnawed Through Beer Pipe.

Finding it impossible to draw beer from a barrel a barman in a drinking saloon in Bayreuth, remained until the cellar and discovered that a rat had been about to the pipe to celebrate. The beer was covered with hairs, in which the rats were either trap or muzzle or crawling curiosity about.

A Dinner Dilemma.

It was an unusual dilemma in which a minister found himself a few years ago. He had extended an invitation to one who a member of his church, and upon his basis as he might be sure as the identity of the unexpective invitee. At last after much mental anxiety he concluded that the only way was to invite "Mr. A—," and as the proper hour he took off the bell button at his door, was admitted, and found on his key, not darling to ask if that was the house to which he had been invited. Dinner was announced in due time and was heartily enjoyed by the minister, who, since a regular dinner was not forthcoming, requested for his home, including for the occasion so happily solving the dinner problem. The next afternoon the minister chanced to meet Mrs. A. and Mrs. B—, an other of his parishioners, while taking a stroll.

"What happened to your last evening?" inquired Mrs. B—. "We kept the dinner waiting for you an hour longer than the usual time, but you did not arrive."

Then and there the light broke in upon the minister. He had been "invited" to Mrs. B—, but had dined with Mrs. A. He made a complete confession, then an apology, and promised that hereafter he will make every dinner invitation a matter of record.

The Sleeping Baby "Smile."

It is known to all, we see and old is the universal intention about the smile of babies in their sleep. And when they smile, are taken with a smile. The "smile" of the cannon of this smile, which is as unlike as possible to the real smile—the humorous and delightful little dimpled smile of a laugh, appearing first at say age between a fortnight and a month. Yet Darwin mentioneth has considered on calling the sleeping infantine close to Satanism; a smile, and even a smile caused by dreams of angels. And Saint Monica must have, here as in infinitude on this point at any rate, inspired for Saint Augustine, reviewing in his "Confessions" the growth of his own infant reluctance that he had been told of the promise of infant time smiles, "having experience previously to dream." Thackeray echoes St. Monica, for he shows us Amelia giving to her child, "who was smiling in his sleep." No baby ever failed to do this, if it is well.

"It Suits to a T."

The phrase, "it suits to a T," meaning it fits exactly, is no old as the draughtsmen instrument, the "square, or T-rule (described from its resemblance to the letter T), used by mechanics and draftsmen for making angles true and for obtaining perpendiculars. The expression was in common use in the time of Dr. Johnson, who is quoted by Boswell as saying of Wilkes'ism, "You are there I have fitted him to a T."—Sunday Magazine.

HOME VS. THE CITY

THAT IS WHAT THE HOME-TRADE PROBLEM AMOUNTS TO.

WHICH SIDE ARE YOU ON?

If You Are Sending Your Dollars to the Mail Order Houses You Are Battling Against the Home Town.

(Copyrighted, by Alfred C. Clark.)

A far seeing, provident business man does not pursue a policy which is subversive of his best interests. He will not destroy his own business, neither will he jeopardize his business. He will observe the golden rule, not only in theory, but in practice, and its practical observation was never more needed than at the present time. Men dream about the "Golden Age" and yet continue purs a policy which renders the dawn of that Age an impossibility.

Within the borders of every country resident there exists an evil which is yearly assuming greater proportions. We refer to the mail order business which last year amounted in money sum to Chicago alone to $200,000,000. Two hundred million Dollars diverted from its legitimate channel. Two hundred million dollars sent out to enrich those who are not needy. While those at home slowly in need of support were passed by coldly, the local trade was impoverished just to that extent. The golden trade revolving stream which have remained within its own channel, thus enriching its own soil, and causing desert places to bloom and blossom.

Many unemployed would have been engaged at living wages, households

The batteries of the catalogue houses are carrying destruction to the equalar cities and towns. Are you helping in this work of hurling destruction at the local schools, churches and industries? Are you assisting in the distribution of mail-order literature and sending ammunition in the way of home dollars with which they will continue the campaign?

order citizen. If a place is good enough for a man to live in and to make his money in, it is good enough for a man to SPEND HIS MONEY in that place. Pitch your own town papers, build them up, and they will build your town up in increased trade and greater opportunities."

These are the words of wisdom and foresight from a prudent, patriotic man. As it is today, these words are unknown of the opposite of what should be in such a country district. The mail order citizen may think he is saving the truth he is in saving off the bush upon which he sits. Disaster only can follow. The mail order citizen makes his money locally and scatters it abroad in a 2c-2 where it is needed; this is unfair to both the town and to its merchants. This shortsighted citizen complains of the size and character of his town paper, at the same time he pursues a policy which tends to destroy both. Then, he exhorts ought to be careful how they talk explicit and give publicity to the mail order houses; even if they are paid well for the space, it means disastrously on the town's best properties.

Let men stand by the local merchant, let them protect his interests, for they thus further their own. The town that made the man should be made by the man. This is fair to all. Let men ponder well this truth, that we are all interdependent; that the weal of brotherhood underlies the entire social and commercial fabric. That together we stand or fall; that the good of the country demands loyalty and practical cooperation.

ARTHUR M. PROWDEN.

Fortunate Men of Prominence.

Admirers of great, rich or famous people often bestow their wealth upon the objects of their regard. The German emperor heads the list of lucky men so favored. His receipts in money and real estate during the last ten years would, it is said, make a millionaire envious. Following precedent, a Hamburg merchant prince left more than $1,000,000 to the emperor's chancellor, whom Kaiser William immediately created "Prince" Bismarck. William Jennings Bryan recently came by wealth in the same way. In England Lord Alverton has received $100,000 from an admirer of his public career and Dr. Jameson (Kruger's run-on-the-larger under the will of Mr. Bent. Queen Victoria was very fortunate in her admirers, of whom the wealthiest was Nield, who bequeathed her a sum of $1,250,000.

In a certain rural community, this official order and warning was issued: "Gates and roads are fixed there will be no rural delivery at all." It is impossible to put roads in repair without money. This lack of means cannot be traced to poor crops, for the harvest just gathered in has been superabundant. Men cannot support and build up business concerns in distant cities without sacrificing the local good. Is it fair to establish the city by depriving the country of its just support?

Many hold forth the idea that the country is the feeder of the city. This is only partially true. That doctrine has been preached till the hour is threadbare. It would be much wiser for us to put a new text and talk and work the country up, they allow the city, including its mail order Octopus, to work its own problems aside. This, instead of being selfishness, would be the most order of common sense. A more marked feeling of brotherhood interest is sadly needed in the country on this particular point.

The rural population complain of lack of facilities and conveniences; in order to obviate this, let $200,000,000 little coming year be distributed among country merchants, among the honest storekeepers, then observe what will follow. The improvements would be marked. Social conditions would be greatly ameliorated. A new order would establish in the home and over the broad acres of the farm and best of all, the social spirit of brotherhood would be felt as never before.

Listen to these thoughtful words from Gov. Folk, of Missouri: "We are proud of our splendid cities, and we want to increase in wealth and population, and we also want our country towns to grow. We ask the city merchants to build up, but also demand the country merchants to prosper. I do NOT BELIEVE in the mail would have been cheered and hearts warmed but no, it went to swell the dividends of surfeited, beneficial city corporations.

The fine and far live doctrines was overlooked, its old-fashioned whole-hearedness was silently disregarded.

The country merchant would have been engaged in his daily attempt instead of battling at long odds against enormous, adversity big bills and foreign capitals.

Think of $200,000,000 ye who cause the catalogue houses to flourish in the cedars of Lebanon, and the cross bar.

Nervous Indigestion

The action of digestion is controlled by nerves leading to the stomach. When they are weak, the stomach is deprived of its energy. It has to work to do its work. If you want permanent relief, you must restore this energy. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores nervous energy, and gives the organs power to perform their functions.

For many years I was an acute sufferer from nervous indigestion; at times I was so nervous that I could scarcely sleep. I tried all kinds of medicine without any good result. Finally I was induced to try a bottle of your Nervine, and found immediate relief. I was in Miles' Nervine and Nerve Tonic ever since, and it is the purchase of one bottle of Nervine and one of Nerve Tonic, that I owe my health to Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails, he will return your money.

DYNAMITE BLOWS UP.

EXPLOSION DOES ENORMOUS DAMAGE IN CINCINNATI.

Windows on Rockers, Street Cars, Houses Shaken, Scores Prostrated and Thousands Startled—Knocked Down Lower Cincinnati.

The most alarming explosion of dynamite that ever occurred in this city took place at 5 o'clock on the top of the city hall, resulting in considerable damage to property and the prostration of many persons. The explosion was felt for miles in every direction and was heard for miles and miles. Windows in houses and business blocks rattled like musketry, and in many instances were cracked and broken. Pedestrians were knocked down by the force of the explosion, and many others were prostrated by the shock. Street cars were stopped by the force of the explosion, and many others were shaken from the tracks and terrified beyond control. Horses attached to vehicles of all kinds became unmanageable and ran away, many being badly injured. The explosion was felt in Covington, Newport, Bellevue, Dayton, Ludlow, Bellevue and many other suburban towns. Many persons who were in the city hall at the time of the explosion

THE constitutional amendment to be voted on at the coming spring election are of without importance to receive the attention of every voter. One of these involves the right of the state to give such employment to its convicts to place prisons as may best meet state interests. There are, perhaps, two points of view touching this amendment, and both views should be given thought before voting. The other amendments to be submitted are not of state wide importance. One of these is intended to give to the counties of Jackson, Ingham and Isabella the power to increase the salaries of their circuit judges, at county expense, and the third provides for a board of auditors for Bay county.

• • •

THE fact that the coming state and local elections happen on "April fools day" may be suggestive of the expiration that must inevitably come to most of the candidates through that event. But the most certain "April fooler" of all will be the fellow who through negligence or forgetfulness fail to vote at all on that day. Many of these would rush to the last limit rather than surrender their right to vote at every election, but pattering the privilege they treat it as though it were worthless. It should be a matter of pride to every American citizen to vote at every election. Whatever else may be said of him, the man who votes only when it is convenient or when he thinks his own interests are at stake, is not as good a citizen as he should be.

TIME SHORT

Farmers Should Now Act Heroically for the Sugar Factory

Agriculture Stacks returns from points down the C. R. & I. with acreage in his pocket, and encouraging reports for April prospects. Officers of the company have are picking up acreage in other sections contiguous to that local.

Now, what do our own farmers propose to do? Since Charlevoix county had an existence there has never been an opportunity like the present one to enhance the value of farm property, and insure lucrative results.

Last year was an "off year" on all farm products in this region, and yet the best crop, poor as it was, was better than any other crop raised. Under good conditions beets never fail to bring profit to the farmer, and under bad conditions experience has proven that beets thrive better than other crops. One bad year rarely ever follows another, hence we may reasonably expect an improvement this year over last.

Again, experience in other sections shows that sugar beet culture is a progressive industry. Every year will be more favorable to the farmer than the preceeding year, because of knowledge gained. By reason of this fact there is no trouble in getting beet acreage in other factory sections. The record of information that has reached us from those sections are emphatically favorable to beet culture.

This is the second year for mutual co-operation on the part of our farmers this year means that we have a permanent industry that makes the farmers practically co partners. With proper action this year we have no fear of the future, and the company has the same feeling of confidence.

Therefore, let the farmers get together—increase their acreage, and aid in getting new contracts There is no question that results will be more than satisfactory, and a most valuable industry firmly rooted.

Alcohol From Sawdust.

Traverse City Record. The bottom of Grand Traverse bay is covered with sawdust. Many of the buildings of Traverse City have under them a foundation of the same material while Front street was formerly covered with it. How many years have been dried and thrown away from it only a matter of conjecture and no; even the oldest inhabitant can give any data upon it.

While the old days of big cuts have passed and while no more sawdust is thrown into the bay but instead all possible is burned for fuel, still it is daily being produced here, not in great quantities but in quite large amounts. Now come forth the scientists and say that alcohol can be manufactured from sawdust.

It comes right from headquarters, too. "Glorious opportunities lost in the name of a song that thinking men of the country can sing with great pathos" said Dr. Wiley, the pure food expert of the agricultural department, "for science has just discovered that sawdust is good material for the manufacture of alcohol.

"It's not wood alcohol," declared the expert, "but the genuine stuff. It cannot be told by taste, smell or chemical analyses from the alcohol made from Indian corn."

"Just stop and think for a moment of the millions of tons of sawdust that have gone to waste. Sawdust is often the mountain of sawdust got too high around them have to be moved to escape the sawdust. You cannot burn it. It has no commercial value. But it makes good alcohol and a new industry has come into being.

"Sawdust alcohol is now being manufactured commercially in Pennsylvania and the industry is expected to spring up and thrive in all sawmill communities."

With free alcohol, distilleries could be established in the various towns of northern Michigan with wood working industries and a profitable business worked up.

Advice to Remale Young.

To continue young in health and strength, do as Mrs. N. F. Howness, Mebanesburg, Pa., did. She says: "Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured me of chronic liver and stomach trouble, complicated with such an unhealthy condition of the blood that my skin turned red as flannel. I am now practically 20 years younger than when I took Electric Bitters. I can now do all my work with ease and rest it in my husband's store." Guaranteed at F. G. Hines & Co. Drug Store. Price 50c.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Traverse City Record. Two local newspaper editors have gone interested in the annual meeting of the Northern Michigan Press association which will be held at Petoskey. The association is dated for Friday, April 26, and will be held in this city. The preparations for the program and details of the meeting will be in the hands of the local newspaper men, who will get together in a few days and make definite arrangements. This association includes the dailies, papers of northern Michigan, from Big Rapids north, taking in Saginaw, there being about fifty newspapers represented. This meeting will be one of considerable importance and bring to the city the most energetic publishers and editors of the northern part of the state. The details of the program have not yet been arranged, but will include the discussion of important subjects relative to newspaper work, legislation, etc. It is the purpose of the Traverse City newspaper men to make the visit of the newspaper men of the association one of the pleasures as well as profit, in which they will doubtless be supported by the business men of the city.

The Traverse City Record-S. A. Marting and Thomas Simpson, representing the West Michigan Beet Sugar Company of Croswell, have been in the city and vicinity looking up possibilities for arranging for acreage for sugar beets this year. These gentlemen are willing to loan from the farmers upon this proposition, and explain that the raising of sugar beets is a very profitable proposition. They are ready to contract a given number of acres at a fixed price so that the farmer will know exactly how much he is to get out of his product. A few years ago the Traverse City board of trade expended considerable time and some money in an effort to induce the farmers to raise sugar beets as an experiment. The beets raised were of a good quality, but inasmuch as they had to be shipped to Saginaw the result was unsatisfactory. However, with a nearby market, such as Charlevoix, it is believed that beets could be raised with profit and satisfaction. Of course, no factory firm is source of profit for the farmers and it is a product which they are accustomed to and know how to raise. There are many things to learn relative to the production of sugar beets, but it is argued that if the farmers would divide their profits with the factory they would have no trouble in reducing the production of polarizes to any material extent, thereby assuring themselves of a fixed price on beets, whereas the potato market fluctuates. Mr. Marting and Mr. Simpson will be glad to hear from the farmers and will supply all the necessary information desired.

Petoskey Record: The Bacine Heat Manufacturing company, at Muskegon, has made a contract with the United States government to build and deliver by July 1, 1907, a 40,000 steel lightship, such as are used on the ocean to mark shoals and reefs where lighthouses are impracticable. The lightship will have its first station at Petoskey, it being needed for government work next fall. It may, however, be moved to any part of the lakes, wherever needed. Besides a complete lightHouse outfit, the boat will carry a 700 pound bell, to be kept ringing in thick weather. She will also carry a six inch chime whistle, and keep a full crew.

Mayor—H. L. Schlegerdorf, H. S. Harden, contestant, Aug. Wardrop, Justice, John Avsick.

First Ward—supervisor, Henry Squires; alderman, Jerome McNeill.

Second Ward—supervisor, Chas. Zettler; Alderman, Homer H. Bowker.

Third Ward—supervisor, Wm. H. Miller; Alderman, Harvey C. Dame.

Gentlemen:

Messrs. Leachman & Holden, Graf ton, W. Va., tried a sample of your paint, which they thought well of, and this had occurred.

They and sold a customer 18 gallons of it to paint his house. A few years later, they sold the same man Devoe lead and oil, the same number of gallons to paint the same house. He had 7 gallons left.

The point of the tale is: 11 gallons Devoe paints as 18 gallons Ready.

Of course, that isn't all.

Why does it gallons Devoe go far as 18 gallons of other paint? Because it is paint, all true, no alum, and full measure.

But that isn't all. Devoe lasts longer. No, no, you haven't got to wait ten years to find that out. Ten thousand people know it. We've got their names. Our agents know them; they think a lot of Devoe. There's no difficulty in showing your town people what to expect if Devoe $10 will paint a $15 house; and the paint that lasts as long.

Yours truly

A Rested Illusion.

One of our customers writing from Lima, Ohio says: "I am now frank to confess after having the opportunity to visit some of the factories in Chicago and elsewhere, where I can make the Rugs from old carpets, that conducting a "Sanitary Factory" as you advertise is a point well taken after seeing how careful you were in preserving clean surroundings for your workers and every thing the process I have seen at Petoskey. In Chicago especially filth and dirt reigns supreme and half paid weavers work on in an atmosphere laden with germs of Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, Small Pox, and Consumption, which in turn are woven into the Rugs. I often wonder if mothers give this a thought when sending Rug orders away (through agents that possibly they are bringing into the home terrible germs to take away loved ones. You certainly deserve the patronage of thinking people and all I can do shall be very gladly done."

—Read Frazier's new ad.

—Frank Lamphear returned from Florida on Tuesday.

—James Dunlevy, of St. James, came over on the Beaver yesterday.

—The socialists polled seven votes in the township, and 57 in the city of Charlevoix.

—Henry Cooper, according to the returns, seems to have renewed his youth, as a "runner."

—The Beaver Island could not vote on State ticket, not being able to get the ballots there in time.

—Charlevoix County Pomona Grange will meet with South Arm Grange April 18th and 19th.

—Phil. Roach, of Traverse City, well known in Northern Michigan, was in town one day last week.

—Capt. McCarty, of Mackinac Island, is here with his crew to take the steamer Columbia to her new route.

—Geo. Bliss and Adelbert Clark, of Marion, as co-partners, have contracted to raise 35 acres of sugar beets.

—Mr. Snyder, foreman of the SENTINEL office, has been laid up the past ten days with inflamatory rheumatism.

—W. K. Stevens, manager of the Beaver Island Lumber Co. was a passenger on the Beaver from St. James yesterday.

—Mrs. Leahy, the optician, will be at the Bartlett, Friday, April 19th, and will remain five days. See his ad elsewhere.

—Members of Charlevoix Rebekah Lodge are requested to be present at the lodge room Saturday evening at 7:30. Business of importance.

—The steamer Beaver left here on her first trip to the Island Tuesday afternoon, making St. James all right, leaving again Wednesday morning. The Beaver will now make her regular bi-weekly trips.

—The city is grading down the hill immediately in the rear of the works, upon the site of which it will erect a 20x60 house for the occupancy of the engineer in charge of the light and water plant.

—Chas E. Terrell and Capt. Geo Weaver have bought a boat at Muskegon for the Charlevoix East Jordan route, and expect to have her here soon. She is a gasoline boat, 75 feet long, with 120 horse power engine, and is said to be a fine little passenger boat.

—John McIlroy, Sr., a pioneer, died at his home in Banks township on Tuesday, aged 84. The funeral will be from Marion town hall at eleven o'clock Friday. Mr McIlroy located on the farm where he died thirty-seven years ago. He was the father of Joseph and John McIlroy, both of Banks.

—Frank Cullison will open his cottage restaurant the last of this week. The place has been greatly improved since it closed last fall. A new and finely equipped kitchen has been built on, and the dining room enlarged. Aside from these enlargements the place has been redecorated, and improved, and will be a credit to the city.

—Supervisor Gallagher, of St. James, is here on official business.

—J. L. Crane has a large new ad. in this issue that is of interest to all.

—The Argo Milling Co. advertise seed oats on our fifth page this week.

—The new Sunny South Co. Wednesday Eight, at the Charlevoix Theater.

—Frank N. Clark, of Northville, superintendent of U. S. fish hatcheries, was here Tuesday on business connected with the local hatchery.

—Clarence Wood, as is well known, has a decided artistic trend. His first used work has long attracted attention, but his last achievement is a work of art that is really a gem. It is a table, which, to elaborate burnt work, is added some of the best carving that has ever come to our notice. The piece is worthy of being classed as a work of art.

—Manager Bridge announces that he will present at the Charlevoix Theater next Wednesday evening, April 10th, Hoekwalt's new Sunny South Co., a brass band, orchestra and concert company, made up of carefully selected colored musical talent. Everything that goes with an organization of this kind is in this company, and our people may expect an evening of enjoyment.

—Notwithstanding the fact that the SENTINEL has been persecuted pro grato with evangelists lately, we sincerely hope that Rev. David Reed, who follows the Rev. Dan, will not consider the editor a heathen, and we avail ourself of this opportunity to state that Charlevoix is, numerically, a community of intelligent, orderly, church-going, self respecting people, notwithstanding the bad reputation Dan has given it.

—The sooner you read "The Wonted Man," at the Charlevoix Theater Wednesday night, scored a big success, with a crowded house. Every one in the cast did the high school credit. Very much credit is due Miss Winifred Gale, who drilled the cast. Miss Gale is a gifted elocutionist, and her good work was plainly visible all through the play. Not only as a dramatic and comedy effort, but generally, the event was eminently successful, and we congratulate the Seniors.

—Daniel O. Hill, manager of the silk department of Marshall Field's wholesale store, Chicago, died at his home in that city last week, of appendicitis. Old settlers will remember genial "Dan" Hill. He came from an ordinary clerkship in the Field store to Charlevoix as manager of the Fox store. It was thirty years ago, and the Fox store was about the only thing in town, except the SENTINEL. He remained here a little over a year, when he was offered the position of assistant manager of Field's silk department, and accepted. Soon after he was promoted to manager, and made annual trips to Europe as buyer. Mr. Hill leaves a wife and five children.

—Mr. Stewart, of the fish hatchery, planted six millions of young whitefish in Pine Lake last week, on account of the ice in Lake Michigan, but twenty millions were placed on the big lake fishing grounds yesterday and to-day. The five million young whitefish are yet having a good time in the hatchery tanks, but will be planted in Lake Michigan in about three weeks. In this connection the question arises whether or not Pine Lake whitefish get into Lake Michigan. It is positively known that Pine Lake is full of them, and that they are very large and of very fine quality. We have before expressed the opinion which has not changed, that there should be a special act passed permitting the setting of large mesh nets in Pine Lake. In such nets nothing could be taken but lake trout and whitefish.

—America's greatest colored show, the Hoekwalt's "New Sunny South" company, will be at the opera house, Wednesday evening, April 10th. This organization recently appeared in Kalamazoo Mich., and the Daily Gazette, of that city, of March 4th, speaking of their performance said: "The company of colored folks at the Academy Saturday afternoon and evening, under the title of the 'Sunny South,' was a highly meritorious one. There was only a fair house at the matinee, but the quality of the performance was such as to draw a packed house at night. They are about as clever a bunch of colored folks as has ever been getting together, and can draw a full house wherever they play Kalamazoo in the future." The high class silver cornet band carried by the organization, will parade the principal streets at said p. m.

THE CITY ELECTION

Republicans Wins On Most Important Offices, But Honors Divided On Aldermen and Supervisors.

The republicans scored a victory Monday in the city election, landing Dr. Armstrong in the Mayor's chair by 60 majority over the present incumbent, Mr. Siddings, who is serving his second term.

Henry C. Cooper, republican candidate for clerk, defeated Mr. Hartshe, the present incumbent, by 102 majority, and Major Green was elected treasurer by 17 majority. Earl Wardrop, the Labor candidate for treasurer against H. W. Miller, republican, was elected by 40 majority.

In the first ward, O. E. Wilber, Rep., was re elected alderman by 25 majority over Archie McNeil, W. F. Hampton, Rep., was elected supervisor over G. W. Cook, by 29 majority.

In the second ward Horace Fowler, Labor, defeated Frank G. Hines for Alderman, by 5 majority and Chas. Zeitler, Labor, goes to the board of supervisors by a majority of 5 over Harrison Bedford.

The third ward gave E. B. Ward, Rep., a majority of 31 over H. C. Plum. Wm. H. Miller, Labor, defeated Louis Ostowski for supervisor by 42 majority.

It was a spirited contest, and a fair vote was polled. The republicans had a loud demonstration after the result was announced.

ELECTIONS IN THE COUNTY

The Usual Republican Majority On State Ticket—Few Changes In Board of Supervisors.

Although returns are not in as we go to press, it is certain that the county has given its usual republican majority. Supervisors were elected as follows:

Bay, John C. Karcher.

Boyne Valley,—Wm. Redfreed.

Chandler,—Jacob M. Snyder.

Charlevoix,—Ava Smith.

Charlevoix City—First ward, W. E. Hampton, second ward, Chas. Zeitler, third ward, W. H. Miller.

Hayes, F. C. Burnett.

Hudson,—Ralph Dye.

Marion,—Jas. H. Adams.

Norwood, John Hughes.

Peaine,—Wm. D. Gallagher.

South Arm,—Jacob Graff.

St James W. J. Gallagher.

Evangeline,—Wilder.

Boyne City,—First ward, Hugh R. Miller, second ward, Walter Ware third ward, Geo. W. Bailey.

Eveline, Malcolm A. McDonald.

Wilson,—O. D. Smith.

Melrose—S. A. Correll.

Michigan Rolls Up the Usual Republican Majority.

Incomplete returns indicate that the state went republican by about 70 plurality, and that the constitutional amendments carried.

In Chicago Busse defeated Dunne for mayor by 15000 majority. The entire republican ticket was elected except city treasurer.

Boyne City elected J. M. Harris as its first mayor.

Petoskey went democratic again re-electing Dr. Recraft mayor by a good majority.

MISSING MAN FOUND.

KANSAS CITY CONTRACTOR IN ILLINOIS ASYLUM.

Wherabouts Unknown for Eight Years Because He Has Become Demented—Has Been Blamed for Shooting Up Irish Town.

Elder gives an account of William L. Crane, a leading contractor of Kansas City, who disappeared eight years ago in 1899 and ended his career for about two years longer in a lunatic asylum hundreds miles from home. The parole commissioner of Illinois has just discovered the whereabouts of Crane and has informed his relatives of the fact. Crane is now in the Northern Illinois and Wisconsin District of the Central asylum. He has been held in this asylum since June, 1900, and has been adjudged a lunatic. Crane is a Democrat and was a prominent man in the Democratic party in Kansas City. He was a member of the city council, and was a candidate for mayor on the Democratic ticket in 1899 and 1900. He was a member of the Democratic state central committee and was a member of the Democratic congressional committee. He was also a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Knights of Columbus, the Elks and other societies. He was a contractor for the Kansas City Belt Line Railway and built the Belt Line bridge across the Missouri river. He was also a member of the firm of Crane & Company, which had the contract for the Kansas City Belt Line Railway

Anglicized French.

Two centuries ago there have been "Rincons" at the end of a work, a Frenchman never says it, but translates for it sixteen, being sits "Hot". Too Much of a Hurry.

There is nothing like being stylish, as a footnote to chapter of this from the book that where an participation of the tropical fruit of Ultimatum, well known to be very. Was found to be a close upright Ingleland barley animal nature Every for his London gentleman German Shaden Herzog.

Thimbleless Monkeys.

An curious difference between the life of man and of the monkey has been made by the sharper and closer than the expensive pow which monkeys have, for though it is quite to crack the tip of nut for of the other fingers on the hand, it is found that monkeys should be more than human small to move about.

Remarkable Austrian Church.

A small Worship place in Austria, named Hohenstadt, can boast of possessing a composite church. It was first built by an Italian architect in Venice at the extreme of Prince Carlos Claus, Aldrington, who is a great admirer of Italian architecture. When it was finished the church was taken to pieces and packed in thousands of numbered cases for transportation to Hohenstadt. At that place it was eventually rebuilt and then made over to its inhabitants as a gift from the prince.

Rats Gnawed Through Beer Pipe.

Finding it impossible to draw beer from a barrel in Barnsley's Hymn, Inn, England, landlord went to the cellar and discovered that a hole had been eaten in the pipe by rodents. The floor was covered with beer in which 20 dead rats either tried to assemble or crawl the greasy stairs.

SEES JOY IN WORK

WORLD SEEMS TO HAVE NO PLACE FOR THE IDLER.

No Real Joy in Life of Ease Without Labor, Says Man Who Has Given the Matter a Thorough Trial.

"After all," said a man who some time ago had a fortune left to him, "there is nothing like work.

"I used to think that if I had money enough to live on comfortably, so that I didn't have to work, I should be happy. My work was not unpleasant, and so, after the day, the same as usual, I would do the same things over and over again, and I used to get so tired of it all that sometimes it seemed as though I should die.

"But I had to keep at it to live, and so I did keep at it till a distant relative of mine that I had never thought was worth anything died and left me a fortune.

"That never was anything that ever happened to me that ever gave me half as much pleasure as that. The first thing I did was to shake the work where I got rid of it as quickly as I decently could, and then I set about pleasing myself.

"The one thing of all that I wanted most was travel. I craved a change, and when that craving came I got it I set out on my dreamed of travels, and found it keen delight to them all for a time.

"It was all the same to me whether I stayed in one place or went from place to place, or whether I was going, I was free to enjoy it all, and I did for a time, but then I began to find myself in a way apart, and not so much privileged to enjoy these things as I had been at first.

"I was an idler pure and simple, while all those to whom I was indebted for the possibility of the pleasures of travel, the railroad men and the steamship men, were all working, as were also the hotel men and the theater people and everybody to whom I was indebted for pleasures in season, all workers. So there were all or nearly all the travelers I met workers in one field or another, all and finding activity in every breath they drew because they were workers.

"Now they were drawn, if not by pleasure, at least by the pay market of their time, while I, and those like me, had nothing to compare with that which flow to the fellow-beings whom I passed over the road I found myself more and more separated from the laborers on the road. Now, though he might be in the same car, but as idlers in life, which he accordingly is labor, while I was a drone, yet.

"In fact the more I found the more clearly I came to realize that the lot of the unknown in labor that is unknown there is nothing like, and the more I travelled the more clear it became to me how few real fellow things are among men. When finally at the end of three years of idling I had come half around in the city I had this last home in mind and with another breakfast than one and another great joy that I had found at last be about finding was quite the person.

"The city was alive with activity, with men all at work, all doing something, all accomplishing something, and I was one of them. Brands, Actually were lighted, as in a grander sense, had gone in those city centuries. Thus I found my place, neither when there was a chance. How Wonderful "Friends that I had known years old we met, and I met and thanked them. Then had their work to do and their functions and their accomplishments were with other people. Now I know, as I've not yet seen, in a kind of Providence, there was, and in the 'a duster to work.

"I was in it with a free mind, and I am so it still, glad that to be back in the full of work."

J. Merciful Merriman

The passengers on a crowded train today are to Howard's one day just which was, Mr. Stephen applied with such boldness that the 'a few of those who were standing, without the pay. Now there was a little jump from the platform and hand in front of the car. Several of the passengers looked to see if the baby was safe, but no one seemed to be the mischievous attack. Instead of the baby, a man was sent on one of the rail with a little and under his arm.

"The party taken a flying," he explained as he passed down on the rain out of harbor way, "and I don't propose to start with a rain down."

IN A CHILD'S LOVE

LONELY COUPLE FOUND HAPPINESS IN LIFE.

Advent of Little Nellie Filled Void of Which Physician and His Wife Were Scarcely Conscious.

Mrs. Dayton ushered her husband's study and sat down in a chair.

"You look like Lincoln," said Dr. Dayton, shutting up from a scientific journal. "Have you been out in the sun?"

"Yes, I walked over to the Ferrier camp to see the children who were brought from the city that morning."

"I wish you wouldn't go there so often, Eleanor," he said, a little impatiently. "A visit to the tenement house seems to exhaust you more than anything else."

"Oh, Harry, I love to see the children, their pack dwelling little sorrowful faces, and the yellow curls and big brown eyes, and her mission in life I used to be called Nellie when I was her age. She's been the mainspring home and I couldn't live without Harry, Dear, sure."

"Now, dear, don't bring up that subject again. You know I don't like the idea of adopting children, and you are not strong enough to assume the care of a youngster." The doctor smiled tenderly at Mrs. Dayton. "Haven't you enough enough bosom, after for without bring to life you know not after? And he rocked speaking the adoption idea.

"I wanted to the cause," he ex[illegible] leaning in the receiver and [illegible] on his medicine case. "A child mind the rigors a bonbon and has been lately stung."

At been that Mrs. Dayton one from her parents handmaid at the sound of [illegible] a video "There's a little stolen, Eleanor." he called.

She ran out to the motor car and [illegible] in her arms a little baby [illegible] "Why, it's Nellie!" she said. "It's Nellie!" a wan, thinking about anything but her sleepy, which were [illegible] Each about [illegible] "When I managed to relieve the little thing's [illegible] she clung to me, and I [illegible] could get away from her no I thought the nursing will keep her over night. Your son her face and arms are badly swollen and she may need more care than they'd have time to give her at the center."

"I fear the doctor man," [illegible] Nellie. "I want to stay with him."

Mrs. Dayton kissed the yellow curls and laid the child in the bassinnet, and the doctor disappeared into the house, murmuring something about preparing a soothing bribe.

Then morning that Weeks later the motion of the freshwater camp telephoned Dr. Dayton that the children with whom Nellie had come were to be returned to the city that day. She requested him to bring Nellie to the camp in time for the afternoon train.

"Doctor! Why, is this time so different? Why—why, you know I think my wife wished to keep him—that is, I—I—I mean that we both want her."

He turned from the telephone and saw Mrs. Dayton listening in the doorway. Her cross were bright and her cheeks were an unwonted glow of health. She was a winsome picture with Nellie standing to her skirts and the chaste of flowers in her hands that she was weaving for the baby's coming.

"Oh Harry!" was all she said but the look of love in her eyes, may expatiate the effects of a daily tale remaining round and round the earth as it revolves on its axis.

By WILLARD MacKENZIE

"It is useless for you to attempt to leave it out," he said. "I have too strong a hold on you. Now, I'm going to be quite liberally case. Miss Claudette introduced me to you as Mr. Jones, remember."

A look of intense interest crossed Jo Hall's face. "Jones, eh! Yes, I'm a Miss Claudette Grimsby who has set you on to make this scrimpinge against me, she said, serious by truth. "Are taking left who thought I was."

"Before I leave this house you need give me a solemn promise of secrecy about the whereabouts of Miss Grimsby, which I am sure you will not refuse me."

"Anything else?"

"Yes, one thing more. Have you Mr. Arthur Hollingsworth hold an alibi? If you decline, you'll should not know that woman, and I'm sure you'll do it, and will write an hole hole account and hole account of smoking laughter you have written."

"Now, listen to me, Mr. Stallings," said Jo, rising and leaning over the table with, emphasis, "you evidently intend to make me your tool, but I will give this to understand that I am not to be used in any way, shape or form against Miss Grimsby."

"I don't ask anything. Do you suppose that I would have my friend in your hands, sir?"

"And I only ask" the same thing, and know that I can trust you between both parties to secrecy. Because the two drive me to distraction. I have reason to believe that one lives in the Dove of Lynn, I'm in my grave if I ever get my husband."

"You? interrupted Stallings, resting friends.

"I see you that your determination, I am will not only crush this woman but ruin your friend, and I'm sure you are serving. I'll guaranteed in exchange, from which I advise you never hear."

The old woman and gamester began to wrangle his terms. Would it, after all, be better to drive this woman to extremes and without some further reflection? "But what on earth I am to plead to you?" she said, on getting his, high to waver, "what would you, would keep with Arthur, about notes? Do you suppose that he would be ready to confess the fine scheme that you could be brought against the women he shows? I look on love and his against your proposal and shipmate your scene?"

"Then you'd, I'm sure, a probability in all this he must be deeply interested with this woman."

"I will answer your confusion on the terms you mean," he said, after a pause. "I now require another condition, she said, thoughtfully. "The paper must be shown to no person except Miss Grimsby until after the first of December."

"Why?"

"Because there is now a crisis in the affairs of my husband, and I must be fully assured that it will not be used in any way detrimental to me or his previous to the first of the year, or even week, and I will be satisfied, for I believe you to be a man who can keep your word."

Arthur had hinted more than once at a secret existing in Mr. Hollingsworth's life, perhaps she might, thought, after all, could be in the woman, was material to provoke this woman would, in a fit of jealousy.

"I consent to this second condition," he said.

She solemnly repeated the conditions and made him solemnly pledge his word of honor to observe them. He then wrote a brief, but particular memorandum from which she read, and he made some slight requirement in the last clause, but to a well-pleased look, he wrote, and the name of "Hilda Jackson."

"Why, Mr. Stallings, I know a lady of that name, employed in the store, in the place, I mean, I know some ladies of that name, I mean, I know some ladies of that name, I mean, I know some ladies of that name

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Hon Richard W. Hogle, a pioneer of Elk Rapids, died at his home in that village last week. Mr. Hogle formerly represented Antrim and Charlevoix counties in the lower house of the legislature.

Petoskey Record: Mr. E. A. Weston, the well known agent of the Northern Michigan Transportation Co., has been transferred to Traverse City where he and his family will move in a few days. He will be succeeded here by Mr. Dolson, of Traverse City, who represents the N. M. T. Co. at that place in the same capacity that Mr. Weston fills here.

The famed hotel, one of the premier summer hotel properties in Petoskey was completely destroyed by fire on Friday morning. The fire started in a building any resemblance to Hotel Gardner being the hall annex of charred ruins of the food, profit, and pleasure, in the year.

Pioneers of Wexford county will be reminded of the content which occurred when the county seat was brought to Cadillac, by the fight which is now on in Benzie county between Frankfort and Thompsonville for the county seat prize. The fact that the county buildings in Frankfort are in a dilapidated condition and that new buildings will soon have to be put up is the basis for the present agitation for the removal of the county seat to Thompsonville, where it is claimed, new buildings can be erected as cheaply as in the former city. The Wexford county in the early days, however, there are several towns in Benzie who are preparing to get into the race, Beulah and Honor declaring that they will have a try for the county seat if new buildings are to be put up. Inter, which has one hankering to hear from, the vote on changing the county seat from this place to Thompsonville, stands 500 in favor of Frankfort, which means that the county seat will not be changed at present as the return to come will be too small to change the situation.

Boyne Journal: Wm. Isaacs, an aged Indian and a veteran of the Civil war, was found dead in a pool of water near the road the other side of Bert Isbell's farm, north of town Sunday morning. The man has been missing since the 15th. Coroner Dr. Marshall was summoned and it did not take long to determine the cause of his death as two whisker bottles were found on his person. It was evident that he had been in the city and was returning to his home near Hudson's lake when he wandered off the road and fell into the water, it being about three feet deep at the 15th, and it is presumed that he was too intoxicated to get on his feet again. It was not until the water had subsided was his body discovered.

Mr. L. O. Armstrong came up from Grand Rapids last night where he has been making the necessary arrangements for the coming season with the railway people. He has come up to see M. F. Quackenbee about putting some of these folks on excursion and also about a R. R. & L exhibit for the Pittsburg Sportsman's show. Among the new features for Wagoning this year will be a new bath house for ladies. A regular water toboggan slide will be added. There will be a minor change in time, some of trains running some of timber. Push hair will be added to the already full list of water sports. A bowling green will be put on for the lovers of that good old "game of games." Some real archery will be done this year, and it is to be hoped that local archery clubs will be formed. A great many clubs have been established in different points in the United States during the past two years. The sportsman's school idea will be extended by the teaching of camp cooking and pitching by one of Mr. Arm strong's most experienced guides—one who has made deep northern trips with him.

Boyne Citizen: Andrew Anderson, a well known character about Boyne City, died in the county jail at Charlevoix Wednesday afternoon from the effects of delirium tremens, so it is alleged. Anderson had been doing odd jobs about saloons for some time past, and had "gone to the dog," it is alleged. He was arrested on Tues day on complaint of C. H. Dooley & Co., the local dealers, on a charge of obtaining goods under false pretenses. He was in the meat market and stated he was running a lunch counter at the saloon of Wm Garland and wanted some meat. He obtained some and came back several times and got more until he had run up a bill of about $8. Investigation developed he was not running any lunch counter, but was doing odd chores about the saloon. A warrant was sworn out for his arrest charging him with obtaining goods under false pretenses, and he was arrested soon thereafter by Judge Hammond. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to pay a fine of $10 or spend 30 days in jail. He was taken to Charlevoix yesterday morning by Deputy Sheriff Heaton, and complained of feeling sick and after arriving at the jail asked for a doctor. A doctor was summoned and it was seen he had a bad case of delirium tremens. Everything was done for him, but medical aid was of no avail. The fever of dissipation and a disrupted life had fastened themselves firmly upon him, and he died in the county jail. He came to Boyne City about three years ago from Frankfort, Mich., where he had relatives living.

AVOID ALUM

AN UNSEEN DANGER IN FOOD

TO GUARD SHIPS against the unseen dangers at sea, the United States Government maintains lighthouses.

To guard your home against the unseen dangers of food products, the Government has enacted a pure food law. The law compels the manufacturers of baking powder to print the ingredients on the label of each can.

The Government has made the label your protection—so that you can avoid alum—read it carefully, if it does not say pure cream of tartar hand it back and

Say plainly—
ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ROYAL is a pure, cream of tartar baking powder—a pure product of grapes—aids the digestion—adds to the healthfulness of food.

Letter to Mr. Jerry Berry.
Charlevoix Mich.

Dear Sir: There are several ways of churning in milk. An old-fashioned way is to water it. Nobody waters it now. A better way is to take out the cream rich milk with the cream taken out is as good as poor milk with its cream off in.

I let we haven't go into particulars. You don't care you look and your customers.

Cable is as easy as milk to deal with. Hood point is as sure as good milk, for human nature is as much the same in milkweek and point milk.

You are full and free with your milk; so are we with our point. The cow food and rice is twice as good as mixed points. Cheese twice as much butter in it.

Bitten by a Spider.

Through blood poisoning caused by a spider bite, John Woodrington of Bloomsville, Tex., would have lost his leg, which became as black as ink, yielding solely to 5 boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve. He writes: "The first application relieved, and four boxes healed all the sores." Heal every sore. 25c at F. E. Hines & Co., druggist.

WANTED,—An apprentice girl at Mrs. Emery's Millinery store.

Janitor's Good Memory.

Of the long menu and would-begone of Hunter's Hotel, Chicago, he said: "Bucklen's Arnica Salve is the best seller on my bill of fare. Nothing else so quickly relieves Bloodwood eruption, the massive sore discharge, finally attending every meal a moment which, in hundreds has been given by this one balm, yielding to no other claim, anything else the cost first dinner." Only 25c at F. E. Hines & Co., druggist.

On the Sick List.

Quite a number are sick at this time, including the janitor of the school building, which necessitated closing up which resulted some little inconvenience among the congregation.

After the services were over, and as the minister was about to leave the building he met the janitor.

"Jimmy," said he, "that was a good sermon you gave while I was preaching this morning."

"Yes, sir—I—I—I—yoiled literly," said the janitor (that name it is that there was a misunderstanding the last time you preached that sermon.)

Sure Remedy for All Ills.

Watermelon, ice water after it there anything on the top side of this old earth that can be compared for one single moment with the good feeling the most exquisite and the glorious sensations of that peerless fruit? There are long to eight on a slice and watermelon with a honey bee in it is a Kentucky gangster, and as full of sweet as the Pierce rose is full of water.

Never mind the seeds, don't bother anything. Just go ahead and be happy. You can't eat watermelon and die in a whole lifetime, now that Doan's Kidney Pills are in the world. Never mind your heartbreaks—Doan's Pills fall to bring surprise doing from your ills and aches. Why should you hesitate with the guarantee. Keep on eating and when you have finished, eat some more. You can't go wrong. It can't hurt you, so go after it. Is there anything that is?

To adjust glasses the way it should be done. Only an Optician can do it, and he doesn't like most ingenious appliances to help him. It's a great mistake for a person to choose his or her spectacles from a big pile of ready made ones. There is hardly one chance in a hundred that they will be a fit, and when they don't fit a person might far better go without any.

I will adjust your eyes for you free of charge, and then you can buy your glasses where you like. Best repairing and duplicating.

A Busted Illusion.

One of our customers writing from Lima, Ohio says: "I am now frank to confess after having the opportunity to visit some of the factories in Chicago and elsewhere, where they make the kings from old carpets, that conducting a "Sanitary Factory" as you advertise it is point well taken after seeing how careful you were in preserving clean surroundings for your workmen and work during the estimates I have spent at Pelosey, in Chicago especially dirt and dirt reign supreme and half paid wearers work on in the atmosphere laden with germs of Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, Small Pox, and Consumption, which in turn are woven into the Rugs. I often wonder if mothers give this a thought when sending their orders away through agents that possibly their children are bringing into the home terrible germs to take away loved ones. You certainly deserve the patronage of thinking people and all I can do shall be very gladly done."

NEW STEAMER ON BAY LINE.

TRAVERSE BAY TRANSPORTATION COMPANY FORMED.

Daily Service Between Charlevoix and Traverse City.

From the Traverse City Record.

The Traverse Bay Transportation company will operate the bay line this year. A fine steamer, larger both in length and beam than the Columbia, has been purchased and will run between this city and Charlevoix. The company is composed of prominent business men and is now in process of incorporation.

For a number of years the line was operated by the late Capt. H. J. Webb and his son, Capt. Charles Webb.

The Traverse Bay Transportation company is the name of the company and the capital stock is $25,000 which is practically all paid in. The original option is just in the process of completion and the officers have not been elected yet.

The Chequamegon was built four years ago and is considered better than a new boat as she has been thoroughly tried out in every respect. She was built by Mr. Cartier of Luddington, president of the Northern Michigan Transportation company, for his son and was put on a run between Milwaukee and whitefish bay, a big Palmer reach. A trolley line was built afterward, however, and cut into the business to such an extent that the run was abandoned and this was the reason the Traverse City company was able to get the boat.

The Chequamegon is one of the best boats of her class on the great lakes. She was built purposely for the excursion business and can easily accommodate 500 passengers and everything is in her favor as she is absolutely safe. Even with a full load no list can be noticed as her beam is broad and her heavy engine is set so low that it acts as ballast.

The Chequamegon can easily make fourteen or fifteen miles an hour and her run will be between this city and Charlevoix, the round trip being made daily. She will leave this city about 8 o'clock in the morning, touching at the little island, Ne ah ta wanta, Omena and Northport and then across the lake to Charlevoix. Omena will be reached at 10 o'clock and Northport about 11 and she will arrive in Charlevoix at 1, leaving on the return trip at 7:30 and reaching this city at 7 o'clock.

By making the daily run to Charlevoix many people who did not favor Sunday excursions can make the trip on a week day.

The company does not expect to put the new boat on the long run until July 1, but she will arrive here about June 1, and during the month of June will be used for excursions or freight work.

It is expected that the company will also secure the contract for carrying the mail from Northport to Charlevoix and the Musselmon Grocery company will ship their freight from this city to Charlevoix and Petoskey by the Chequamegon.

Word has been received from the company owning the steamer Manitou that arrangements had been made to carry passengers from Chicago to Traverse City at the same price that was charged from Chicago to Charlevoix. At Charlevoix the passengers will be transferred to the Chequamegon and the Manitou company will pay the local company the fair from Charlevoix down.

The Chequamegon is a beauty in every respect. While she has a capacity of 500 people, should it at any time be necessary to increase this, it can be done by placing a railing around the upper deck and using that for passengers. The boat has two good sized decks, and on the upper deck there is the ladies' cabin in antique oak. On the lower deck there is a gentlemen's cabin also in antique oak. Below and forward there is a dining room so that the through passengers can be given their meals

The boat is electrically lighted throughout and is equipped with a large powerful search light, which will be quite a feature. On the main deck, both forward and aft, there is a large space for passengers. The forward deck of the Columbia was short and did not provide much room for the passengers. The wheelhouse is round and is very similar to the one on the Illinois and Missouri.

To the lover of fine machinery, her engine is satisfaction. It is of the triple expansion type and was built at Muskegon, Michigan. The boilers is of the very latest type with all the safety appliances known to modern science. The boat is covered by steam. The engine is placed so low in the hull that even in the heavy seaway the boat is exceedingly stiff. The boat will be entirely fitted out before she goes on her run, the work either being done here or at Ludington.

Capt. Chas. Webb will have charge of the boat and as he has been sailing on Grand Traverse bay for a number of years he needs no introduction. Frank Greilick, who for the past nine years has been chief engineer on the Neff, will have charge of the engine room. He is of the opinion that the engine in the Chequamegon is the finest that was ever put into a boat. The rest of the crew has not yet been decided upon.

On recommendation of Mayor Iddings, Ald. Plum moved that it be the sense of the council to fix salaries of councilmen at $50.00 per year. Which motion prevailed as follows: Ayes. Ald. Wilbur, Merriam, Cameron, Plum and Webster; nayes, none.

Alderman Wilbur submitted the following resolution and moved its adoption.

Resolved by the common council of the City of Charlevoix in regular session assembled, that we tender to our retiring Mayor, Hon. Harvey L. Iddings, our hearty appreciation of the fair and impartial manner and uniform courtesy with which he has presided over the meetings and deliberations of the common council, and for the signal ability, untiring zeal and praiseworthy faithfulness with which he has conducted the business of the city and discharged the duties of his office.

The two terms during which he has served the city as Mayor, dating from the Reorganization of the city until the present time, have been packed full of business of importance including the perplexing problems of municipal ownership, always present when a new municipality is to be started on its career. In addition to this, the unusual amount of work required and attention demanded to details in the installation of the present electric light and water works system, has increased very materially the amount of work to be done; but even this has not daunted our Mayor in the discharge of his duties. No problem has been too great, no tax on his mind and ability so heavy but that he has responded willingly and cheerfully to the call and with a real approximating enthusiasm.

We feel that the city, as well as the council, are deeply indebted to Mr. Iddings for the work he has done; and that it is but just that a public expression be made to voice what we are sure is the universal sentiment. We therefore take great pleasure in thus imperfectly expressing to our Mayor our sense of appreciation of his valuable service.

Resolved further, that this resolution be spread at large upon the minutes of this meeting and that a copy, printed legibly engrossed and frame be presented by the Clerk to Mr. Iddings, which motion prevailed as follows: Ayes. All

HAVE NARROW ESCAPE

Two Men Nearly Perish on Lake Michigan.

From the Detroit News.

Frank Sodders, of Muskegon, and Charles E. Turrell, of Charlevoix, had a narrow escape Saturday night in the storm on Lake Michigan when the small launch in which they were going from Muskegon to Charlevoix broke down north of that harbor.

After the machinery gave way the wind carried the small craft rapidly out into the lake. Just before dark the occupants of the two Petoskey Resort: Mr. H. A. Weston, the well known agent of the Northern Michigan Transportation Co., has been transferred to Traverse City, where he and his family will move in a few days. He will be succeeded here by Mr. Burns, of Traverse City, who replaced the N. M. T. co. at that place in the same capacity when Mr. Weston had been.

The lower hitch one of the prettiest outlines been projected in Petoskey was completely destroyed by fire on Friday morning, the only portions bearing any resemblance to their former stations being the half burned charred pilars of the front porch and the kitchen in the rear.

Farmers of Wexford county will be interested of the contest which occurred when the church seal was brought to Cadillac, by the fight which is now on in Benzie county between Frankfort and Thompsonville for the county seat game. The fact that the county buildings in Frankfort are in a dilapidated condition and that new buildings will soon have to be put up is the basis for the present agitation for the removal of the county seat to Thompsonville, where it is claimed, new buildings can be erected as cheaply as in the former city. Like Wexford county in the early days, however, there are several towns in Benzie who are preparing to get into the race. Honorees and Hon or declaring that they will have a try for the county seat if new buildings are to be put up. Inter.—With but one township to bear from, the vote on changing the county seat from this place to Thompsonville stands 500 in favor of Frankfort, which means that the county seat will not be changed at present as the returns to come will be too small to change the situation.

Boyne Journal: Wm. Isaacs, an aged Indian and a veteran of the Civil war, was found dead in a pool of water near the road the other side of Herr Isbell's farm, north of town Sunday morning. The man has been missing since the 10th. Coroner Dr. Marshall was summoned and it did not take long to determine the cause of his death as two whiskey bottles were found on his person. It was evident that he had been in the city and was returning to his home near Hudson's Bay when he wandered off the road and fell into the water. It took almost three feet deep at that time and it is presumed that he was too intoxicated to get on his feet again. It was not until the water had saturated was his body discovered.

Mr. L. D. Armstrong came up from Grand Rapids last night where he has been making the necessary arrangements for the coming season with the railway people. He has come up to Boyne City to assist about putting some of these into execution and also about G. H. & I. exhibit for the Pittsburg Sportsman's Show. Among the new features for Wagganing this year will be a new band house for Boyne. A regular water toboggan slide will be added. There will be some changes to this, some of can was and some of tamer. Plush ball will be added to the already full list of water sports. A bowling green will be put on for the lovers of that good old "game of chance game. Some real archery will be done this year, and it is to be hoped that local archery clubs will be formed. A great many clubs have been established at different points in the United States during the past two years. The sportsman's school idea will be extended by the enacting of camp cooking and pitching by one of Mr. Armstrong's most experienced guides—one who has made long northern trips with him.

Boyne Citizen: Andrew Anderson, a well known character about Boyne City, died in the county jail at Charlevoix Wednesday afternoon from the effects of delirium tremens, so it is alleged. Anderson had been doing odd jobs about town for some time past, and had "gone to the dog," it is alleged. He was arrested on Tuesday on complaint of C. H. Trinty & Co., the meat dealers, on a charge of obtaining goods under false pretenses. He was in the meat market and stated he was running a lunch counter at the saloon of Wm. Garland and wanted some meat. He obtained some and went back several times and got more until he had run up a bill of about $5. Investigation developed he was not running any lunch counter, but was doing odd chores about the saloon. A warrant was sworn out for his arrest charging him with obtaining goods under false pretenses, and he was arrested and brought before Judge Hammond. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to pay a fine of $5 and costs, $3.70, in all. He was taken to Charlevoix yesterday morning by Deputy Sheriff Hewins, and complained of feeling sick and other symptoms at the jail which for a shocking. A doctor was summoned and it was seen he had a bad case of delirium tremens. Everything was done for him but nothing seemed to do him any good. The dangers of dissipation and a misspent life had fastened themselves firmly upon him, and he died in the county jail. He came to Boyne City about three years ago from Freelport, Mich., where he had relatives living.

A Busted Illusion.

One of our customers writing from Lima, Ohio says: "I am now freak to confess after having the opportunity to visit some of the factories in Chicago and elsewhere, where they make the Rugs from old carpets, that conducting a "Sanitary Factory" as you advertise is a point well taken after seeing how careful you were in preserving clean surroundings for your workmen and work during the summers I have spent at Petoskey, in Chicago especially 12th and Dearborn sign supreme and half paid weavers work on in an atmosphere laden with germs of Scarlet Fever, Typhoid, Small Pox, and Consumption, which is then are woven into the Rugs. I often wonder if mothers give this a thought when sending Rug orders away through agents that possibly they are bringing into the household terrible germs to take away loved ones. You certainly deserve the patronage of thinking people and all I can do shall be very gladly done."

The whole of that day she passed in a state of great anxiety and concern. Not until quite late that night did Arthur return. The moment he saw his face she knew that the issue had failed. The quiet look that dwelt upon her face. He waited at train upon their setting course she helped him off with his overcoat.

"It was as I expected," he said at length. "My father called upon the law-yers, and their answer was that they had received instructions to take no further steps in the business. They could give no explanations whatever, as they were bound under a penalty not to do so."

"Because such course forbidding me a claim further also amounts to the same purpose, inasmuch as the documents presented for the inspection of this last have been those of which I thought he had stolen from me, and which, until this last business, he had not received display."

"Then all hope of saving Pendrudden is gone?" one said at last, in a hoarse voice.

"Not the slightest; it was he and father's death blow."

Weary, dull, and stunned, he. "Oh, what a cruel, cruel, cruel, cruel, cruel! Poor Cecil! Poor Cecil! Poor young man! Could she engender any lessen on earth, Arthur?"

"Why, yes, the gentlemen's side, called, entirely, upon the ground, that Cecil had a great difference."

"Quite right," she Lamont. I almost wonder Wylie, who assumed laugh, but you would be go, Arthur, I ask?"

"My father is sole thing to ask and grace of you and if being so, you will, I, as a company, ask you to go and visit Arthur passionately."

"Yes, Arthur, I will go, I am to ask you Mrs. Pendrudden is this morning." said Wylie, turning upon him with a dubious smile.

Yetta engaged back as though he had mother?" she cried, hastily approaching him. "You look such Stafford!"—but perhaps immediately taking that dress for granted.

"I have sent to Stafford." he answer-ed, sternly. "I have seen a man who do you know a woman called Wylie?"

At that name, a cry broke from her lips, and she fell swooning into a chair. Not one thought of the date of work, And wonder was no least.

The other thought not of the call, But then there need to start this in jacket, she does just the opposite to what she is wanted to do. She wants to see us, and I know I am going to sing Sir Arthur."

"I don't know that I am so partial lately set on such a course." Mr. Hardcastle cautioned. "Arter all, she will make a much lighter match if she set to choose for herself. Remember our case, my dear! I was quite young when parents' choice. They wished you to marry someone much better off than I was."

"Yes, I know you, Dick, and I know you'll get out," murmured Mrs. Hardcastle in softer tones.

"No, no, Cynthia, I'm see more in Our Everyfield than you can," Mr. Hardcastle replied. "If she cares for him, she shall have him, I'm sure, for her sake."

"But it is some time," cried his wife. "Here is Sir Arthur Bruce, with quest come only for a day, and he may be a year, ready to let Cynthia walk out with him if she chooses, and you who recommend that Everyfield right and left, and what has he got to offer her? A few unpublished novels and plays."

"Give him the credit that is due to him, my dear," returned Mr. Hardcastle. "He has had one play accepted, and it was very well received; the critics all refer to Sho as a rising man."

"And he can only make hundreds, where Sir Arthur has thousands," grumbled Mrs. Hardcastle, "and it does not alter the fact that Cynthia is very perverse."

Mr. Hardcastle did not reply, but he began to study the morning paper; his wife stared thoughtfully through the window across the tennis lawn at the fragrant rose garden. Suddenly a smile crossed her face, and she almost quickly at Mr. Hardcastle.

"Dick," she said, "I have an idea. I'll tell it you after, when we are alone again. I can hear Cynthia coming now. Just make no conversation."

The door opened and Cynthia entered. The prisoner brought in many sweetness into the room. Her bright blue eyes had caught the gleam of the morning, sky, her curly brown hair hung in seeming careless masses, and the gladness of youth rang in her fresh, young voice.

"When she had dutifully seated her parents she sat down at the table, and asked her mother what there was for breakfast.

"There is bacon and kidney Cynthia, and brown bread," was the reply.

"Which shall I have?"

"I am sure you would like the sole," said Mrs. Hardcastle.

Cynthia deliberated for a moment.

"I think I'll have bacon and kidney," she remarked eventually.

As she assisted her daughter to the sideboard in question, Mrs. Hardcastle shot a glance of triumph at her husband.

"I knew she would have one thing if I recommended the other, Mrs. Hardcastle said later, as she stood in the rose garden with her husband.

"She is certainly perverse!" Mr. Hardcastle remarked, slaying rusty growly, as he spoke.

"That is just what originated my idea," cried Mrs. Hardcastle triumphantly. "All we need is a little diplomacy, and I am going to use it."

Mr. Hardcastle smiled as he bent over a Gloire de Dijon—luckily his wife did not observe his expression.

"I'm going to ordered that I prefer Mr. Everefield to Sir Arthur," Mrs. Hardcastle continued. "and the result will be that Cynthia will prefer Sir Arthur. Don't you think it is diplomatic of me, Dick?"

"Rather," replied Mr. Hardcastle, quite startling his face to conceal another smile.

Mrs. Hardcastle was full of her scheme. Her husband was forbidden to display her apparently altered views too much at first, and over a week pass at before the first fruits of her ripe story were reaped.

"Your favorite said anything mean client Mr. Everefield for several days," remarked Cynthia with a cheerful candor.

Well, to tell the truth, my dear," replied Mrs. Hardcastle, "I am beginning to think I was mistaken in my impression of Sir Arthur. I begin to think the conclusion that he is a very nice young man."

"Well," murmured Cynthia, gazing doubtfully at her mother. "I'm you think he is better than Sir Arthur Bruce."

"Why, he has several qualities that Sir Arthur has not, and he seems to be exceedingly clever."

"Sir Arthur is very rich, but continued to gain doubtfully at her mother. She thought said after petal from the rose in her hand. "Mr. Everefield is very good-looking and, it is said, as much use admiring her as it is to-wards Sir Arthur, and he is clever."

Mrs. Hardcastle was tactful, she did not pursue her advantage, but adroitly changed the subject. Later she triumphantly repeated the conversation to her husband.

"It acted like a charm," she said. "As soon as I backed up Mr. Everefield, Cynthia veered round in favor of Sir Arthur. Don't you think I'm diplomatic, Dick?"

"You seem to have got Cynthia's measure very well," he replied.

For several days no mention was made of the letter which Cynthia again brought up the subject.

"Sir Arthur talks of standing for Parliament," she said. "Wouldn't it be splendid if he was elected?"

"I wonder he has not been before," replied Mrs. Hardcastle. "Do you think he is clever enough? I wants a man with great talent, like Mr. Everefield, to become an M. P."

"Oh, I think Sir Arthur would be just the man," cried Cynthia. "Mr. Everefield is clever, but Sir Arthur is so clever, but he has not Sir Arthur's charm of manner."

Once more Mrs. Hardcastle was greatly elated. Her diplomacy was bearing fruit. Her husband was the only one who was not at all surprised when he said, in reply to her triumphant, "Well, Dick?" at the next morning.—Tweedsmuir Flain Dealer.

His Favorite.

"What is your favorite recitation?" asked the teacher.

"Curfew shall Not Ring Tonight," answered Mr. Hitkins, with a peculiar sneer which was almost defiant.

Prince Wilhelm Desires to Graze Up with One of President Roosevelt's Boys—Wreckers Attempt Again to Derail Train.

To his choice to have one of his sons graduate at the University of Pennsylvania there is doubt due the decision of Prince Wilhelm, who will enter his fifth son, Prince Oscar, to Harvard university at Cambridge. He entering Harvard is the beginning of the most serious one. Prince Oscar is 17 years old. Prince Eleutherio is a sturdy lad, while Prince Harald is a delicate one. Both of the latter have had serious illness in the same time. The Kaiser's decision to send his fifth son to Harvard is due to the fact that the sons of both of his eldest children, Crown Prince William and Prince Eitel Fritz, have been at Harvard. It is the Kaiser's desire that his sons should be brought into close contact with the sons of the American people. Prince Oscar will be accompanied by a tutor and a valet.

One day last week one of August Hoinpatsch's hens flew into Mrs. Durfee's bedroom window and deposited an Easter egg on the bed after laying up on the door-sill and successfully surveying herself in the glass, too curious. When discovered she was about out of the window sill, minus the egg.—Northport Leader.

About one mile out of Charlevoix, on the farm of Stephen A. Blanchard, is a large patch of ground that has all appearances of an enterprising of a bed of ginseng. If it should turn out to be such, a crop of it would be a valuable proposition.

The Rev. Frank Bliss, pastor of the Baptist church of Boyne City was elected chairman to represent the First ward in the new city council. Mr. Bliss is a builder of the northern type. He is squarely against the saloon. When an attempt was made to locate a saloon in his ward he brought about such a forceful agitation that the saloon was barred out and the protest finally hunted the saloon absolutely to the business section of the city.

Traverse City Record: The town of public works last night passed a resolution that when Washington street is paved the material be substitute, in the same as that used on State street, but with the further provision that a concrete foundation be used instead of bituminous foundation. The Barber Asphalt company submitted a bid that was a trifle lower in cost, but in view of the fact that the bituithic company had laid a first-class pavement on State street and one that was highly satisfactory to the people of that street, in view of the statements also of tax payers present at the meeting that they had inspected much more paving that was defective and in view of the fact, also, that a large portion of the property owners of Washington street favored bituithic, that, that board recommended the material be used when the street is paved.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

Not for years has there been such an incendiel awakening or Revival of Religion as is now manifested throughout the country, and Charlevoix has had its show this winter. The special Evangelistic services now in progress at the M. E. church, conducted by Evangelists Reed and Colegrove, are drawing large crowds nightly.

Rev. D. H. Reed.

The first week was very successful and fifty conversions are reported. Last Sunday was indeed a Red Letter Day, seven largely attended meetings, in fact it was almost a continuous meeting, Mr. Colegrove making a strong appeal at night from the text "One thing thou lackest."

Four meetings are held daily this week, a meeting for men at 12 m. sharp each day in Dr. Wilkinson's office, at 2:30 a conference and stirring address by Mr. Reed, at 6 P. M. Mr. Colegrove speaks to the young people, and a strong evangelistic service at night.

In fact a revival of old time religion is taking place and the prospects are the brightest for a genuine thorough religious awakening.

Mr. Reed preaches in a simple gospel message, does not abuse the people, but makes a strong appeal for Christ filled manhood and womanhood, and many young people on getting new ideas and inspiration to live the white life, and lay well the foundations for future life and character.

Evangelist W. S. Colegrove, assistant superintendent of the Famous Trainer Reverse Mission is with Reed and leader and furnishes good music and plenty of it.

All such revivals are a benefit to the morals of our community and every good citizen will cheer on the good work.

Meetings continue daily this week 2:30 and 7:30 and next Sunday will be "Jubilee Day," with the following program:

Song Praise with a Pentecostal love Feast, 2:30 p. m. Sermon "An Ideal Life" at 3:30 p. m. Sabbath School at 4 p. m. Men's Meeting at 5 p. m. Mr. Colegrove will tell his story. Young Peoples Hour 6:30 p. m. Evangelistic Sermon at 7:30.

Letter to Mr. R. D. Armstrong.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: You understand chemistry, how'd you like to earn $10,000?

Devoe lead-and-zinc—that's the name of our paint that takes fewer gallons than mixed paint and wears twice as long as lead-and-oil—is made of white-lead, white zinc, its colors, turpentine dryer, and linseed oil.

If any chemist finds and substitution in this paint we'll pay his bill and $10,000 besides.

It's nobody's business what we put in our paint, of course; but we want it known. For lead-and-zinc and linseed oil, ground together by machinery, are the stuff to paint with; lead and oil mixed by hand is not. We want it known that our "3 Star" describes the best paint in the world; and that word is Devoe.

Are you going to paint?

Yours truly

In attempting to mount the steps of the caboose he slipped, one foot going under the wheels. The foot was badly crushed. He was brought here and taken to Dr. Thisten's office where the foot was dressed. While amputation was not resorted to, the foot will be permanently crippled.

—Great difficulty is had this spring in securing the required quota of men for the life saving service. The force is accounted for by the wages paid to lifesavers. In addition to the poor wages, there is nothing ahead of a lifesaver in the way of retirement on an annuity. This matter has been brought to the attention of Congress repeatedly, but nothing has been done. Present conditions have been found intolerable almost number.

—The Ladies Altar society of St. Mary's Catholic church held a tea, cent tea at the K. of C. hall, Thursday afternoon, over eighty being present. The program which was in charge of Mrs. O'Leary, was as follows: Quartet, Dance of the Fairies, Misses McCabe and Orlowski; Vocal Solo, Iona K. McCabe; Piano Solo, Zona Adams; Vocal Solo, Iona M. McCabe; Reading, Mrs. L. E. Gee; Piano Duet, Misses Payton and Orlowski.

—Based upon information from a reliable source, we are confident that the next Congress will make an appropriation for a fish hatchery at Charlevoix. It was recommended by the fish commission last year, but Speaker Cannon cut it out of the general deficiency bill. But the recommendation will be renewed, and there is very little doubt but that we shall get it next winter. And that brings up the question of what Charlevoix will do in the matter. The SENTINEL heartily endorses the proposition to give the old water works building (on Lake Michigan) to the government for that purpose. Such a tender would make an appropriation certain, and double Mr. Clark's spicy money that would otherwise be used for building, to equipment and improvement of grounds. The city will soon have no further use for the building. Owing to its location, it can never be used for manufacturing purposes. It could not be sold for one quarter what it cost. But Superintendent Clark says it could be made an excellent hatchery. Let the city make a tender of it to the government for a fish hatchery. With that property, and a generous grant of lake front, the present beautiful life saving grounds and the hatchery grounds would make a magnificent lake front park.

It will be remembered that when the T. C. L. & M. was constructed the Union Trust company furnished the funds. The matter has been in litigation several years, during which time the G. R. & I. have been operating the line. This matter is a legal question that will not interfere with the operation of the road.

SUGAR BEETS.

The West Michigan Sugar Company Encouraged by the Outlook.

While the Sugar company has not reached the maximum of its hopes, in the matter of beet acreage, it is experiencing an increased degree of courage and confidence in the outlook. Mr. Hubbard spoke in terms of praise of the spirit manifested by our own farmers, under discouraging conditions.

In view of adverse results last year, Mr. Hubbard feels that the farmers have done remarkably well this year thus far, and is confident that the acreage for the immediate factory section will yet increase materially.

One thing Mr. Hubbard desires to correct, and that is, the report that the company has talked of removing the factory. Although this report gained circulation among some of the newspapers, there has never been anything said by the management to justify the report.

The Charlevoix sugar factory is here to stay. Mr. Hubbard is certain that with one successful year to the credit of the factory and the farmers, the farmers will more fully than now realize the vital importance of sustaining the factory. He is equally certain that by harmonious and energetic cooperation between factory and farmer, the factory will be to a large degree the salvation of Northern Michigan as a prosperous agricultural section.

MAROONED.

Ice Holds Prisoners in its Grasp and Blocks Navigation.

But once within the memory of the oldest settlers has the April weather of the year been paralelled—at least it may be said that no such sudden and severe change of weather has occurred during the last quarter of a century. The most serious effect has been upon navigation interests.

On Tuesday, April 2d, the steamer Beaver left here for St. James, returning the same day, encountering very little ice. Three steamers had already passed through the straits, and everything had the appearance of complete opening of navigation. On Saturday April 6th, the Beaver started again for Beaver Harbor. Ice was report on that shore, but Capt. Campbell was advised by cable that fish tugs were passing through it, from the north and east, but on reaching that vicinity it was discovered that a change of wind had closed up the channel.

Thereupon Capt. Campbell headed his boat southward and around the head of the island for a landing at some point on that shore. At two o'clock in the afternoon the Beaver was near Sucker Point, with the sawmill in near view, but even there the ice prevented a landing, and back three miles went the steamer to a point about three miles from St. James, where a boat was lowered and the mail and passengers, including four ladies, were landed.

A team was dispatched by the shortest route for conveyance for the ladies and the mail, while the men, piloted by James Donlevy, started out for the three mile walk. One mile of it was through a cedar swamp, another mile was along a "road" that was in use when King Strang was alive, and had never been used since. A mile along the railroad track brought us into St James and the first sight of St. James was enough to wilter the soul and curdle the blood—ice, ice far to the eastward, and a cold northeast wind holding it fast. The Beaver reached her homeport late that night, and the writer of this was a prisoner on the island for nine days—his first sojourn on the island during a period of thirty-eight years, in which he ever saw no more ice. And every day of the nine was a winter-day, with scarce a ray of sunshine, except that which was typified in the warmth of home life and kindness of good friends. It was an experience of a life-time. A northerly gale kept the Beaver in Monday, the day we expected to return and the same gale robbed St. James of its ice, driving it to the Charlevoix shore, leaving the port as effectively as the Japanese did Port Arthur. On Friday, the 12th, along came the steamship Missouri from Chicago, she forced her way in and out again, and in the broken pathways of the Missouri the Beaver broke her blockade again, and arrived in Beaver Harbor at six o'clock in the evening.

Again a northwest gale pounced upon us, and again the Beaver was at the mercy of the icikle elements. Orders arrived and he was packed in as bad as ever, and beyond that a high sea running. Saturday and Sunday the Beaver was tied to the dock, but Monday morning Capt. Campbell determined to reach this shore, if it had to fly Harbor Springs, which, he was advised was open. Well out in the lake the skipper discovered coal smoke at a point which his compass said was Charlevoix and for Charlevoix the course was shaped.

The three mile of ice field seemed impenetrable, but in it, scattered in the piers, was a steamer, which proved to be the Three Brothers, and appropriately following at her heels, as if to snarl and snap at the bigger hulk, was a little tug, which proved to be the fishing tug Pupsuited from Sagatuck. The Three Brothers was the pilot and forced a passage through the ice barrier with a gain of but her length at each charge.

In her wake followed the Beaver, and at two o'clock in the afternoon she was at her dock, just as the Fletcher, lumber laden went out. This was the end of the ice. The strong south-east wind completed the work begun by the steamers, and the following Tuesday morning, the Ottawa arrived from Chicago. Navigation is open. Long live it!

THE CREAMERY.

The Campaign to Open Monday—New Capital Added, and Prospects Bright.

On Monday next the S. L. Produce Company's creamery in this city will open its 1907 season, fully equipped for an energetic campaign and with new blood and new capital added. Written Business, dairymen again for Beaver Harbor. Ice was report on that shore, but Capt. Campbell was advised by cable that fish tugs were passing through it, from the north and east, but on reaching that vicinity it was discovered that a change of wind had closed up the channel.

Thereupon Capt. Campbell headed his boat southward and around the head of the island for a landing at some point on that shore. The Beaver reached her homeport late that night, and the writer of this was a prisoner on the island for nine days—his first sojourn on the island during a period of thirty-eight years, in which he ever saw no more ice. And every day of the nine was a winter-day, with scarce a ray of sunshine, except that which was typified in the warmth of home life and kindness of good friends. It was an experience of a life-time. A northerly gale kept the Beaver in Monday, the day we expected to return and the same gale robbed St. James of its ice, driving it to the Charlevoix shore, leaving the port as effectively as the Japanese did Port Arthur. On Friday, the 12th, along came the steamship Missouri from Chicago, she forced her way in and out again, and in the broken pathways of the Missouri the Beaver broke her blockade again, and arrived in Beaver Harbor at six o'clock in the evening.

Again a northwest gale pounced upon us, and again the Beaver was at the mercy of the icikle elements. Orders arrived and he was packed in as bad as ever, and beyond that a high sea running. Saturday and Sunday the Beaver was tied to the dock, but Monday morning Capt. Campbell determined to reach this shore, if it had to fly Harbor Springs, which, he was advised was open. Well out in the lake the skipper discovered coal smoke at a point which his compass said was Charlevoix and for Charlevoix the course was shaped.

The three mile of ice field seemed impenetrable, but in it, scattered in the piers, was a steamer, which proved to be the Three Brothers, and appropriately following at her heels, as if to snarl and snap at the bigger hulk, was a little tug, which proved to be the fishing tug Pupsuited from Sagatuck. The Three Brothers was the pilot and forced a passage through the ice barrier with a gain of but her length at each charge.

OHIO WILL MYSTERY.

GEN. REILLY'S LAST TESTAMENT CANNOT BE FOUND.

If Careful Search Fails to Bring It to Light Large Property Will Descend to Stepson—New York Car Barns Burn.

Every conceivable hiding place called for mention in the last testament of the late James W. Reilly of Walbridge, ohio, and a search which thousands of his friends participated in for nearly $25,000 had not yet brought to light the document which gives the superintendent of streets, Glen Reilly, who was appointed executor of his father's estate, sole and title will of which he died in March last. The estate is valued at from $40,000 to $50,000. It is alleged by some that a will was made by Mr. Reilly in which he left a large sum of money to the Catholic church, of which he was a member, and that the will was destroyed by the executor, who is the only person who knows the whereabouts of the document, or at least who has had access to it since the death of the testator. Mr. Reilly's will was drawn by Attorney Charles Fassett, who died a few weeks after the testator, and Mr. Fassett is said to have stated that the document was in his possession. Mr. Reilly's will was drawn in 1896, and it is said that it was the first one he had made since the death of his wife, which occurred in 1893. Mr. Reilly's will was drawn in the presence of Frank J. Cody and Miss Kate Reilly, and it is said that the witnesses to the document have stated that it was in the handwriting of Mr. Reilly

ROAD TO SUCCESS

PUBLICITY IS THE MAIL ORDER MAN'S GREAT WEAPON.

MERCHANTS MUST ADVERTISE.

"Fight Fire with Fire" and the Dollars Now Going Cityward Will Stay in the Home Community.

The merchant who would wage successful warfare against mail-order competition should study mail-order methods. The same tactics that take the dollar out of the home city will keep it at home.

And what are mail order methods?

The keynote of it all lies in finding the most wide-awake, up-to-date advertising. It does not advertise below goods at home only. Then the home merchant press, too, it advertises persistently. It puts its proposition before the public constantly. It recognizes no dull season in its campaign for patronage. It never lies up.

At a gathering in Iowa some time ago a mail-order man explained some of the methods followed by the catalogs of methods. According to this explanation the mail-order house seeks the line of least resistance in its search for business. Whenever the rule that a city in which the merchants are not active advertisers then find customers will find them there. When they find a town in which the intuitive dealer, for example, is afraid to use printer's ink then pay particular attention to the subject of furniture. They are searching for the weakest link in the chain of home defenses.

Something of this is outlined in the conditions the writer saw in a small western station. Intermittent competition should study mail-order methods. The same tactics that take the dollar out of the home city will keep it at home.

And what are mail order methods?

The keynote of it all lies in finding the most wide-awake, up-to-date advertising. It does not advertise below goods at home only. Then the home merchant press, too, it advertises persistently. It puts its proposition before the public constantly.

DOOMED.

By WILLARD MacKENZIE

(CHAPTER XXVI—(Contd.—ed.)

She pressed her hands into her head and there was incipient madness in her eyes, as she sobbed out: "Oh, then why hold my fate in the hands, again? Why not that I may be rather wanderer upon that stream?"

There was not a creter that the villain did not lie to her charge.

"And you could listen to it all!" she said, sadly.

Not without some striking him to the ground.

"Hope—hope—bless you for that!" she cried, frenzied, as the thought that you had still hope. Hope, I would say back had "for" "for" "for" "for" "for" "for" "for" "for" of my vengeance.

"I thought woman!" by my talk of vengeance—I not listened, repeatedly. "Do not—do not—do not—

If the members of the legislature have any doubt as to the wishes of their constituents on the question of providing for the nomination of United States senators by direct vote their doubt must be due to the fact that they have not been reading the republican newspapers of the state. There was lack of agreement between the newspapers as to some phases of the primary election plan, but there is an almost unanimous demand through the republican papers for the privilege of a direct vote by the people in the selection of the party nominee for United States senator.

Some one with industry and ability in that direction has figured out that it would cost the government more than sixteen billion dollars, more than fifteen times the amount of our present national debt, to buy the railroads of the country, with a probability of loss during the first ten years of their ownership, owing to inexperience and political interruption with their management, of more than a hundred million dollars each year. It might not be as bad as this estimate and view of the subject suggests, but it certainly is not promising enough to make it move to government owner ship of railroads desirable.

It is expected that two more bills relating to railroads, in addition to the two cent fare enactment already completed, will be passed at the present legislative session. These two are, the bill creating a state railroad commission with power in the direction of supervision and regulation, and a bill making railroads common carriers of live stock. There is little or no railroad opposition to the first of these bills, and the second should be enacted regardless of opposition. Similar laws are on the statute books of other states. They will of course not be accompanied by impossible or unreasonable requirements, and it is expected that the interests of the railroads themselves as well as of their patrons and all the people will be assisted through the legislative action desired in the direction suggested.

THE LIBRARY.

The Carnegie Proposition Accepted by the Council.

At the regular meeting of the common council Monday evening the Carnegie library proposition was accepted, with the conditions imposed, and the matter was referred to the board of public works for further action.

The conditions upon which the gift was make were that the site be furnished, and ten per cent of the cost of the building ($10,000) be given annually by the city, for maintenance.

The action of the council in accepting the $10,000 gift, insures the library, and as soon as the necessary preliminaries can be arranged, the school board will receive the Carnegie $10,000 check, and the board of public works will proceed with the erection of the library.

The question of the site now naturally arises, and, no doubt, will require some time to settle; but we are confident that a central location will be selected.

County Normal.

The class chaperoned by Miss Himes, visited the fish hatchery on Wednesday of last week. None of the class had ever been there before. They were much interested in the size of the eggs, the manner of counting them, the length of time that elapsed before hatching, size of newly hatched fish, and the planting of the fish.

Ella Meggision, of the class of '05 who teaches in district No. 7, Norwood township, visited the Normal room Thursday afternoon of last week.

Ruth Ekstrom and Lois Crites substituted in the North ward part of a day last Thursday. Miss Manson and Miss Jarvis came over to the Central building to observe a language lesson in the Training room.

WATER RATES.

Charlevoix rates are far lower than the average. To prove this we here give a table of rates. The localities of the several towns will suggest the fairness of the comparison.

Places	6 Rooms Sprinkling	Water Closet	Bath Tub	Horse Stalls
Charlevoix	$9 00	$2 00	$1 00	$2 00

The average given is exclusive of Charlevoix.

Thus it will be seen that Charlevoix people should congratulate themselves instead of complain. We have a model water system, we own it, it pays its own operating expense, and the people get water below the average cost in the state.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the estimate and plans for the paving of Antrim street in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, from the west line of Bridge street west to the corporation line, have been deposited and are now on file with the city clerk for public examination at his office. The council will meet to consider any objections thereto on Monday the 29th day of April, A. D. 1907, at the hour of 7:30 p. m. at the council chambers in the City of Charlevoix. The cost to be assessed for the cost of said paving consists of all lots and parts of lots fronting and abutting on Antrim street west to the east line of Rose street and on the south side of Antrim street from the west line of Bridge street west to the corporation line.

The Ladies Missionary society will meet with Mrs. John Hull Friday afternoon of this week. Subject, "Mormonism." Leader Miss Rodger.

Revivals at M. E. Church.

The meetings at the Methodist church continue to grow with intense interest. Last Sunday was a great day. At the 9:30 a. m. service a great crowd came together and opened the day's work with an ideal class meeting, every one present taking a part. At 10:30 Mr. Reed spoke with great force on the subject of "True Deetpleship." Several came forward desiring to live right with God and nearly fifty stood and testified that they had been saved during the meetings. A large number were received into the church.

In the afternoon a men's meeting was held at 3 o'clock, addressed by Mr. Colegrove, deep conviction rested on the men, and some took a decided stand for a Christian life. The feeling among the men was the most cordial, and a permanent men's Christian organization is now very strongly talked of.

At the same hour Mr. Reed spoke to women at the Congregational church, which meeting netted most gratifying results in the conversion of many women.

In the evening five hundred people gathered and filled the church to its doors. This was to have been the last and closing service but the interest was so high, and when a dozen adults came forward seeking prayer for their salvation, the congregation rose en mass inviting the evangelists to remain another week.

There will be meetings each night this week at the usual hour and each afternoon at 2:30. In addition to this Mr. Colgrove will conduct a Bible study class at 6:45 each evening. People desiring this opportunity are requested to be present promptly on time, as the time will be very limited.

On Sunday the services will be as follows:

9:30 a. m., Love Feast and Praise meeting.

10:30, preaching by Mr. Reed, "An Ideal Life."

12:00, Sunday School.

2:30 p. m., Converts' meeting, addressed by Mr. Colgrove.

4:00 p. m., Men's meeting, addressed by Mr. Reed.

6:30, League meeting.

7:30, Sowing and Reaping, farewell meeting.

Mr. Reed goes from Charlevoix to Fennville, Mich., where he will spend ten days in stirring that community.

Mr. Colegrove returns to his work in Grand Rapids. These men carry with them the sweet memories of the generous hospitality of the Charlevoix friends.

Bitten by a Spider.

Through blood poisoning caused by a spider bite, John Washington of Bosqueville, Tex., would have lost his leg, which became as a mass of running sores, had he not been persuaded to try Bucklen's Arnica Salve. He writes: "The first application relieved, and four boxes healed all the sores." Heal every sore. 25c. at F. G. Hines & Co. druggist.

Pecan Orchards in the South.

"Just as the people of the north eat peanuts in great quantities so do the people of the south eat pecans," remarked Allan Dupre, a merchant of New Orleans. "On the streets of New Orleans are many venders who sell them in all sorts of ways—shelled, unshelled and in candy form. Peanuts are sold, too, but pecans have a far greater sale.

"To meet the demand for them, which is growing, pecan orchards are now being laid out in the bottom lands of the far south. When old timber is cut down pecan trees are planted. Many pecan orchards are gradually growing up. They are of slow growth, requiring about 15 or 20 years to reach maturity, but they are profitable. The main supply comes from Mexico, some 60 carloads of shelled pecans being shipped from there every year, for the most part to be consumed in the south, but in a decade the main supply will come from the southern states, which will thus gain a new industry."

A Busted Illusion.

One of our customers writing from Lima, Ohio says: "I am now frank to confess after having the opportunity to visit some of the factories in Chicago and elsewhere, where they make the Rugs from old carpets, that conducting a "Sanitary Factory" as you advertise is a point well taken after seeing how careful you were in preserving clean surroundings for your workmen and work during the summers I have spent at Petoskey. In Chicago especially filth and dirt reign supreme and half paid weavers work on in an atmosphere laden with germs of Scarlet Fever, Diptheria, Small Pox, and Consumption, which in turn are woven into the Rugs. I often wonder if mothers give this a thought when sending Rug orders away through agents that possibly they are bringing into the home terrible germs to take away loved ones. You certainly deserve the patronage of thinking people and all I can do shall be very gladly done."

Gentlemen:

Mr. ——President of a cotton-mill at Union, S. C—he don't want to see his name in print—had two offers of 500 gallons of paint; $1.30 and $1.25. Took the $1.25 and got skinned. He'd have got three-quarters skinned if he'd taken the other.

The $1.30 was full gallon; the $1.25 was 18 percent short. The full measure paint was adulterated 40 per cent, the short measure paint was adulterated per cent, besides benzine in the oil, don't know how much.

Devoe lead and zinc wasn't sold in the town then.

It don't pay to monkey with paint. Devoe costs less than any of 'em; not by the gallon, of course; by the house and year. That's how to reckon it. Go by the name.

—Lots of fine singing, dancing and music together with a great play every night during the engagement of Morgan's Comedians, which are heralded for three nights April 29, at Charlevoix Theatre. The opening play will be "In Dixie Land". The prices are 10, 20, 30. Ladies free Monday night.

—The lightships for Gray's Reef, Lansing Shoal and White Shoal, came in Thursday afternoon, leaving Friday morning for their several stations. They wintered at Sturgeon Bay, where they were overhauled. The tender Sumac towed them as far as the Manitous, from whence they came with their own power. The Sumac arrived Friday and loaded the gas buoys for the shoals, leaving Saturday.

—The steam barge Arcadia which left Manistee at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of April 13 for Two Rivers with a cargo of hardwood has undoubtedly been lost on Lake Michigan with his captain and owner, Harry May, and 14 others aboard. Marine men here have given her up as lost and it is generally supposed her wrecking was caused by a boiler explosion. Some hold the theory that she went down in the storm of the 14th.

—The local Pere Marquette passengers offices have received notice that the Sunday excursion season opens on April 28th, this year. It was thought for some time that the new 2-cent rate would cut out these popular excursions, but this notice does not seem to indicate anything of that kind.

—Editor W. E. Campbell, of the Northport Leader, has launched a magazine under the title of "The Great Lakes Fisherman," as the official organ of the Lake Michigan Fishermen's Association. It will be published monthly. It is a neat little book, of 24 pages, and the number before us shows it to be a credit to both Campbell and the fishermen.

—The fine gasoline boat Pickerel, recently bought at Muskegon by Capt. Geo. Weaver and C. E. Torrell, arrived Sunday, most of the way having made twelve miles per hour in a head sea. The Pickerel is a handsome boat 71 feet long, and is driven by a 120 horse power triple expansion gasoline engine. She is hauled out and will have a cabin built and other improvements made. Her owners expect to have her in the water again in a week, and will run her twice a day on the East Jordon route.

—Jaspar Shaygonby, an Indian living near Carpenter, was locked up in the jail last night and arraigned before Justice Krieger this morning on a drunk and disorderly charge. A $6 fine was assessed to him, but he did not have the money, so was taken to Harbor Springs on a ten day sentence.—Petoskey News. It is a contemptible shame. That Injun was a friend of ours thirty five years ago, when the noble red man never got drunk except when a steamboat "wooded up," and that was twice a week. Jasper was a very industrious Indian at the wood pile, but the price of one drunk—fifty cents—he has owed the editor of this paper more than thirty years, as borrowed money.

—Governor Warner has designated Friday, May 3d as "Arbor Day" by proclamation, in which he says: The reason why this day should be observed by planting trees, vines and shrubs appeal to every home-loving citizen of Michigan. It is not given to all to own a portion of the soil from which comes the sustenance for all and it is the duty of those who do to make more attractive and beautiful that rich heritage Michigan's pioneers redeemed from the wilderness. By planting trees about the homes and along the highways this can be done. Not alone in the family or school Arbor Day be celebrated and our observed. Those in charge of public schools can and should arrange a program of exercises for this day that will impress upon the minds of our youth the duty we owe ourselves and posterity. We should leave this earth more beautiful than we found it. By planting and caring for the trees we are making our homes more beautiful, our State more attractive and utilizing one of God's best gifts to his children.

The genial, jolly good friend, "Jack" Kirkpatrick, who has been ill so long, is still very low at his home, with very little chance of recovery.

—There will be a box social and good program given at the Johnson school Thursday evening, May 2, for the benefit of the school library. Every body come and have a good time.

—Engineer Davidson and family, of the sugar factory, arrived from St. St. Louis, Mich., last week. Mr. Davidson, with several assistants, will be employed during the summer in overhauling the machinery of the big plant.

—The school board request all who have library books to return them by Saturday of this week. The board has employed Miss Wait, of Traverse City, to introduce a new card system and she will be here Monday to begin the work. Therefore all books must be in.

—Boyne Citizen: J. D. Parrish of Charlevoix, who has been in the grocery business at the latter place a long time, has decided to cast his lot with Boyne City, and has leased the Parmelee building on East Main street and will move his stock of groceries into that place.

—The new owner of the Nettleton property on Dixon avenue is here and on Tuesday morning began work with a force of men on improvements that will make the place one of the finest resort homes in Northern Michigan. The plans include an enlargement of the house and much landscape work.

—Those enjoying good singing, dancing and a great play will find plenty of it during the engagement of Morgan's Comedians, which company opens at the Charlevoix Theatre for three nights commencing April 29th. The company includes 14 people, they present all new plays and high class specialties between each and every act. The opening play will be "In Dixie Land." Prices 10c, 20c, 30c. Ladies free Monday night.

—Petoskey News: There will be a change made in the time table of the Pere Marquette trains in the near future, the exact particulars of which are not known yet. It is said that the early morning train will leave about 8.40 instead of 7 o'clock, as has been the case for the past several months, while the afternoon train leaving here at 2 o'clock will leave about 2.40. The trains coming in will arrive about the same time that has been the custom. This change will make the service better for the long trips, but will not improve the local train service better for the long trips, but will not improve the local train service between here and Traverse City.

—The next pretty schoolmarm who violates her contract will get into trouble. So many complaints have come in to the department of public instruction because of teachers who make a contract with one school board seem to feel free to jump the contract as soon as they are offered more pay somewhere else, that Rep. Perry of Osceola introduced a drastic bill which has been reported by the committee on education. The bill provides that any contract made by a teacher covering a term for any part of which he or she is already under contract, shall be void and no school money shall be paid on one contract made in violation of another. The department of public instruction is given authority to suspend or revoke the certificate of any teacher who has violated his or her contract.

—Sawtelle (Cal.) Sentinel: The daintiest social event of the season was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Mudge last Tuesday evening, to commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of their wedding. The house was a mass of choice cut flowers and a wedding bell of white geraniums and symlax was suspended like a pendulum from above the entrance to the dining room. Ninety invitations were issued and none failed to attend; the scene was one of general merriment. After the refreshments which were served, Mrs. Hughes, president of the W. C. T. U. performed the ceremony. Afterthe Rev. Hunter made a few remarks upon the long years of wedded happiness. Miss Pearl Hitz, from Michigan, gave an address and the remainder of the evening was spent in music by Messrs. Arthur Hudson and Will Clark, Miss Alice Atchinson, Mrs. W. Kipp, Mrs. Wm. Clark and others, all of whom were heartily encored. The Loyal Legion gave a nice little program of music and readings, after which the presentation of a large wicker rocker by the W. C. T. U. and I. O. G. T. took place.

—Dan Shannon will "convert" Petoskey May 19th. Good!

—Six inches of snow on the ground here this morning. Weather moderate.

—Mrs. J. A. Hawkins, who has been quite ill the past three weeks is still confined to her bed.

—Geo. H. Hoskyn, the well known dramatic director, is in town, and talks of putting on another play with local talent.

—Special communication of Charlevoix Lodge No. 282 F. & A. M. next Tuesday evening, to look over plans of the Masonic Temple. By order of W. M.

—Messrs Ott and Germaine, of Traverse City, went to Beaver Island Wednesday. Mr. Ott, who is a Traverse City lumberman, is negotiating for the purchase of the lumbering interests of the Beaver Island Lumber Co. at St. James. This firm already have quite extensive timber holdings on the island, and, if the deal is perfected, which is quite likely, they propose to improve and enlarge the plant. It is understood that a factory for the manufacture of spindles and other small wooden articles will be started, and an extensive industry established. The island still abound in timber of excellent quality, and there is a good opening for just this character of industrial enterprise.

—Michigan Hibernian: Bro. Patrick Powell, first officer of the United States lighthouse tender Sumac, and brother of Michael Powers, of Division No. 1, of Wayne, was in Detroit last month on his vacation and incidentally brought with him another big fish story from Beaver Island. Listen to him: "In a big haul of fish taken by Bros. McCann and Gallagher on the 27th of November—which, by the way, amounted to about 60,000 pounds—there was one fish of a particularly striking green tint that had a mark like A. O. H. on it. This is vouched for by both the fishermen, who also claim to be able to trace the name Gallagher in the scales. The whole of Beaver Island is puzzled to know whether the fish came from salt water through the rivers, or was bred in Old Kentucky—I mean Lake Michigan."

—"Jacko" is dead! Jacko, the famous Indian of the "1st Michigan Sharpshooters, 2d Division, 9th Corps," as he was fond of telling everybody, has gone to the happy hunting grounds. He was well known in Charlevoix. He was a $12 pensioner, and a member of the G. A. R., but was very fond of firewater. Jacko died at an Indian lumber camp. The Boyne Citizen gives the following particulars: "He had been complaining last week of feeling sick and indications point to the fact that he was suffering from Pneumonia. The last time he was about the camp was Saturday afternoon, when he went to the "shack" of David Paul and went to bed. He stayed in this "shack" all Sunday, and last night Paul went to bed in the same bunk with him. This morning he lay with his feet across Paul, when the latter got up to go to work, and he noticed nothing peculiar in him. Later he called at the "shack" again and discovered that Jacko was dead."

The Nessen Raised.

The steambarge Nessen, which was sunk by ice near Holy Island, in South Arm about ten days ago, was raised yesterday noon, and towed to this port.

She will make temporary repairs here and proceed today or tomorrow.

The submarine work was done by Frank J. Huges, of Manistee, assisted by Archie Beauvais of Muskegon. After the holes in the hull were patched, a heavy canvas jacket was fastened around the boat from the fender strake to the surface. Then two powerful pumps were set at work. She came to the surface easily.

Common Council.

At the council meeting Monday evening Henry Marshall was awarded the contract of completing the Antrim street sewer.

The druggist bond of F. G. Hines & Co., with B. W. Miller and W. H. Miller as sureties, was approved.

The saloon bonds were laid over one week.

Elmer Johnson was given the bridge tending contract for the ensuing year at $9.60.

A petition signed by 70 citizens, praying the council to fix saloon bonds at $5,000 was presented and referred. Another petition with 100 names asked that stockades or board fences be removed from the rear of saloons.

MACCABEE DAY.

Preparations Being Made for the Big Northern Michigan Gathering at Charlevoix June 21st.

Dr. L. B. Bartlett, President, and H. Lee Idding, Secretary, have begun the campaign of preparation for the gathering in Charlevoix, June 21st, of the Northwestern Association of Michigan, of the modern Knights and Ladies of the Maccabees and it is the purpose of the Charlevoix Knights to make the event a grand success.

June 21st, 1900, was the last time the association met here, and it was a success, notwithstanding the fact that there was a steady downpour of rain all day. With good weather the Charlevoix gathering this year will be made a day long to be remembered.

The territory embraced in this association takes in everything from Cadillac north in this peninsula. This being the fact, it takes in Hon. Perry Powers, one of the brighest stars in the Maccabee firmament. Mr. Powers will be here, together with many others, not only in the Northwestern Association, but from other parts of Michigan.

Not only distinguished Knights will be here, but leading officers and members of the Ladies branch of the Order, and speakers of prominince will deliver addresses. No effort will be spared to make the gathering one of the notable on record.

The date is most favorable. While Charlevoix will be in her most attractive summer dress, and Dame Nature will have donned her summer attire, the resort season will not have begun, so that our hotels will be able to care for all that come.

Prepare now to come to Charlevoix June 21st.

Death of Robert J. McNeill.

Robert J. McNeill died at his north side home on Thursday morning, after a long and painful illness. The particulars of his illness have been given in these columns

Mr. McNeill was 51 years of age. He was born in the city of New York, coming with his parents to Michigan when he was ten years of age. His parents were pioneers of Banks, Antrim county, having located on a homestead there in 1867. Subsequently they removed to Marion, where they lived for some years.

Deceased was for many years in the employ of large Chicago concerns operating in lumber and cedar in the upper peninsula, most of the time as resident manager, and there were very few men who were more expert timber estimators and inspectors than he.

Besides a wife he leaves a son and daughter,—E. L. McNeill, of Chicago, and Miss Belle McNeill, of this city. Few men had more friends than "Bob," and few were more worthy of them in respect of true heart qualities.

The funeral was from the house Saturday afternoon, under the auspices of Charlevoix lodge No. 282, F. & A. M., of which he had been a member many years.

Prospects of Big Resort Season.

Indications point to the biggest resort season this year that Charlevoix has ever enjoyed. We presume this is true of all other Northern Michigan resorts, but we have a sort of instinctive feeling that Charlevoix is the favorite in the field.

Never before have cottages and rooms been in so great demand, and never have rents been so firm, no terms more readily accepted. About every available house and cottage is already taken at good figures.

There is great activity also in the way of improvement of resort property, and mechanics are on the jump to complete their work before the arrival of owners.

Hotels all report large reservations, and the private boarding houses expect to all be filled.

DOOMED.

"I do not believe I could settle down to an occupation of an English country gentleman's life," he said. "Besides, after the concert of London, one an always thinks of much thoughts when they leave."

The day on the Strand he met Jermane, who was most cordially received by the latter. Jermane had seemed to take upon the gay artist an hold several million hours spent in Kensington with which friend, friend, friend, friendship, and his ruling their fates.

In the course of conversation the name of Clemence was mentioned, and Arthur learned that that gentleman was now in Scotland on a disgraceful hunting excursion on the lonely moors, and that he will not this country, in the Continent for the second of foreign settlement.

It was in the spring of Monte. A glorious morning, promising the sun a bright, cloudless, almost cloudless, and a better in the Mediterranean. Arthur Jermane, in the pleasure of our acquaintance, of the Hotel Cecil, where he was now to be a long, serious swim, and Clemence, a remarkable figure, thoroughly upset the landscape. He had thought to see with the objects under him, with his mind, concentrated upon work, absorbed in the gaiety. He had in his mind's Strathdene at Balmoral and the Moss Kerr Lodge, and to finish the morning of the strange revelations disclosed by Clemence, and the death of the poor, awful, unmerciful, unthinking of his death-bed. Jermane was in no mood for the pleasures of a close, crowded, fashionable place, and he wondered how some of the people he knew could be so blind as to be seen in such a place. He had seen the beautiful Duchess of Dunbar, and the Duke of Dunbar, and the Duke of Dunbar, and the Duke

CASE OF A MAIL-ORDER BUGGY

The Purchaser Was Ashamed to Use It and Sold It to His Hired Man—It Pays to Buy at Home.

(Copyright, by Alfred C. Clark.)

The Hart End of London is an example of what the city does for humanity in creating poverty, misery, disease, drunkenness and crime. Jeff Ferson was right when he said: "Great cities are great sores upon the body politic." Is it any wonder that lovers of their kind are horror-stricken at the grinding of these parasitic cells whose grist is the bodies and souls of men?

But there is another movement connected with this current setting cityward which, like it, is full of grave menace to the welfare of humanity. This is the drift out now traveling thousands of villages and towns. It is not lack of capital or business energy in the towns, or discrimination in freights or exhaustion of the soil in the surrounding country that is bringing about this change, but a new and dangerous form of competition, and the caprices of those who buy decide into these towns and you will find them at a standstill or going backward. Inquire of their business men or commercial travelers and you will learn that business is not as good as formerly and that the prospect is for a continued shrinkage in trade. As observant commercial traveler said to the writer: "I believe the day of the village and town is over. The big fish are everywhere eating up the little fish. A few small lines of business that cannot be done by mail, such as barbering, blacksmithing or the selling of soft drinks and ice cream may survive, but such lines of trade cannot sustain a decent town." The cause of this widespread loss of business is the aggressive and destructive competition of the catalogue houses in the big cities. It has been possible for 40 years or more to buy of some house in the cities. If one felt that the merchants of his town were not acting too much profit, but the effect of the mail order houses is to say the results altogether to a new thing the growth of the past few years. Starting with a few lines of trade, this form of competition has come to cover almost everything that can be sold in a country town and it is even asserted that a savings bank department is to be added by one of the catalogue houses.

The claim that the mail order houses of Chicago are doing an annual business of over $200,000,000 seems large, but one house alone has sold goods to the amount of $70,000,000 in the past six months and is now contemplating a new plan to increase its enormous business by selling shares of stock to thousands of people in the hope of making them regular customers.

The skillfully worded advertisement and the big catalogue, with its pictures of articles in a hundred lines of trade, are very alluring to buyers, most of whom are not familiar with prices and qualities. Some of the articles below the usual prices are of an inferior quality, while the average price is usually fully up to what would be paid to the home dealer. As was shown last winter in a speech in congress, articles for the mail order trade are often misbranded on the request of the mail order people with deliberate intent to deceive. One of the instances given by this congressman was of some thousands of flocer rings stamped "fourteen carats" when they were in reality only ten.

The buyer who orders from his catalogue, or from an advertisement, "does not see the articles till they come and is often disappointed in the quality of the most of them, but there is no redress as there would be if he bought at home. He does not like to send back for he is disappointed, so he makes the best of it and tries to persuade himself that he has saved money. In many instances he is not well enough informed in values to know that he could have bought as cheaply and selected much more satisfactorily at home. On a rural route with which I am familiar and over which most of the incoming letters are from mail order houses and the outgoing ones carry back money orders, lives a friend of mine who bought a watch from the catalogue at what he considered a rare bargain. The watch came, to be sure, but it did not go, that is at the right speed, and, enough money enough was spent on it to bring the price up to a good figure. It was no better as a timekeeper than that famous watch of Capt. Cuttle's. Another friend bought a buggy at $35 and was elated over his purchase until it came and he saw that the top was a very ordinary article of oil cloth, instead of leather, and he was so ashamed of it that he sold it at a loss to his hired man and bought a better one at a neighboring town. A lady and her two daughters bought alone from the catalogue and when asked why they had trouble with their feet said it was because of ill-fitting shoes. But such instances of the bad effects of buying "sight unseen" are daily occurring all over the country. It is only natural and inevitable that such things should happen.

Let us see what will be the effect of this formidable diversion of trade, if carried to its logical conclusion. Nearly all the business houses of the smaller towns will become bankrupt, the value of town property will decline, churches and schools will receive a feeble support and the towns, instead of being centers of business and social activity, will almost cease to exist. The country in general will become the mere portion of the south where the large plantations, by getting their supplies in the cities, have kept the neighboring towns down to the cross-roads type—dreary, impalpable little places of a half dozen ramshackle houses. The evil effects of this loss of trade and destruction of the value of town property will react upon the value of farm property by cutting off the home market. They will add to the taxes on lands by reducing taxable values in the towns. Surely it is not to the interest of anybody except the thieves engaged in carrying on the mail order business, to see the towns and villages fall into decay. A live town is not only of value to the lands surrounding it, but its well stocked business houses are a convenience and a benefit to the buyer. Even if money could be saved long run, be saved by ordering everything from the city, the inconvenience and uncertainty of it would always make such shopping unsatisfactory. Ordering from a catalogue is a long in the dark, except in the case of a few articles whose color, shape and quality are always the same.

To the man who can schedule look on both sides of the question and who can put himself in the place of "the other fellow" there is no room for doubt. It is best from mere whim, or even for a certainty of saving from one to two dollars on a purchase to turn the back on the old, convenient ways of doing business and to do my part toward ruining the business of my neighbors and friends, and of destroying the value of property in the town where my friends live.

A few days ago Jessie came in, weeping, with the usual cry of "Papa, mamma wouldn't let Alexander, and I want him, and she won't give him to me!" Did you ask her how kindly, my sun?" Yes, papa." "Well, suppose you go back and try again. Ask her pleasantly if she will give Alexander to you." "I will, papa." "Then, if she does not, come to me, and I will see what I can do." Jessie went, and in a few minutes the father from the door was heard into his study to wheedling and coaxing, for "God's sake, let me take them almost!"

MAIL ORDER EVIL

ITS RISE IS NOT THE RESULT OF LEGITIMATE DEMAND.

DUE ENTIRELY TO GREED

And It Feeds Upon the Prosperity of the Country Towns—A Menace to the Nation.

(Copyrighted, 1906, by Alfred C. Clark.)

As the years go by we are more and more brought face to face with the vital question of trading at home. During the last decade the habit of buying goods abroad has grown to such proportions that the country merchant now well feel alarmed at the probable outcome unless something is done to forestall the great calamity which will ensue.

Trade conditions 50 years ago were satisfactory. At that time catalogue houses were entirely unknown and country merchants were "monarchs of all they survyed," so to speak, in the lines represented, and the people were prosperous and happy. Perhaps not so much because they generally had money enough to meet their wants, but because of the contentment that prevailed throughout the country at that time. The farmers raised good crops, generally, and received good prices for what they had to sell. They sold their surplus stuff to the local merchant and bought what they wanted; and this was the height of their happiness, hence the contentment that prevailed.

But in later years, when cities grew and trade expanded, the merchants of these cities saw that they could vent with conditions of trade, devised plans by which they might reach out for more customers. Advertising in the newspapers being a cheap way of "getting the merits of their goods before the people, this plan appealed to them and it was adopted. At first it was operated on a small scale, then, as the merchant saw the opportunity for increasing his gain, the scale of advertising fund. And so it has continued until today millions of dollars are annually sent to mail order houses by the people of the United States.

The best and most effective way to throttle the catalogue house has been to organize associations in the small country merchants for several years past, some success has attended such some another. There are several plans which might be presented to induce the farmer to buy at home. In the first place his pride might be appealed to. Those who carry few farmers who own their own farms but that would be interesting and inspiring to the city locality. He realizes the fact that if his farm is to be valuable it must be farmed in the most scientific manner and all hobbies, forsooth, etc., must be kept in the best possible shape, and above all the farm must be located not too far from some good town, for we all know that farm land within a reasonable distance from a town is some good town or village. It is not hard to get the farmer to realize this, for if he ever sold any farm land or cried to sell any, he knows this to be a fact. Well, then, after he has realized this fact, the thing for him to do is to patronize his home merchants and business men, so they may be able to build and maintain a good town.

Public schools are much better in the towns than in the country for the reason that where the population is dense, there is more taxable property to the amount of territory covered. Hence there is more money collected for school purposes, and as a result more and better teachers are employed. Another thing of the highest importance to the farmer, as most farmers who are of any importance in their profession are interested in getting their boys and girls a good education. And right here is where the good town proposition comes to him with great force. He has to pay board for his children in the village school at a great deal less expense than to send them away to college, and, but in most cases better results are obtained.

If the farmer seriously desires all these good things he must of necessity help to build them. Let him understand that he is one of the main spokes in the great wheel of commerce in his vicinity and that he can be of no small service to himself by purchasing even the smallest item of merchandise, though it may seem to him that he is saving a few cents by doing so.

It seems that it could be easily proved can be him that if there was no town near him and he had to drive 20 or 30 miles to take his produce to market and haul his groceries the same distance home, he could easily see that his land would greatly depreciate in value and the disadvantages he would encounter on every hand would be very disastrous to his time and he would gladly spend his money at home to divert this calamity.

One of the most potent levers with which to control trade in country localities is the liberal use of printers' ink, coupled with intelligence in advertising the wares of the merchant. The catalogue houses employ the best talent obtainable to write their advertisements and spend large sums of money in this way. Besides advertising judiciously their advertise on a large scale and consequently get the business. The old saying that "You can't hit the devil with five" will apply in this case. The home merchant must advertise the most do more than say: "Come to Smith's to trade, cheapest place on earth." He must describe his merchandise as he would in private conversation over the counter to a customer, and then quote the price. This will nearly always act as a clincher and will at least cut him on a standoff with the catalogue house. In fact it will give him an advantage over the catalogue house, for in almost every case he can sell the same grade of merchandise cheaper than the catalogue house can sell it. This is not mere theory but a statement of fact. For the reason that the country merchant's business is operated at a very much less expense than that of the mail order merchant. There are a thousand and one items of expense which the city merchant has to meet that are entirely unknown to the country merchant.

The time is rapidly approaching when people who patronize mail order houses will be looked upon as "mossbacks" by the best and influential citizens of all commercial centers and will be shunned as their bane.

Cities and towns are built by combined efforts of the residents thereof; hence it is, for instance, that no city churches and schoolhouses built. It is well known that in many instances eastern capital has been employed to make improvements in the west, but always with good round interest to the lender of the money. No one ever heard of a case where an eastern capitalist or firm contributed to western enterprise for the fun of the thing. Nor did you ever hear of a case where any mail order or catalogue house ever contributed to any church building fund. Nor yet did they ever build or help to build any of our schoolhouses. You never heard of a case of this kind and you never will. All these eastern sharks care for is your dollar, and you know it, and when they have gotten that they have no more use for you. Then why should you patronize them? You can go to your home merchant any day in the year and if you are short of change he will extend you credit. If you are sick and unable to work the home merchant will see that your family is provisioned until you get on your feet again. He will do all of this and at the same time furnish the same grade of goods at the same or even at a less price. Will the catalogue merchant do this?

J. P. BELL.

All the Particulars.

French conversation will be full of following reports in his superior officer of the cavalry: "Sir, we galloped after that at two-twelve in the morning he passed in such a street and we saw a light in the house and we saw a man in breathing glasses. He was reading the last part of their book and the two rung by the sound of their voice which was the sound of the sea and which adapt the modulation of the voice to any and know nothing about it."

Taking a Wrong View.

How many take a wrong view of life, and waste their nervous system in unnecessary and unnecessary worry without thinking of the present happiness they are throwing away. It is a well to be honest that makes a man happy. Many of the most wretchedness on earth have been that it is a radiant, sunny spirit which knows how to deal with trials and enjoy its comforts, and then extract happiness from every incident in life.—The Christian World.

The mail-order habit will cut the limb of local prosperity from the tree of national life and drop you and your community into the bottomless pit of business stagnation. Are you wielding the saw that means certain disaster to you and your community?

Are you, Mr. Resident of This Community, feeding to the mail order hog the dollars of this community? Are you pouring the money that should stay in the home town into the trough from which the gluttonous hogs of the city feed? If so you are doing not only the town, but yourself, an irreparable injury, and one that you should stop at once.

Boyne City is agitating the race track question.

A meeting of the highway commissioner of the several townships of Antrim county was held at Bellaire, the past winter, and a motion to adopt the county road system was adopted with only three dissenting votes.

Mancelona probably has the best roads of any township in Antrim county. During the past five years this county has raised over $25,000 for the building and improvement of its roads.

Five in the Petoskey Block and Manufacturing company plant on Friday night last, was discovered in the dry kiln, which was destroyed with a large amount of lumber. The factory was saved, but building and machinery were damaged. The loss is $10,000 to $12,000, insured. Next to the paper mill this was Petoskey's largest manufacturing plant and the loss will be severely felt. H. S. Hall of Traverse City is president, and C. H. Brennan of Petoskey manager of the company.

Press dispatches from Washington, mentioning appropriations for river and harbor improvements mentions one case as follows: At Petoskey harbor an addition will be built on the breakwater. The addition will be 100 feet in length, the estimated cost being $17,500, the full amount of the appropriation made at the last session of congress. There is also available for the Petoskey harbor $2,162.56, which is to be expended in repairing the stone shore arm of the breakwater. Thus Petoskey will take another step forward in its ambition to provide a harbor which will compete with the one natural harbor of its old rival, Harbor Springs.

Traverse City Record: W. L. Brown of this city had a rather exciting experience while traveling out of East Jordan Wednesday in which the coach he was riding in turned over but the passenger luckily escaped injury. The train was mixed, the coach being behind seven box cars. Suddenly the cars ahead jumped the track and began bumping along over the ties. Mr. Brown called out to the other passengers to brace themselves just before the coach left the rails. The cars ahead piled up and the car with the people in it went into the ditch, turning over on its side. The impact threw the stove against the door and otherwise damaged the car which caught fire. The stove had to be piled away with a crew axe before the people could get out. Luckily no one was more than generally shaken up and slightly bruised.

Class Spirit.

To the Sentinel.

Prof. Woodley some time ago made a statement to the effect that there ought to be more class spirit in the High School then shown at that time. Some of the classes evidently took it to heart, for in the last two weeks there have been things going, so to speak. The Senior class started it by jumping on the back of one of the Junior boys in the dark and taking him for a ride, he was driven about a mile and a half in the country then left to walk home. On another occasion another Junior was locked in a house but managed very easily to climbed out of a window. After this the Junior boys thought it time to have some fun also, so they went over to the home of Mr Kane, and as Forest Kane and Ned Mayne were the only occupants of the house they were very easily enticed to join the happy throng. After blindfolding them they were taken about two miles in the woods and tied firmly to a large tree then their pictures were taken. The Seniors were very angry over the way they had been treated and entered the studio and swiped the films and punched holes in them but the culprit was brought down from the high perch which he had attained by being compelled to give back the films (which he thought destroyed) and to apologize to the Juniors for his misdeed. The pictures however were patched up and made very good pictures When the Seniors saw them they didn't know what to think about it. On another night Lee Scrogge caught upon the porch of a lady friend and left until she should untie him.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

Gaylord Hotel, April 15th, 1907.

Council met in regular session, Mayor Armstrong presiding. Aldermen present were 1st ward Wilcox, Merriam; 2d ward Cameron, Fowler; 3d ward Webster and Ward.

The minutes of April 10th were read and approved.

A communication was received from the board of education advising the council that a special school meeting the electors of school district No 11 had voted to accept the offer of Andrew Carnegie for a free library.

The following resolution was presented:

RESOLUTION.

Whereas at a public meeting called by Mayor Billings, a German committee was appointed to investigate as to the possibility of securing a donation of a free library from Andrew Carnegie to erect a free public library building in our city. And whereas, said committee has been duly organized as the council, thinks for, accepts and acts upon, the suggestion of said committee, and whereas, it is apparent meaning of the election of school District No One that there existed the idea of securing such a free library. Now, therefore, be it resolved by the common council of the City of Charlevoix, that this body, as persons in willingness to accept the gift of ten thousand dollars from Mr Andrew Carnegie, for the purpose of erecting a free library building. It being understood that this proposal does not commit nor control over the library board under the provisions of our City charter, but accepts it to be managed by the board of trustees of said library board, of Education representing School District No. one, which organization has already been duly organized and qualified, and that we pledge that action, wherein the board pledges the sum of one thousand dollars to be expended annually for maintenance of such a library, when completed. Resolved further, that the City Clerk be and is hereby instructed to forward a copy thereof acknowledgment to the person whom received, and that the Mayor be instructed to appoint a committee of the board, and that this body pledges itself to carry out the provisions extensibly to Mr. Carnegie etc. Be one that the money is accepted, organized but not control over to the board of Education, and that the money for the purpose intended, that when completed the building is formally turned over to the board of Education for library purposes, we pledge the support of the city charter, and the support of this body, and that the board, pledges financial responsibility, and that the site for the building is to be provided free of charge to the city or district. Dated this 15th day of April, 1907.

The clerk is hereby directed to forward a certified copy of this resolution to Andrew Carnegie or his representative, and the same with the board of Education.

The above resolution was adopted by aye and nay vote as follows: Aye Al-dermen Wilbur, Merriam, Cameron and Ward. Nay Fowler, Webster.

Moved by Cameron that the chairman of the committee on streets, sidewalks and bridge be instructed to enter into a contract with Elmer Johnson, to swing the bridge for the ensuing year which motion prevailed.

A communication was received from Geo. A. McCutcheon in reference to public printing which was referred to the committee on license and printing.

Moved by Alderman Wilbur that the committee on streets and sidewalks be instructed to make the necessary repairs at the crushing plant, according to the plans prepared by Alderman Ward which motion prevailed.

Moved that the committee on streets and sidewalks be authorized to employ Hartwell and Hartwell to sink a well at the plant of the stone crusher to a depth not exceeding 75 feet said well to be 8 inches in diameter upon the following terms if a sufficient supply of water is reached at 75 feet or at a lesser depth. Said Hartwell and Hartwell are to receive as their compensation for said well complete without pump $1 50 per foot; if water is not reached at a depth of 75 feet said Hartwell and are to receive only their actual expenses and outlays which motion prevailed by Aye and Nay vote as follows: Ayes 3d.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Letter to Mrs. M. Young.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Madam: Your business is, when a house burns down, to give the owner some money to build a new one. It is a good business. Queer that the word got on so long without it.

We paint the one that burnt down and the new one two. What is better, we paint the houses that don't burn down.

Your insure the houses that burn; we insure the houses that don't. You have the ashes and smoke; all the houses are ours.

We paint lead and zinc; Devoe. We sell the paint to painters; we don't paint.

Lead and oil is the old fashion paint. Devoe is zinc ground in white lead and linseed oil; the best paint in the world and the cheapest, because it takes fewer gallons than mixed paints and it wears twice as long as lead and oil. Nobody wants pure paint; there's lots of it, though, in the world.

A. M. Griffis, Plainfield, N. J., writes:

Jas. Aaron Hipsher, of Plainfield, always used 9 gallons of mixed paint for his house. Last year he bought 3 gallons of Devoe and had 6 gallons left.

Yours truly

An Ordinance

Determining the time at which salons for the sale of intoxicating liquors may open and close in the City of Charlevoix.

The City of Charlevoix ordains:

Sec. 1. That all salons in the corporate limits of the City of Charlevoix duly licensed to sell intoxicating liquors may remain open only during the period from the hour of 7 o'clock in the forenoon until 9 o'clock in the evening of each day except the month of May, when it shall be one hour later. During the remainder of the year said salons may remain open every day each day from the hour of 7 o'clock in the forenoon until 9 o'clock in the evening except on Sundays, when they shall be closed. It shall be contrary to permit, suffer, or encourage any person or persons to drink or tippling in any place, or on the premises of any licensed salon, on any day or hour when the same shall be closed.

Sec. 2. Any violations or parts of violations of any and conditions with the provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed a misdemeanor.

Sec. 3. This ordinance shall take effect twenty (20) days from and after the date of its publication.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is the ordinance passed by the City of Charlevoix, April 15th, 1907.

To adjust glasses the way it should be done. Only an Optician can do it, and he needs the most ingenious appliances to help him. It's a great mistake for a private to choose his or her own glasses from a big pile of ready made ones. —The steamer B. J. Gordon, Capt. S. M. Hose, left Manitowoc Friday evening for here, but broke down and had to be towed back. She will be ready to leave again to day, it is expected.

—The plans and specifications of the Masonic temple are here, and in the hands of chairman Torrell, of the committee. They will be considered at the next regular communication of the lodge.

—"Finishing and Hanging," is the title of a beautiful little book just issued by the passenger department of the Pere Marquette R. R. Co. It is the prettiest thing they have yet produced in that line, and ranks a work of art, aside from being very readable.

—"Little Men" and "As You Like It" will be given at the high school building Friday, May 3, by the children of the training school and the normal girls. The proceeds will be used to buy books for the library of the training school and to help pay the commencement expenses of the normal class.

—Charlevoix is a "dry" town, Wednesday morning found every saloon closed. Saloon men say they will remain closed until the council acts on the ordinance introduced last Monday night. The ordinance provides for a $500 city license, in addition to the regular $500 license. Inasmuch as the latter amount was to have been paid yesterday, May 1st, the saloon men say they will close until they know whether it costs $500 or $800.

—Morgan's Comedians at the Charlevoix Theatre every night this week.

—Mrs. F. A. Watson, formerly of Charlevoix, now of Frankfort, is the guest of Mrs. Tillotson.

—The high school seniors scored a success Friday evening last at Boyne City with "The Wooeted Man."

—The Young Ladies' Auxiliary of the Congregational church will give a social at the home of Madam Sears Wednesday evening May 15th.

—Come and see "Little Men" and "As You Like It" given by the training school and the normal class, May 3rd, at the high school building.

—Advices are to the effect that managers H. P. Foley, of the Helvedere, and F. J. Hailey, of the Ida, will be here this week, for the season.

—H. V. Hirsenburg, who has spent a portion of the winter in Idaho with his brother in law, J. W. Harris, is on his way home, and is expected here to day.

—C. C. Price, who returned from Florida Saturday, has been engaged as superintendent of the Charlevoix Lumber Co's factory, and took charge last Tuesday.

—The children will be delighted to see you May 3, when they give their play "Little Men" in the high school room. The proceeds will help buy books for the library of the training school.

—Frank Cullman, one morning recently, found a wild goose in a fox trap which he had set on the Paddock farm east. Although one foot is gone, the goose is alive and hearty, and efforts will be made to domesticate it, and cross it with tame stock.

—Morgan's Comedians opened at the Charlevoix Theatre Monday night to a crowded house. Tuesday and Wednesday nights were very satisfactory. They will appear in repertoire every night this week. The company is a good one, and the plays are all of a character that please.

—Rev. Father Foester, of St. Jamer, came over on the Beaver Monday and went to Petoskey where he will go into retreat at the monastery for a week, after which he will take a trip to Mackinac before he returns to his parish. Rev. Father Norbert is in charge during his absence.

—While we are talking about "Charlevoix the Beautiful" take a look toward the east side of the harbor and see the old discarded docks that blot the beautiful outlines of Round Lake. If we propose to maintain a marine cemetery in the city limits, for heaven's sake let us fence it in, otherwise let us prohibit the piling up of wrecks along the shores of the harbor. It looks bad.

—The Detroit News says: The steamer City of Grand Rapids, libelled by the Parker Bow Co., Ltd., of Detroit, was ordered sold by Judge Swan, on May 14. May 21st was set as the date for hearing of claims against the boat. The City of Grand Rapids is a wooden passenger boat, at present lying at the foot of Hain street. It is owned by the Cleveland, Rondeau and Port Stanley Navigation Co.

—Mrs. Adeline Kendall, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James M. Linn, in this city, on Friday night last, aged 58 years. Mrs. Kendall came here from Illinois in 1894, and lived with her daughter since that time. Her husband died in Illinois five years ago. The funeral was from the house Monday afternoon. Rev. Dr. Wright officiating. Interment was at Brookside cemetery.

—The 88th anniversary of the founding of Odd Fellowship in America was fittingly celebrated by Round Lake Lodge on Friday evening last There were speeches and music, and a banquet. The attendance was large, and the enjoyment unextinated. It was a very happy historical event. Sunday morning about fifty members of the lodge attended special services at the M. E. church. Dr. Wright preached an eloquent sermon appropriate to the occasion.

—George L. Thurston, editor of the Central Lake Torch died Sunday afternoon at his home in Central Lake, strychnine being the cause of his death. It was known for some time that Mr. Thurston's illness was very serious but the news of his death was very sad tidings to his many friends scattered all the northern Michigan. Mr. Thurston was not only a man of high personal character, but was a newspaper man of ability. The Torch was reckoned as one of the model country papers of Michigan. The editorial fraternity has lost one of its brightest members, and Northern Michigan one of its best citizens.

—Eighteen Carpenter and wife arrived home Tuesday from their winter house in Florida.

—Editor Baxter, of the Boyne City Herald, was badly scalded by steam, when the Gordon met with her accident recently.

By the breaking of the piston, the cylinder was smashed and the engine room filled with live steam. Before Mr. Goddings could escape he was badly scalded on head and arms.

He was taken to the hospital at Manitowoc, and later back to the boat, which arrived here last night. He is now at his home, and, though badly injured, will probably pull through all right.

Politics and Business.

The Northern Michigan Editorial Association held a session at Traverse City last week, and the boys had a good time.

But we are shocked at what we read of the action taken by the Association concerning payment for political services. Indeed we are pained beyond expression that the editors should, as they did, so far forget the dignity and probity of the "fourth estate" as to measure the value of newspaper influence in the campaign by the standard of the dollar.

Bless you, my brethren, the Sentinel has been "honoring" candidates for office for nearly forty years, and been taking its pay mostly in promissory notes, payable in gratitude. We concede that in many cases the notes have been paid, and paid cheerfully; but in many cases the notes are outlawed, without a cent of interest thereon on the back. We have very much of this non negotiable paper stored away in the archives of our editorial museum, that we would sell for a cent.

And a significant feature of the matter is the fact that some of those who have the largest accounts are the first to let their paper go to protest, and the first to whet their knives for the editor's short rifle.

No gentlemen, we must not be mercenary. Perish the thought! Get after the patent medicine man; the advertising agent, the travelling "specialist", yes, even the churches; but "gratitude" we must have, and where shall we get it if not from the chap whom we help into a good fat office?

We would not be misunderstood. There are men with hearts and consciences, men who always pay and never forget. But there are others.

Eighth Grade Examination for 1907.

The annual eighth grade examination will be held on Thursday and Friday, May 9 10, at the following places: Charlevoix, Boyne City, Boyne Falls, Clarion, St. James and East Jordan (west side.)

Examination will begin promptly at 8:30 standard time.

Applicants should bring paper and pencil or pen.

Only pupils who have pursued the studies of the eighth grade for a period of at least six months shall be permitted to take the examination and each pupil shall bring a certificate from his teacher stating that he has pursued said studies for the required time.

Pupils of lower grades may write, but the papers will not be forwarded to the commissioner.

The questions in reading will be based on "Rip Van Winkle."—Irving

An average standing of 80 per cent and not less than 70 per cent in any branch will be required in order to secure a diploma.

The Legislature and the Fish.

We read that the legislature is throwing another fit on the commercial fishing question, and is about to make another law governing the prosecution of that very important industry.

The legislature has a fish spasm about every session—at least once in four years, and when the agony is over and the catalogue relaxes, the official record discloses an "act" or an "amendment to an act" that surpasses in foolishness the work of any previous session.

The traditional Philadelphia lawyer could not clear up the perplexity or untravel the tangle of the Michigan fish laws as they now stand upon the statute books. For instance. The solons passed an act permitting the setting of small meshnets, without reference to closed seasons, for herring and chubs, but forgot to add a saving clause prohibiting small trout and whitefish from getting caught in these legally set nets. Moreover, if small trout or whitefish are found on the possession of the herring fisherman he is fined; if he throws them back in the water to soak he will be soaked himself if he is caught at it. And "there ye are," as Dooley says.

We grant that the question is a vexed one for the legislature to settle, considering the diversity of views that naturally grow out of a greater diversity of interests—some honest and patriotic and others selfish and unreasoning. The U. S. fish commission occupy ground with the clearest title. Its work is scientific, and, beyond all question, of incalculable benefit to the commercial fishing industry. Its method of operation is not governed by any politics save that of disinterested application to the work in hand, and an honest desire to produce results.

But it also, is handicapped by all this discordant yawp, and the condition of confusion that grows out of state supremacy over the waters within its territory. The whole question of commercial fishing is confusion worse confounded, and the fishermen are the ones who lie between the upper and the nether millstones.

Common Council.

At the council meeting Monday evening, rules for the government of the board of health were adopted.

Lee Howland was awarded the contract for constructing the curb and gutters on Antrim street.

The committee on printing reported in favor the SENTINEL as the official paper of the city. Adopted by unanimous vote.

All saloon bonds were approved including that of Ludvig E. Holm, who opened up this week in the place lately occupied by Sam Beaubian. Holm comes from Muskegon.

The druggist bonds of F. N. Chapel and A. B. Fleischer were approved.

An ordinance was introduced providing for a special city saloon license. Referred.

Leland had 400 resort visitors last summer, and is making preparations for more this year.

Traverse City Eagle: Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Wilcox of Old Mission were called to Bellaire this afternoon by the death of her father, the Rev. W P. Wilcox who passed away yesterday at the age of 74 years. He was found dead in bed, heart failure being the cause. The deceased was one of the oldest ministers in the north, and had preached in Northern Michigan for the past 35 or 40 years. About 25 years ago he built the Congregational church at Bellaire, but several years ago retired from active ministry.

THE GIRL WITH A MILLION

By D. C. Murray

CHAPTER I.

A little doll in the hotel of a wood was delicious, dapper with half a sunshine. A beautiful doll girl, too—tall and supple—rich, and a little on the right side of forty, sat on a camp stool before a small doll cottage with the sunbeams at her feet, peeling an ear of corn now and then and throwing the husks into a pile. It with an air of a queen of the woods. Near her, on the ground—back of a tree—lay a doll man—a very handsome doll—a hale man—an a denim coat, pipe in mouth, and a doll smile on a doll face.

A little girl—about doll—but yet a doll-like young miss, dangling her feet over a barrel and blowing bubbles with a bottle of a clothpin. He was a young man, with a face that, in a doll way, was fine, the pleasure of friends, and he was making a big pile of husks, and humming merrily and delightfully. Presently he stopped to look at the girl, and to his realizing then and there that life was not so bad after all. The girl was—well, she was a girl, and there was a doll man and a doll woman and a doll cottage and a doll world, and she was the girl. He was a young man, and he was a young man, and he was a young man, and he

The Old Manitou County Cases Detailed.

The Leelanau Co. Enterprise gives the following account of the cases, which have been in the courts a number of years:

Judge E. D. M. Davis, of Ionia, has rendered a decision in this case after hearing it under advisement over a year.

The history of the controversy is interesting. The legislature 1895 disorganized Manitou county annexing the Beaver group of islands to Charlevoix county and the Manitous and Fox Islands to Leelanau county.

The act disorganizing Manitou county created the county clerks and treasurers of Charlevoix, Leelanau and Manitou counties a board to audit and allow claims against Manitou county, and to apportion the indebtedness audited between Charlevoix and Leelanau counties according to the assessed values of the parts of Manitou county attached to each. This board met, but refused to audit any claims, and made no report.

Curtis & Wylie, a banking firm of Petoskey, had a judgment against Manitou county of about $4,100, and there were several thousand dollars of unpaid county orders held by different parties. Curtis & Wylie applied to Charlevoix and Leelanau counties for the payment of their judgment. Charlevoix county paid part of its share of the judgment and Leelanau county paid its share in full. In the mean time Fitch & Fitch and H. W. Kane, of Charlevoix, got control of all, or nearly all the unpaid county orders. The claim in value of timber made lands on the Beaver Islands valuable, and taxes that had been delinquent for a great many years were paid that were delinquent at the time of the disorganization of Manitou county. Charlevoix county entered the supervisors of the townships to pay the Curtis & Wylie judgment. The supervisors of those towns refused to do this, claiming the judgment was irregular and void, and if valid it should be paid by Charlevoix county out of the delinquent tax moneys above mentioned.

In course of time Fitch & Fitch and H. W. Kane had obtained a mandamus from Judge Mayne compelling the board above mentioned, composed of the county clerks and treasurers of these counties to meet and pass upon their county orders. The board met, but refused to allow the orders for the reason they were out-lawed.

Again Judge Mayne, in a mandamus ordering the board to meet and audit the orders, it being his opinion the orders were not outlawed. From this order the board, represented by Thos. Smithwaite and A. F. Bentley, its attorneys, appealed to the supreme court and that court held that the proper forum to try the question whether the orders were outlawed was in the proper court, and that that act, so far as it undertook to vest in this board the right to pass upon those order was unconstitutional and void. This left the question of the validity of these orders, the real issue undecided. Then Curtis & Wylie tried to compel Charlevoix to apply the delinquent tax moneys to the payment of their judgment. Charlevoix county refused to do this, claiming the judgment void and that the county orders of Fitch & Fitch and H. W. Kane if valid should be paid, and even if the judgment was valid it was no more entitled to payment than the county orders if they were valid and that no court has passed upon either. Curtis & Wylie who was represented by L. E. Knapp now U. S. District Judge fell a fill in chancery making Charlevoix and Leelanau counties, all the townships in Charlevoix formerly belonging to Manitou county and the townships of Leelanau, Leland and Glen Arbor in Leelanau and Fitch & Fitch and H. W. Kane parties. Charlevoix county and the township in it answered claiming the judgment invalid. Leelanau county and the township in it answered claiming their state land town goul which was admitted by Curtis & Wylie, H. W. Kane had assigned his orders to Fitch & Fitch. Fitch & Fitch filed a cross bill asking the court to make a decree declaring their orders valid and that Charlevoix and Leelanau counties be compelled to pay them. They made Curtis & Wylie, Leelanau county and the township of Leelanau, Leland and Glen Arbor parties, together with Charlevoix county and the township late of Manitou county and the township there while denying liability on the county orders did not seem much adverse to having them paid since they were owned there, but they wanted the judgment held invalid. Leelanau county and the township of Leelanau, Leland and Glen Arbor from the payment of any part of these county orders amounting to several thousand dollars.

TROUSERS UNDER THE BAN.

Less Than a Century Ago They Were Considered Irreligious.

It will assuredly seem more than strange that within the past hundred years the wearing of trousers has been regarded as irreligious. The fact that in October, 1842, an order was made by St. John's and Trinity colleges that every young man who appeared in hall or chapel in pantaloons or trousers should be considered as absent is startling enough; but it would appear that eight years later the founders of a United chapel at Sheffield inserted a clause in the trust deed declaring that "under no circumstances whatever shall any preacher be allowed to officate the pulpit who wears trousers." This is striking, but it is even more impressive to find that Rev. Hugh Bourne, one of the two founders of the Primitive Methodist Connection, and of her confounder. "That a sinners wrestling, heavy clothing Clergy will never get to heaven." And it would seem as if the Wesleyan Methodist Conference actually adopted a similar doctrine between theology and trousers began and where the departure from it will end.—Notes and Queries.

A VEXED QUESTION.

Game Warden, Government and Fishermen, All at Odds Over Spawn Gathering Method.

From the Detroit Free Press.

A few owners of fish tugs, viz: Frank N. Clark, of Northville, Wayne county, the United States fish commission a representative for Michigan, refused last fall to engage to take whitefish and lake trout for the spawn, and, about certain parties, fell foul with the state game and fish warden's department, who went to Gladstone and seized some of the tar that has been put upon that department quite recently are understood to be behind a story that the United States fisheries commissioner, by virtue of an obnoxious law enacted at Lansing 1899, is throwing tons of thousands of dollars of fishing boat gear annually to A. Booth & Co., of Chicago, known as the fish trust. Here are the facts:

Whitefish and lake trout spawn in the latter part of November and in December, which is the closed season for commercial fishermen taking these kind of fish. The United States fish commissioner under the law of 1899, is, however, permitted to take fish during the closed season under the direction of the state game warden for the spawn. Now, Supt. Clark has been in the fish propagating business for more than 30 years. He is recognized by the bureau at Washington as one of its best experts. State Warden Chapman knew more about politics than the preservation and propagation of fish, when he was appointed four years ago. He has still an awful lot to learn about fish and fisheries. Attorney Gen. Oscar Gray, of Detroit, thinks they are good politicians, so let it go at that.

Supt. Clark, being an expert, but not a politician, and Warden Chapman, being a politician, but no fishing expert, with a difference also. The state wardens department saw a big piece of pottonage which was the hiring of $50 a day tugs to take white fish and lake trout for spawn for the government. The government through Supt. Clark, received that it would hire the tugs itself, and so last fall chartering 16 altogether, nine of them are said to have been A. Booth & Co's tugs, and seven were owned by independent fishing persons or companies. Practically all the fishing for spawn is among the Beaver group of islands, in Lake Michigan, and the reason given why more trusts tugs were engaged then the independents is because A. Booth & Co. own most of the fishing tugs that are available for fishing so late in the season.

Supt. Clark has allowed each tug $10 a day, and allowed them to meet the balance of their expenses, which is about $10 more, and in earn their profits by keeping the fish from which the spawn is taken. The state has plainly says that the men who take the fish for the government spawn only keep them. Into reason for this is that whitefish and lake trout, unlike some other kinds of fish, cannot live when the spawn has been squeezed from them.

The tugs that take the fish can do as they please with them. The trust tugs are equipped to turn their fish over to A. Booth & Co. Some wellinformed men that schools is willing to father are that Supt. Clark requires the independent tugs that he hires to sell their catch to the fish trust. There is no evidence that this is true. It is believed to be simply the misfortunes of some fishermen whom Supt. Clark didn't hire last fall.

Under the 50 law the government takes spawn and agrees to plant 75 per cent of all the fry in Michigan waters. What fishermen, who haven't been able to get Supt. Clark to hire their craft, and certain persons who hope to continue as deputy wardens desire to amend the '99 law so as to allow the state warden's department to hire the whole say about the hiring of tugs for the government taking of spawn. Also to allow any fishing tug or sail boat to take fish with nets during the spawning season and offer the spawn to the government, the owner of the tug or sail-out to keep the fish. Of course, this night mean that hundreds of tons more whitefish and lake trout could be taken than were needed for spawn for the government fisheries, but then, says a representative of the present state game warden's administration: "Why, if the government said they had the spawn enough we'd impregnate the spawn and plant it so long as they would let us keep the fish we took it from." "Who would enter them?" "Why, the government could put a man on every tug at all the government's expense." "But suppose there was 1,000 of these craft?" "But the government is rich."

The present state warden's department has hired launches from the fish trust (to the 50), yet that department is now giving one stolen about the United States fisheries department, for his failure of their expenses, which is about $10 more, and in earn their profits by keeping the fish from which the spawn is taken. The state has plainly says that the men who take the fish for the government spawn only keep them. Into reason for this is that whitefish and lake trout, unlike some other kinds of fish, cannot live when the spawn has been squeezed from them.

The tugs that take the fish can do as they please with them. The trust tugs are equipped to turn their fish over to A. Booth & Co. Some well-inform

MARGIN TRADING IS GAMBLING

Judge Throws Case Out of Court on Suit to Recover Profit.

Holding that the action and sale of stock made in Illinois under a contract providing margin trading is illegal and void, Judge Dunn in the superior court of Cook county, Illinois, dismissed a suit in which Jerome Arnold, of Jacksonville, Ill., sued Frank Gaylord, of Chicago, to recover $1,000 alleged to be due him as a result of a margin transaction in the latter's stock. Gaylord, it appeared, had purchased for Arnold 100 shares of Pullman stock on a margin of $1000 and sold the stock at a profit of $1,000. Gaylord, it appeared, had not purchased the stock for Arnold, but had simply made a book entry to the effect that he had purchased the stock for him. Judge Dunn in his decision said: "Gaming contracts are not to be enforced in this state. Wagering contracts are not to be enforced in this state. Gambling contracts are not to be enforced in this state. The transaction had in this case is a wager and a gamble on the price of a certain stock. The plaintiff did not purchase the stock, and Gaylord did not sell it to him. The transaction resulted in the payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of the difference between the price at which the stock was bought and the price at which it was sold. The transaction was decided illegal."

JOURNEY OF A TIME ROOT.

Eucalyptus Seeds Should Up Over a Wait to a Sewer.

From Santa Barbara, Cal., there comes a story of a most interesting freak of vegetable life which is entirely unrelated for.

Through a certain garden there ran, some years ago, a sewer made of fat wood timber. This sewer was again used by an outside sewer. Across the sewer there was built a brick shed many feet high, and in such a way that it was directly by the inner sewer, which it inclosed tightly, while the outer sewer ended abruptly against the wall.

The outside sewer racing had in course of time decayed and a eucalyptus tree, standing some sixty feet away, had taken advantage of this and sent one of its roots in the covered spot in as direct a line as possible.

Here the root entered the outside sewer and followed its course as far as it could. At last it came to the wall, which shut off its course, and it could go no further, the inside sewer being entirely tight.

But on the other side of the wall the sewer and its contents ended in thread, and this eucalyptus tree well knew how to get there.

Some three feet high in the brick wall there was a little hole as thick as a pencil, and this the eucalyptus tree was aware of, as its big root began to climb the dry wall and feeling its way until it found the hole, through which it then closed on the other side and entered the sewer again and followed it along as formerly.

Then did the tree know of the hole in the bottom of the brick shed in the sewer upon the other side? Then did the tree know that it was to come out in the place with such precision? The roots of our plant grow always and everywhere in search of its food, just as the eucalyptus tree did.

FREE FEET IN CHINA.

Eleven years have passed since Mrs. Alfred Little started a movement in China for the abolition of the practice of footbinding among women. Thus far, after eleven years of remarkable labor and of the overcoming of obstacles and prejudices, but only, says the Youth's Companion, a little way, the Little Society is going away from the school, she is now the leader of the hands in a strong and growing organization of the native women, called the Anti-Footbinding Society.

A few weeks ago Mrs. Little held a series of meetings at Wuxsin. This was formerly a most conservative place, where the disease of pretting feet of the women is deemed of pretting feet of the women is deemed of pretting feet of the women is deemed

The first mayor of the new Boyne City is out with a pronouncisamento that silinors must be excluded from pool rooms.

The Northern Michigan Press association will hold its next meeting at Northport, the date to be left to Will bur Campbell of the Northport Leader, and the president and secretary, but it will probably be some time in August.

The lid was down tight in the Chebeygan street parlors Sunday for the first Sunday in the history of the present police officers. Chief of police La Londe is to soon lose his official head, but begins his crusade against the saloons at a late date. Cheboygan has 32 house camps and they have been running nights, Sundays and all times with but little molestation.

The committee appointed by local business men of Suttons Bay to confer with the Nessen line west to Manistee lately to look into the matter of getting Suttons Bay on the list of ports made by the Nessen steamers. Although they will not state what was accomplished, it is generally understood that their reception was a cordial one and that the company is favorably considering the matter.

Traverse City Record: W. W. Mitchell of Cadillac, one of the wealthiest and most progressive men of that city, has written a letter to J. W. Hanson, relative to the bituliulic pavement laid in that city more than three years ago. Mr. Mitchell praises the bituliulic pavement very highly and states that the city engineer of Cadillac corresponded with a great many of the best engineers in the country before the bituliulic pavement was laid, and the universal opinion expressed was that the bituliulic pavement was the coming pavement. "Now as for my opinion, will say that I would not put in any other pavement for the reason that I think it is fully as good as any other pavement and is not so noisy. There seems to be something about it which deadens the sound of travel and it is a very favorable feature. We have had this pavement now some three years, and so far as wearing qualities are concerned, we can state that our pavement shows no indications of wearing out. Therefore to sum up, I would not use anything but bituliulic pavement and would have it put in by the Central Bituliulic Pavement company."

Indiana Independent: Early morning burglaries of considerable proportions were perpetrated at Ellsworth last Sunday morning, some time after the hour of 2 o'clock, in which the general store of E. H. Harris was rifled of a pair of shoes, a revolver and probably other unknowable goods and the hardware store of W. A. Ross looted of knives, watches, jewelry and a variety of articles. The burglar or burglars also gained an entrance to the cellar of Skow's general store, but failed to get into the store. Entrance to the stores of Harris and Ross and made through the cellar as in case of Skow effort, but proved successful, attention being to the first floor and two doors, one each of which gave entrance to the two stores entered. The loss is not known, as probably the proprietors are not able to estimate it, but it is considerable. In Mr. Harris' store is located the postoffice, which, it is said, was not molested, but in one of the stores a church donation box was opened and relieved of its contents. About five or six dollars in money from the cash drawers were secured. No attempts to open the safes were made, and this would indicate inexperienced work.

Elk Rapids Progress: Since Monday rumors have been afloat that the furnace and chemical plant have been sold to Berry Bros. of Detroit. While the report cannot be verified as one connected with the company here care to talk on the subject, and all refuse to either affirm or deny the report. However all the circumstances appear to indicate that there is something more than mere rumor in the report. If it was unfounded there is no question but it would be promptly denied. A meeting of the stockholders was held Friday, but the matters considered are kept strictly private. It is claimed Berry Bros. have had an option on the plant for some time. It is well known that this firm have been acquiring plants of late, and within the past few months have bought the furnace at Boyne City. Before acquiring the plant at this place they already controlled furnaces at Ashland, Wis., Marquette, Newberry, Boyne City and Manistique, and were the largest producers of charcoal pig iron in America. What the effect will be on the town is as yet problematic, but it is not thought that with the present high prices of pig iron there will be any curtailment of business, and if anything then will be all hands employed and the furnace being our largest industry every citizen of the village is interested either directly or indirectly in the plant. It is said Berry Bros. control thousand of acres of timber lands in the northern part of the lower peninsula.

Owner and Wife Go Down with the Barge Arcadia.

The steamer Arcadia, Captain Angelos, left Milwaukee, Mich., on April 12 with a barge in tow for Ludington, Mich., to load in Lake Michigan with its cargo of sawdust. There were 14 persons on board. There did not blow much gale from the time we left until we reached Ludington. Some lost the deckload that night and we lost one of the big pumps of about 12 in. The sawdust was so wet it did not float. We had been down to Ludington and had unloaded the sawdust and were coming up for another load when we struck the gale. We had lost the deckload, the pump, anchor, deckhouse, and all the boats except the yawl. We had been down about 20 miles when we struck the gale. We had lost the deckload and were coming home. The FAMOUS CANALS OF CHINA.

Holland's Waterways Outdone by the Celestial Empire.

Holland's canals are famous, but the canal system of China is far more extensive and its value to the empire infinitely incalculable. No canal in the world has more navigable rivers and canals than China. The network of waterways, natural and artificial, so covers the empire that almost as many people live upon the water as on the land. The Great canal, that wonder of the world, runs north and south from Canton to the extremity of the empire and by the route the waters of all nations are carried to Peking a distance of 926 miles. This canal is 50 feet wide, is passable through, or near, 11 large cities, it has 75 large sluices to keep up the water, and is spanned by thousands of bridges.

Nature's Mutability.

Emerson: Nature is a mutable cloud which is always and never the same.

SECRET OF GOOD MANNERS.

Two Theories of the Acquirement—Unselfishness and Conventionality.

Most mothers hold, consciously or unconsciously, one of two theories about the acquirement of manners their children (the number says "Manners are not the outward sign of the inner nature. If my daughter has a good heart and a well cultured mind she will behave in a gentle, charming fashion. I will teach her compassionate respect for age, unselfishness for helping with the world's work. Her manners will take care of themselves. Another mother says: "My girls will never get on without conventional manners. They shall be taught from childhood to omitate the speech and bearing of ladies. They shall be instructed in the proper behavior for every occasion. They shall walk and dance and sit down and talk with graceful deportment. Neither method seek the Youth's companion, produces altogether satisfactory results. Unselfishness is truly the foundation of good manners, but not the acquirement. Most conventional conventions have grown among us for reasons. Some can be explained by the demand of kindness and some custom.

NEW GRANGES.

New York Organizer Gives Some Practical Suggestions.

John N. Stone, a special deputy of the New York state grange, gives some sensible suggestions about organizing new granges. He says: that it is not best to call a meeting, gain a small thirteen of the prospective members from one place. Twenty or thirty charter members make a good nucleus to start with. At the first meeting, when all who intend to become members have signed the application list and have paid their dues, those not desiring to join should be requested to retire from the room. The ladies should then be taken on, these names which were on the list prior to the meeting be enrolled if they are willing to affiliate with such other; then let be single on the names presented at the meeting, and if any ballot is unfavorable return the fees to the applicant and allow him to retire. Industrious in respect to grange stores, trade discounts, cooperative purchasing etc. should not be held out for persons to join the grange. They are likely to overestimate these advantages. "I believe," said Mr. Stone, "that the grange that is organized for educational purposes first and co-operation afterwards, will accomplish the greatest good." Let great stress be placed on the first choice of our trade—namely, to develop a higher manhood and womanhood. The obligation should be made very impressive. It should be regarded as a sacred thing and should be administered and received with the intention that it is to be sacredly kept throughout life. Let the ritualistic work be adapted to the condition of each locality, and then the degree work should be enjoyed, and then proceed to the election of the officers and instruction in the unwritten work. Institution may take place at this meeting if there is time. After the officers are installed they should be set about in opening the grange in due form, and as far as possible assistance and instruction should be given in the different degrees, then proceed to the instructions for the closing ceremony.

ARBOR DAY PLANS.

A Suggested Programme For Arbor Day Meeting.

The Arbor day observance should be arranged at a previous meeting, competent talks appointed to awaken an interest in the matter and to superintend the setting of such trees as are placed in public parks or other public places. All the people, whether members of the grange or not, should be made interested if possible to the work. On the evening of Arbor day a meeting should be held at the grange hall for appropriate exercises arranged. This meeting can be a closed session or open to the public. The following is suggested as an appropriate programme for such a meeting:

Song—The origin and Object of Arbor Day. Chairman.

Quotations For Discussion—What are the advantages of each of the following methods of Arbor day observance in this locality? Setting trees for growth of wood or timber and what varieties should be set? Setting trees for fruit growing and what varieties are most hardy and suitable? Trees for shade and shade around houses and what varieties should be selected? Trees along the highways and upon public grounds and what varieties should be selected?

Essay—The setting of evergreen trees and what varieties are most hardy and adaptable? Best manner and characteristics of varieties of trees for the roadside in the front yard and the orange tree.

Five minute talks by members each stating what action he has taken in the day's observance.

Supper.

Of course this is intended only as a suggestion, for many other appropriate exercises might be named from which to select.

Grange Dairyman's League.

The granges of Orange county have organized the Dairyman's league. The object is to dispose of the products of the dairy of its members to the best advantage, to make collections for the same and to promote or defeat legislation affecting the dairy interests. A membership fee of 25 cents per cow is charged, but no subscriptions are binding until the signatures representing 50,000 cows have been secured. The secretaries of subordinate granges are to report to the chairman of the sales committee of the Orange County Pomona grange as to the number of signatures received. The board of managers are to endeavor to contract for the sale of the milk of the local branches at the same time. The grange farmers of Orange county seem to believe that farmers have the same right to unite for mutual protection as has any trade or profession.

The Question Box.

Can a nonlegal member be received for a new grange as a charter member?

A disabled member can be received as a charter member by paying full fees. A destitute member may visit any grange while in possession of the annual word, but cannot receive the annual word.

Can delegates to the New York state grange be elected at the October meeting of a Pomona grange?

Delegates to state grange must be elected in December except to special dispensation of the state master.

Parcels post is meeting with much opposition, as the rural mail delivery did at the outset, but it will eventually be adopted as the needed auxiliary of the free delivery.

Short Cut to Secrecy.

The officials of the Imperial Chinese telegraph administration, have been notified that it has been decided to inflict the penalty of decapitation on any telegraph employe who may in future be found guilty of revealing the contents of secret official telegrams to outsiders.—South China Morning Post, Hongkong.

"The carriage is nearly done," said Miss Fraser, taking a hand upon her uncle's white shoulder with a fourth, and also cuddling in and then exploring.

"One of those Horse Hair fellows," asked the uncle, "or has he gone home?"

"Don't like him, Tegumie, the bit of him."

The owner and his nephew are now in exile, and Monte is not Angelo but the interest of the carriage is uncertain.

"It is a fine prospect for us," said the young man on the carriage roofed seat, "and, if I may say so, one very fine on the other. The honest young man on the box seems to be a good fellow, and the dear lady has the same fine spirit we found in the Bonnie Prince Charlie, and the Duke of Cumberland, and the Young Pretender, and all the other Stuarts. It was our uncle Dalhousie, I believe, who was the last of the Stuarts who had the spirit to stand by them."

"Do you think, Tegumie, that we will be able to get back our fortune?"

"I hope so, my lassie, and I think so. We are the last of the Frasers, and we have the spirit of the Stuarts, and we have the money of the Jews, and we have the Stuart luck, which is the best luck of all. I believe in the luck of the Stuarts."

Charlevoix Sentinel.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR.

This announcement certainly seems that the reputation which Charlevoix at the recent spring elections received more than one hundred thousand majority is an evidence not only of party loyalty and the good judgment of the voters of Michigan but is as well a convincing tribute to the strength and worthiness of the successful candidates. To have received the largest majorities ever given to any candidates at a spring election in Michigan is a mark of favor and distinction which these incoming officials will regard with pride.

Never than the usual satisfaction and gladness which to republicans accompanies the election of a republican congressman will be created through the victory of L. L. Dickema in the fifth district of this state over the democratic competitor George A. Hummer. The latter was an alleged believer in the protective policy which demanded immediate tariff revision. He was an admirer of President Cleveland who would have voted with the president's political opponents. He was a generous stamper in the financial battlecourt which republican policies have brought to his city and district etc. Did his best in opposition to such policies and his continued that opposition. The election of Mr. Dickema not only sends to Washington another friend of President Roosevelt and his policies but it sends a man thoroughly in sympathy with all the party's purposes and one well equipped to render good service to his district and to Michigan.

Evangelist Dan Simpson Creates Storm in Albion Baptist Church.

Apparently Crazed by Liquor Audience.

Albion special to Detroit Free Press: Crazed by his thought that no sinner wished to be present for who he had made an earnest appeal at the close of his sermon last evening, Dan. Dan. Simpson, the high evangelist of the Baptist church, rose and continued his sermon a few minutes the largest audience that has ever been in the First Baptist church of this city, by calling down the wrath of God upon the wicked city of Albion.

Evangelist Simpson broke the large audience up in an unmerciful manner and charged them with being unrelenting and he opened the following passage from the scripture:

"And whosoever shall not received you, nor hear your words, when you depart out of this house or city shake off the dust of your feet."

This was followed by a call for those who wished to be saved for Christ to stand up. None responded and it was then that Mr. Simpson collapsed. He dismissed the audience, muttering about the death of the judgment, curse and over again.

The audience was considerably aroused over the evangelist's speech and some remarkably after he had quieted down a little, he was taken to the depot and sent to his home at Stanwood, Mich.

MARINE NOTES.

The schooner Nina Fiske arrived in her usual trip Monday, with Capt. Peterson again on the quarter deck.

The steamer Hum made her first East Jordan trip last Thursday afternoon, and is now on her regular run.

The steamer Falcon is that river again this year for the Hemphill-Noyes City ore trade, with Capt. Peterson again on the quarter deck.

The steamer Crescent, recently bought by Duluth parties, left here early Sunday morning on her first trip, in charge of Capt. H. L. Pinto. Morgan's Comedians were passengers as far as the Soo.

Milwaukee Tribune: Another Transportation company is to be added to Milwaukee's lake freight facilities, the Northern Michigan Transportation company has leased the South dock property, 222 to 232 South Water street and will call at the port of Milwaukee well beginning June 1, connecting with all northern and upper Michigan ports.

The schooner Louie A. Burton, which was towed again in at the Angus Mill last week, arrived here about two weeks ago in tow of the Mariflower. When this side of the Manitou the big steamer Yuma attempted to remove the schooner's bows, and a collision occurred, which for awhile seemed above. The Burton will patch up temporarily here, and make permanent repairs on the other side.

Traverse City Record: The Traverse Bay Transportation company company incorporated and elected officers Monday. The following were elected: President, A. V. Frederick; vice president, Capt. C. A. Webb; secretary, Samuel Garland. The three officers, together with Adolph Grettine will form the board of directors. Capt. C. A. Webb and Frank Grettine left this afternoon for Ludington to lay down the company's boat, the Chippewa, for the summer's run.

The mystery of the Arcadia disaster is still unsolved. That she did not founder is certain, as the weather was comparatively calm. The theory of a boiler explosion must be rejected for various reasons. The Arcadia's boilers had been inspected the week before her fatal trip and in case of a boiler explosion the steamer would have blown lastly wrecked, whereas no wreckage save upper works intact has been sighted and none of the flotsam found bears evidence of being splintered or torn off. The disappearance of the Arcadia is a mystery that will probably never be solved satisfactorily, but no one seem willing to give the matter thought are attaching much credence to the theory advanced in Capt. Harold Carlson, keeper of the Ludington life-saving station. It is Capt. Carlson's opinion that the ill fated steamer turned turtle and foundered in comparatively smooth water, the accident resulting from improper loading. Marine men well know it to be in the history of the Great Lakes that very strange accidents of this nature have occurred to vessels that were considered entirely seaworthy.

IT'S QUITE A TRICK

To adjust glasses the way it should be done. Only an Optician can do it, and he needs the most ingenious appliances to help him. It is a great mistake for a person to choose his or her own glasses from a big pile of ready made ones. There is rarely one chance in a hundred that they will be a fit, and when they don't fit, a person might far better go without any.

I will examine your eyes for you free of charge, to day, you will learn something which you will find very interesting and instructive.

—Miss Hessie Warne, of East Jordan, who was the guest of Mrs. Dr. L. Lewis last week, returned home Monday.

—John Donlevy, of Chicago, arrived on the Missouri Monday, and proceeded to St. James yesterday to visit relatives.

—The old schooners Cape Horn and Wolverine, well known traders here many years ago, are being dismantled at Milwaukee.

—Capt. E. Small is back from Cleveland, where he took the fish tug Hackett. Capt. Small is awaiting orders to bring out the steamer Nassau.

—James Cummings, the blind boy, a decided musical genius, has given concerts the past week at two of the churches, and is well spoken of by those who attended.

—Strap cities and villages in this state are adding an extra amount to the liquor license, in some places doubling it to $1,000, of which three counties goes into the local treasury.

—There are seven million dollars in the state treasury and not a dollar of indebtedness against the state. During the past month the railroads have paid in for taxes nearly half of this amount.

—At a recent convention of Brothers of St. Andrew, at Grand Rapids, Bishop Gillespie delivered the address of welcome. This looks as if we may expect to see him here again this summer.

—J. W. Rogers, of East Jordan; J. L. Handy, of Boyne City, and Barney Hodge of Charlevoix, constituting the board of Old Soldiers' Commission, were in their annual session here Monday, adjusting affairs for the year.

—Sentiment throughout the state seems to be growing in favor of building the number of salesons in a town, in nearly several cities and towns have refused to grant licenses to only a certain number and in many instances a majority of the voters exacted in addition to the state tax.

—Mr. H. C. Hodgett, of Elk Rapids, who comes here to sing the part of Ralph Rackstraw, in Pinafore, has attended two rehearsals, and everybody concerned is highly pleased with his voice. We can assure our people that if they attend Pinafore they will hear one of the best tenor voices in this part of the state.

—Secure your seats for Pinafore at the ivy drug store.

—Mr. C. L. Judd, of Saginaw, was here a few days last week.

—Mrs. J. A. Noble, of the Platon was in Grand Rapids last week on business.

—Mrs. Chas. Noyes, of Manistee, is visiting relatives and friends here, and at Boyne City.

—The schooner Quickstep took a cargo of lumber from the Charlevoix Lumber Co. dock this week.

—The sloop yacht Hejah, formerly owned by Winans, has been bought by a Chicago party, and Hy Hanger is fitting her out.

—The fine new residence of John Connor, on Mason street, is almost completed, and is an ornament to that elegant street.

—Mrs F. M. Sears and children left here Saturday for Schenectady, N. Y., where they join Mr. Sears, who is managing a small brick factory.

—Leslie Giddings, who was badly scalded on the steamer H. J. Gordon some time ago, is out again, and will resume his place on the boat next week.

—We are glad to note the fact of an aroused public sentiment on the matter of home yard operation as a result of the SENTINEL's item of two weeks ago. The nuisance should be abated.

—The SENTINEL is expending over $500 between January 1st last, and June 1st, in new equipment and material, exclusive of stock, and shall continue to "dress up" as demand requires.

—J. A. Cameron celebrated his seventy first birthday at his home Tuesday evening last. A number of his old friends were there to congratulate him, and a very pleasant evening was passed.

—H. Hibbard, of Bellaire, was here over Sunday. Mr. Hibbard's power power plant, which gives Chirlevoix light and water, has demonstrated its ability to do business under all kinds of weather conditions.

—The many friends of Mrs. Bigbert Carpenter will be pained to learn of her poor health since her return from Florida lately. Her condition was so serious that her daughter, Mrs. Lillian McCrory, was summoned from Greenville, S. C., last week Mrs. McCrory arrived Saturday.

—Mrs. Bird, widow of the late Thos. C. Bird, died at her home near Ironton last Saturday, aged 71 years. Mrs. Bird was one of the pioneers of Pleasant township, and was highly respected by all. The funeral occurred Tuesday from the residence, interment in Bookside.

—Traverse City, having decided to pave Washington street, a hot contest resulted as to the character of the pavement to be adopted. It was set, last Monday night in favor of bitulithic, which goes to show that the people of Traverse City are sensible. Bitulithic is the best pavement in the world.

—Joseph Cooper, of Phelps, is having his full share of bad luck. Two weeks ago his house was destroyed by fire; a few days later he was badly injured by a plank falling on him, and now burglars have gone through his store getting about $100 in money. The thief was rounded up Sunday at Central Lake, by Sheriff Little, but escaped before he could be gathered in.

—The vaudeve, or 5 cent moving picture show, has been fitted up in the north store room in the Charlevoix Theater and have their apparatus installed. They expect to open tonight. The place is seated with comfortable chairs, and is otherwise made neat and attractive Mr. G. S. Collins is the proprietor, and Mr. E. L. Archer is operator. The vaudette is the rage all over the State, and offers a very instructive means of entertainment.

—A Columbus (Ohio) special to the Detroit Journal says: Private Earl D. Tripp of St. Johns, Mich., serving a 15 day sentence in the guardhouse, was shot and accidentally killed by Cavalry Lieutenant Gillon, while the latter was cleaning his rifle. The bullet entered his cheek and passed out at the back of his head causing instant death. Gillon will be court-martialed for criminal negligence. Tripp is the second son of L. E. Tripp, a farmer who moved to St. Johns last fall. The family formerly lived near Charlevoix. Earl is 18 years of age.

In January Earl went to Lansing to take a position in the Ann Arbor Works, but a month later his father received word that he had enlisted in the army. While the father did not object, his son's enlistment was not pleasing to him.

—Anthony Waerful and John O. Sluyzak. Both had passed Advance more than thirty five years.

—The SENTINEL has a very fine and accurate cut of the plat of the village of Charlevoix which can be printed on the back of letter heads and other matter. It is very useful and a good advertisement for the town.

—The Grand Lecturer, F. A. A. M., has called a school of instruction for the several lodges of this section at Boyne City next Tuesday evening. As that is the date of the regular communication of 292, at which the ten pipe plans are to be acted upon, it is doubtful if Charlevoix will be represented.

—Mrs. Mary E. Reeves, wife of Judge Owen T. Reeves, died at her home in Bloomington, Ill, last week. Judge and Mrs. Reeves have been regular summer visitors here for several years, and have a beautiful cottage near the Belvedere. The many Charlevoix friends of Judge will deeply sympathize with him in his affliction.

KIRK IS DEAD

John T. Kirkpatrick At Last Gives Up the Struggle for Life.

Genial "Jack" Kirkpatrick died at his home in this city last Monday morning, after a lingering illness, of paralysis.

Mr. Kirkpatrick was born in Oshawa, Canada, 57 years ago. He came to this country in 1870, living for a year in Hooks, Antrim county, where, in 1871 he married Miss Jeannette Alexander. To this union six children were born—three dying while young. Besides the widow he leaves three daughters, Mrs. Agnes Helfrich, of Traverse City; Mrs. H. D. Loike, of Oklahoma, and Miss Edna, all of whom were here at the hour of death.

Mr Kirkpatrick came to Charlevoix the year of his marriage, and has lived here continuously since. For many years he was the superintendent of the Charlevoix Lumber Co's factory. He was a very accomplished architect, and did much work in that line, independent of his other occupation. Many of the finest residences and summer cottages in Charlevoix were designed by him.

Few people in this life are blessed with more friends than was "Jack" Kirkpatrick. Of a sunny, frank and merry nature, he drew to himself the loyalty and companionship of those who were correspondingly blessed with intelligent appreciation of these qualities. While genial and companionable, he was silent in his treatment of insincerity or duplicity. His dignity was as firm as the everlasting rock.

The funeral occurred Wednesday of this week, under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias, of which Order he was an honored member.

Clemantine Elizabeth Steele

Was born in Connecticut, May 23d, 1836, and died at her home in Ironton Mich., May 12th, 1907, aged 71 years. She leaves to mourn her loss husband, William Steele, and one adopted son, Armond, with Almond's children, four grand children, many relatives to mourn her loss. She was the mother of six children—four boys and two girls.

She became motherless when two years old and at the age of five came with her father and grandmother to Romulus, Mich.

When twenty years of age she was married to Thomas Bird. Mrs. Bird came with her husband to their farm near Ironton in 1860, where they lived until called to the other world. She left a widow by her husband's death on November 21, 1905.

Mrs. Bird was well known in the community as an active and consistent Christian woman, a member of the M. E. church and a worker with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

She was known in her home as a faithful and devoted wife and mother. Although for years a sufferer from rheumatism, she was always patient and cheerful and ready to sympathize with and minister to others in need.

She manifested to the last a quiet, simple trust in her Heavenly Father.

She was stricken with paralysis while busy in the kitchen Thursday p. m. May 9th, and unconsciousness followed within a few moments, and she slept peacefully to the end. No one can doubt but that she awoke to behold not the beauty of earth's morning light, but the glory of heaven. Her city benefactors is the New Jerusalem, her light is God, her food is plucked from the tree of life. Her joy is Jesus Christ her everlasting Saviour.

Increased Pay for Rural Carriers.

Commencing July first a new schedule in the salaries of all rural free delivery carriers will become effective. This will make a graded increase in the compensation of all carriers of from 9 to 20 percent based upon the number of miles traveled in their routes. Carriers on routes of 24 miles or more, $900 per annum; 22 to 24 miles $850; 20 to 22 miles $800; 18 to 20 miles, $750; 16 to 18 miles, $700; 14 to 16 miles, $650; 12 to 14 miles, $600; 10 to 12 miles, $600. Two of the Charlevoix carriers will jump from $720 to $900, and the other two will get a good raise—provided to 1?.

Common Council

Very little business was done at the council meeting Monday night. The city attorney was instructed to make a contract with John Masy for street sprinkling, at $4.00 per day.

The petition of J. Z. Merriam for permission to erect a 30x70 foot cement block building on Bridge St. was referred.

The council devoted considerable time to the discussion of affairs at the city stone quarry where the machinery is being overhauled and improved and a traveling hoist, built

THE GIRL WITH A MILLION

By D. C. Murray

The Lieutenant answered, looked before the Prof. could do so, and said:

"I beg you to pardon my intrusion." he said quickly. "I thought Dr. Brown "Was early good enough to help me more better. I thought I could help him. Why not? Why not? Why not so good as to be second to Dr. Brown?"

Fraser, surprised, took the proffered and explained the situation. The young man chatted some time and on leaving the Professor invited him to call on him at his warehouse in the M. Atlantic Zoo, now not commonly used in Brooklyn, and he had been tempted to stand in Brooklyn by John. The amazed Prof. would be made up and interested on a day or two. Mr. Atlantic Zoo was a big place, and more were accepted by profound amusement from Fraser's throat, gathering his attention to the Lieutenant. Fraser, the professor, came out in the door as Blue was leaving, and Blue, as he left, called to him the Lieutenant's name, and Fraser promised.

Another group with morphology of an air of temperance discussion, and summoned from the Professor's room, Blue, the great Mackenzie and Dalbrook at the door where the young Atlantic Zoo stood. Miss Hooker with a solemn frisky physique or rat, and the Professor's face, which caused him to think this a schoolboy. Always remarkable for the rare and serious—the feet for either she had to look. She was at the age when women in a hurry, and Miss Hooker was always an antagonist and unique design to her.

He and by they were all seated in the garden together, and O'Rourke and Fra ser came in, and each took a chair in the hot shade of the tulips. Miss Hooker, Farley and Mackenzie were just beginning to be at ease, and Fraser was giving long talk, O'Rourke sat near and was thought, he was a good deal of Irish in to be had conversation. It was agreed a long time, and Blue, in his gray a lounger was more and more remarkable. As a lounger he was full of ease. He responded silently to the slightest shade of thought, and he taker always felt certain of sympathy with him.

He sat in the shade of tulips, and have but little of women's manner, or their interest ways. He watched with a clear interest the result when another have accounted for the moment for any state of mind. Dalbrook was a good Angelo, and as some whatever on either side. Dalbrook set by which, and glances of affection and understanding passed between her and Mackenzie.

"Engaged, perhaps," said O'Rourke to himself. "Sort of thing." Blue, at the moment later, with a little touch of passing anger at himself, "What best to do with her?"

A voice spoke from the road below the garden asking for Monsieur Dalbrook. The village postman, politely raising his official cap in general salute, stated that he had a letter for Monsieur Dalbrook. He had inquired for monsieur at the Chevalier Blanc, and had afterward discovered his from the road. Would monsieur please to sign for the letter?

"Is most rigt to ask," said Fraser, who was always willing to display his knowledge, even of trifles. It's a strange graphic pen, Mr. Dalbrook."

"Is" was "a," said the old man, bowing round when he had received the package from the postman. He broke it, and hilariously, with his eyes side as he did so. "Amazing!" he cried. "Amazing, Mademoiselle." The girl moved quickly to his side and saw he had gone that he was pale and excited. He had one white, thin hand, and he was unfamiliar to the garden. He was carrying his cards with his own, pared hard and longer on small—those he to meet and moved and smiled as she found Dalbrook.

CHAPTER V.

Everybody felt a little startled and curious. Dalbrook's change was from the garden with Angela, his manner had lower fan altogether at liberty to speak of it.

Dalbrook and the young Americans were with Blue, looks above Dalbrook and Angela with interest.

"Was with pardon me for taking away your charge," he said to Mademoiselle. "I have to do a little business with monsieur. Will you, Mademoiselle, please to take the garden in the morning, and monsieur and I will be pleased to join you." He added to Fraser, "Can taking away your time? Do you good to stand and stretch your legs." Fraser, in the middle of his morning and smoke, gladly. "I will come." Blue, he made bows. After the ladies had gone Dalbrook said, "Is with little embarrassed, he here."

Angela was amazed at his sudden coldness, his manner was so changed and so unlike the Dalbrook she had thought he had not to be a something in a hand of his mother. Blue was sorry, too, he was very unfamiliar with the Dalbrook he had seen in the garden, and was standing with their arms about each other's waist. The other Dalbrook was a stranger to him, and he felt drawn to the national one, and felt sorry for the change in his manner. Dalbrook, rose, and his hand shook with a little nervous excitement.

"Have to be said, with a quaint, formal accent, "Alvin Cross Dalbrook."

"Try to be a good boy," said Angela with a hard tone her character—"I will be good, I promise."

"Have you, I am, sir, a letter?"

"There are two letters, sir, one addressed to me, enclosing the postscript." "Is most rigt to ask."

Mr. Alvinus Zoro with a small accent—"Is most rigt to ask." Blue, who had been looked, had the appearance of a little letter to the lot out of the inner region of his pocket, and handed it to Dalbrook. Dalbrook, his manner changed, opened and read the letter, and, looking up from his reading gave a smile, and said, "Is most rigt to ask." Blue felt and delighted in the manner and gave the letter back to Dalbrook, who, as he read,

The school boards of Indiana will now prepare the annual report that the state of Michigan is constrained yearly to do its schools. A joint review of the history of the school boards of Indiana reviews would disclose facts which might make them impossible for that statement thoroughly ashamed of it. There is probably not another national in the United States which has had more lazy and generous treatment than has been given to the school boards of Indiana. Difficult by no means of Michigan and its people.

Those who are urging that the tariff needs revising are probably not overlooking the fact that there is now being shipped into this country an average daily month of more than twice the quantity and value of competing goods that were imported under the last revised democratic tariff law. They surely cannot not overlook this fact. Any lowering of the tariff in direction which would render present duties are largely increasing foreign sales and shipments to this country would evidently result

New Game Laws.

The state Protective Fish and Game association met at Lansing Tuesday and agreed on a number of amendments to the game laws which were submitted to the evening by joint meeting of the senate and house committees in game laws. These are the amendments:

A dog in a hunting camp must be considered prima facie evidence that the dog is used for hunting. It shall be an crime of a crime to buy prohibited game as to sell it.

The closed quail season is extended to jan. 15, 1903.

The season for hunting game birds in the upper peninsula is reduced 15 days.

The license fee for non residents for game shall be $15.00 and for non resident game license $10.00.

Spearing in any waters is prohibited.

All game wardens to be game wardens.

The sale of bass is prohibited.

Each of the four quarters of a deer shall be tagged, also the head and pelt.

The hunting of birds and without bait is for wolves, foxes.

Non resident hunters to be allowed to take 10 duck, woodcock and snipe out of the state.

The total bag of game birds for a one day shall not exceed 100. The total season bag for duck, 500.

Good Roles for Good Roads.

Keep an inch of drainage upon both sides and 3 inches out of the road by cutting out ditches and throwing the material of which the road is built, from the ditches are to contribute to take off the freezing water, especially before freezing time and open ditch in the early in the spring as possible. Don't change your mind and turn around too much. They will give better satisfaction if kept at the same place of work. Keep weeds and brush away from the sides of the road as much as possible, and where you can lead to cut brush standing, especially if it is pine, this will treat the height of eight feet above the ground. Never delay a gravelled road work without seeing it is well followed by a competent surveyor and with the knowledge of adjacent property. It is their property even though in a public highway, and you will be liable for damages if you do work without giving due notice. All the material within the limits of the right of way may be used for road purposes only. You have no right to the grass and timber nor to the earth or stone not required for the road. All rock belong to the abutting owner to the center of the road, and in his use or taking of them he is limited by the right of the authorities to make whatever use of them that is necessary for the improvement and protection of public travel.

Traverse City is again in hopes of securing a paper mill as a new industry with a capital stock of $250,000, of which the citizens are asked to subscribe $100,000, and the balance will be taken by outside parties.

For the first time in the history of the school at Ishkosh, there will be a high school commencement. The exercises will be held in Harris' hall on the evening of May 17. There will be four graduates and, a very good program has been arranged for the occasion.

Elk Rapids Progress: The deal of the week A. K. Dougherty shipped the furniture of Linus Seeley to St. John, N. B. Mr. Seeley left for that place last fall, intending to remain during the winter, but he now writes that he has a good situation and will probably remain there permanently.

Petoskey News: A beautiful specimen of the trout family was brought in from Bayne Falls this morning, being caught in the mill pond there Thursday afternoon. It was of the rainbow variety and weighed four and one half pounds. The big fellow caused a revival in the fishing business of the city.

Fire in St. Ann's church Cadillac Tuesday did considerable damage before the dames were subdued. The origin of the fire is a mystery as there had been no fire in the furnace for several days. The church is of brick. It was erected in 1893 and was nearly clear of debt. The Lawrance carried $8,000. The damage may reach that amount.

The Leelanau county fair will be bigger and better than ever this year and arrangement are already being made to make it a record breaker. Lately the officers and directors held their regular meeting in Sutton's Bay to discuss the general business pertaining to a fair this year. A gen-

Spasms
St. Vitus' Dance
Many persons who suffered untold agonies from epilepsy, fits, spasms, and St. Vitus' Dance are today well. The strengthening influence of Dr. Miles' Nervine upon the shattered nerves having restored them to perfect health.
"I endured agony that words cannot describe. My limbs would twitch, my head would jerk, I would have spasms of convulsions. I doctored with many physicians, but they did me no good. I took the whole world's pill. My mother's daughter-in-law, who had been a sufferer from epilepsy, and who had been entirely exhausted from constant care, recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine. I took the first dose to the letter. Some thought it would do me harm, but I thought it could not be worse than I had been. I took seven bottles in all, and I am happy to say I am well."
NORAH HOWARD, Hobart, Ind.
North Manchester, Indiana.
"Our little boy Harry had spasms for three years, and although we doctored with the best physicians we could find, he grew worse until he had ten spasms a day. We thought he could not live. We then began giving it to him Miles' Nervine. We began giving it to him when he was in a dreadful condition. We gave him a few doses and he improved and we gave him a few more and he improved and we gave him a few more and he improved and we gave him a few more

BOY SLAIN; NOT KIDNAPED.

Body of 3-Year-Old Cleveland Lad Found in Barrel Near Home.

Alexander Hoenig, 3 years old, was found in a barrel head near his father's house, 2822 Scovill avenue, Cleveland. The note bore only evidence of murder. On the neck is a long red line, as if made by a rope. The neck is also crushed in, as though with a stone. Proof of the murder theory lies in the fact that the boy rested on the head, as if pitched headfirst into the barrel. The child had been sought as a possible victim of kidnapers. The father left in a fatal alarm the boys was brought in him by neighbors. When he came back he could not be induced to attend one. "Is he dead?" he mother was visiting a fortune teller to see if she would not get a clue of her baby's fate. The news spread rapidly through the neighborhood, which is largely occupied by Germans. A great crowd gathered in a frenzy, neighbors or city detectives attacked the father and mother, and there was some more evidence of the identity of the murderer than a single lame shoeprint. The body of the child was found in the section of a small house and directing

HE CHOSE WELL

Judson Harmon, Head of the Pere Marquette, Picks Charlevoix for Summer Home.

Last week Hon. Judson Harmon, receiver and practically the general manager of the Pere Marquette and C. H. & D. Railway systems, purchased the H. A. Wheeler cottage, on the Chicago resort grounds, in this city, and will occupy it with his family this summer.

Judge Harmon is just now being mentioned by the so-called "safe and sane" branch of the democracy for nomination for president, and stranger things have happened than that he gets it, if Henry Watterson is any judge of the situation.

The Wheeler cottage is in the "gold coast" near Chicago avenue, one of the most desirable locations on the grounds.

PREACHER GETS JOB

Rev. J. D. Deets Appointed to a Fat Place in Government Service.

Rev. J. D. Deets, formerly M. E. pastor at Central Lake, and more recently pastor at Northport church and Indian mission has been appointed by President Roosevelt special agent to allot lands and dispose funds among the Indians. His salary will be $2,500 a year and expenses.

The appointment came as a surprise to Rev. Deets, as it was unsolicited. It was made possible by the friendship which suddenly developed between Rev. Deets and Commissioner Francis E. Leupp, at the great Indian camp meeting last summer when the commissioner came to address the men. Mr. Deets is a man of strong individuality. He is sidewalk and aggressive in his methods.

He was born in Pennsylvania about 50 years ago, and educated in Allegheny college, Meadville, Pa., and Hamline university, St. Paul, Minn. He has had a varied career since his entry into the ministry, 25 years ago. He has held pastorates in the Dakotas, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan.

Rev. Deets expects to get marching orders sometime this month. His family will remain here for the present. He will go first to Lower Brule, S. D., and from that point will handle the three reservations, the Brule Sioux, the Cheyenne and the Crow Creek reservations.

SALOON BONDING

Legislature Broadens Scope of Liquor Bond Surety Companies.

The house on the 8th passed two bills which show the increasing importance of surety bonding companies in modern business—a bill to allow of their incorporation under the general insurance acts of the state of Michigan, and under the supervision of the insurance department, and Rep. Archibald Bunting of Lenawee bill to allow the acceptance of surety bonds for saloons in all parts of the state.

The first bill went through practically without opposition in the house and bill had much of the debate to which the house has grown accustomed, but finally went through by a vote of 80 to 4, the largest vote yet received for a controverted measure which has no particular public sentiment behind it.

This final vote marked one of the greatest parliamentary victories of the session. Through all these weeks the house has been organized for the Bunting bill, and organized in a basis of 80 to 4. The four were Reps. Burdick, Dickinson, Dewey and Stowell.

The bill is a simple measure. When Rep. Hudson offered an amendment to the bill restricting the number of saloons in the state to one to every 1500 inhabitants, Rep. Bunting did not get angry, neither did he gloat when the amendment went the way of doom. When Rep. Mosier every moved to strike out the clause restricting incorporable bonds to those of Michigan bonding companies, there was no ruffling of Rep. Bunting's spirit. The amendment was lost. When Rep. Burdick moved to strike out all after the enacting clause, Rep. Bunting merely expressed the hope that the amendment would not prevail, and it is so go that way.

If this bill become law, counties or municipalities—city, village or township—may accept bonds from surety companies incorporated under Michigan laws. They may reject the bonds without cause. In starting suit against the bonding company, the municipality may sue in the county where the alleged cause of action arose. This last section bringing the law under the present arrangement, was an amendment presented by Reps. Punch, and was the only amendment adopted.

The bill now goes to the senate, where there are said to be 21 votes in its favor.

Primary School Money.

At the rate of $1 a head for the said annual appropriation of the primary school money, there is $255,229 to be apportioned, of which Charlevoix county receives $1,800. The next apportionment, in October, gives a considerably larger sum, as the per capita will be about three times greater. Last year the apportionment was $11 per capita.

Bill to Limit Number of Saloons.

Last week Representative Stroud introduced a bill empowering the common council of the city of Charlevoix to restrict the number of saloons in the city.

If the bill becomes a law the council may refuse to grant license in any case when it considers the field already well covered.

A Narrow Escape.

G. W. Floyd, a resident of Hunkemo, had a narrow escape four years ago, when he ran a jimson bur into his thumb. He says: "The doctor wanted to amputate it but I would not consent. I bought a box of Bucklen's Arnica salve and that cured the dangerous wound." Use it. For sale by Hines & Co. Druggist.

Wonderful Eczema Cure.

"Our little boy had eczema for five years," writes N. A. Adams, Hereford, Tex. "Two of our home doctors said the case was hopeless, his lungs being affected. We then employed other doctors but no benefit resulted. By chance we read about Electric Bitters; bought a bottle and soon noticed improvement. We continued this medicine until several bottles were used, when our boy was completely cured." Best of all blood conditions and body building health tonics. Guaranteed by F. G. Submarine Signal Gains Favor.

It still probably be not more than a few years before nearly all of the vessels engaged in the lake traffic will be equipped with the submarine signaling apparatus. The system has already been placed on a number of the boats of the Pittsburg steamship company.

The submarine signals are strongly recommended by the Lake Carriers' association, and during the winter an executive committee composed of some of the best known vessel masters on the lakes was sent to test the submarine signal system as operated on the Atlantic coast. Their report was highly favorable and it was since their return that the Pittsburg boats were equipped with the receiving apparatus.

In March, President Livingstone officially requested the lighthouse board to install submarine signals on the Great Lakes and the board promptly acceded to the request. Since then all of the lake light vessels have been equipped.

The Great McEwen Coming.

"There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in thy philosophy, Horatio," and after witnessing a performance of the Great McEwen and his company one is compelled to exclaim, "Will wonders never cease." McEwen's entertainment is unlike the entertainment of any other magician, hypnotist or mind reader in that in one evening he performs the most difficult, elaborate and complicated feats of each. Every thing is novel from beginning to ending and embraces much that is wired, incomprehensible and marvelous to behold. His entire entertainment is presented independent of the usual stage artifices, such as especially designed dress suits, confederates in the audience or mechanical trap doors and contrivances in the stage, and yet, in his magical performance, they are all there in which he makes you believe you see things you should not.

The mysteries and wonders of the occult and spiritualism which Mr. McEwen has spent years investigating, are brought home to each audience which witnesses his entertainment in the exploitation, by him of many of their most subtle disclosures and innovations.

His hypnotic demonstrations are genuine, scientifically interesting and highly amusing, and his mind reading is the superior of any living exponent of this branch of mental philosophy.

Supported by a company including several well known vaudeville acts the great McEwen comes to Charlevoix Theater 3 nights commencing Monday May 20. Ladies free Monday night.

Mother Friend.

Alexander Benton, who lives on Rural Route 1, Fort Edward, N. Y., says: "Dr. King's New Discovery is my best early friend. It cured me of asthma six years ago. It has also performed a wonderful cure of incipient consumption for my young wife. The first bottle ended the terrible cough, and she accomplished the other symptoms left one by one, until she was perfectly well. Dr. King's New Discovery's power over coughs and colds is simply marvelous." No other remedy has ever equaled it. Fully guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist. 50 and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

What Do They Cure?

The above question is often asked concerning Dr. Pierce's well known leading medicines, "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription."

Perhaps it is sufficient to say that the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a most potent alterative of blood purifying and tissue or lung-building and strengthening properties, and especially invaluable in a curative way in all the numerous wasting forms, or of the blood diseases, (through scrofulous taint, consumption, hereditary or other blood or constitutional causes, manifesting itself in pimples, eruptions, tumors, swellings, or in joints, scrofulous sores or ulcers, or in lung scrofula, or wasting cough, which is generally a scrofulous disease, and which, if neglected, or improperly treated, may lead to fatal results.

"Favorite Prescription" is a most potent remedy in all those functional disorders and weaknesses which are so prevalent with women, and which, if not cured, lead to much misery, and to the development of more dangerous and fatal diseases. It is a most potent cordial and invigorating tonic, and imparts strength to the whole system, and to the organs concerned in the performance of woman's peculiar functions.

"Favorite Prescription" is also a most efficacious and invaluable medicine for those nervous prostrations, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, and other nervous disorders which are so common with women.

"Favorite Prescription" is sold by all dealers in medicine.

He carried the little stenographer upstairs and there, with a wave of his hand, he swept a space within which was disclosed the business of the firm of Dr. Brown of Harrington street, London. To the uninitiated the mass of papers, pen, ink, and ledgers would have seemed hopelessly confused. But Dr. Brown, who was a man of all the business ways of his profession, had his own methods. He knew exactly where to put his hand on any paper he required, and, moreover, he knew that if it was allowed himself to his greatest purpose to have order.

Meanwhile things were going quite differently in the Angela Angela. The little change of ownership had influenced Andrew that Major Hunter would be delighted to meet him and had engineered his great coup. But he had been astute in the advantage of at the wholesale price to the Angela and had made a good profit on selling out the Hunter shares.

The Angela was a well managed concern, and the Hunter shares were at the moment superbly speculative. Andrew had made a good profit on them, and had made it, too, without investing a penny of his own money, because he had bought them outright on a margin, and had sold them without delivering them at a profit.

Half unconscious, yet unquestionably, he was a man who was in the habit of forming strong opinions of the character of people with whom he came in contact, and of acting upon them with the promptitude and decision of a man who knew his own mind. He had formed a very favorable opinion of Major Hunter, and was quite prepared to make a friend of him, and to do a good business with him.

"Well, Major Hunter, I have a proposition to make to you," he said, when he had seated himself in a chair and had lighted a cigar. "I am a man of business, and I am sure that you are a man of business, too. I have a proposition to make to you, and I think it will be to your advantage to have a country house to call your own."

"Go on, Mr. Andrew," said the Major, with a smile.

Reason to Be Thankful.

It is not in the New York Journal of commerce to be likely unappreciative of the blessings of the tariff. Yet even that journal is compelled to admit that the tariff has been a wonderful blessing to manufacturers and industries in this country. It has enabled our manufacturers to supply our home market and better—cheaper—than it can be supplied by any foreign competitors. Wouldn't it be better to have our money—coin or wealth—remain in the other citizens from their fellow-citizens?

Tariff a Poor Campaign Asset.

Senator Mr. Cleveland and a few college professors and professional reformers are never fascinated by the prospect of campaign affairs which will be based on a campaign book of free trade. Why, then, should the Republican party be apprehensive lest it fail to fulfill its pledges to the Democratic party? Wouldn't it be better to have our fellow-citizens at home in the other fellows busy

LOOKS LIKE SCARE

TALK OF DIVERTING FOREIGN BLOWS AT OUR TRADE.

If Blows in the Shape of Hostile Tariff Discrimination Shall Be in Fact Made, Then the United States Should Be Prepared to Return Blow for Blow.

Of direct allusions to American business in the official French report to the threatening tariff bulletins with Germany. The fact that the announcement was made through the American and French newspapers is in thirsts and corpse. There is no mistaking the purport and the intent of the opening paragraph of the letter quoted:

"Washington, March 6. The executive branch of the government has abandoned all hope of finding any way consistent with its oath after the French government to prevent the application of the maximum tariff rates on France and its colonies as a retaliation against the discrimination against the commerce of France by those countries. Instructions have been sent to the French ambassador at Berlin and to the French minister at Munich to inform the German government that the French tariff will be put into effect before such time as it shall be found that the German tariff is a discrimination against the commerce of France."

It is said that the tariff to the American Reciprocal Tariff League, this gentleman, and hardly be more satisfactory to attention to tariff with our protective tariff system under the strong stress of a necessity "to divert their blows at the American subject trade."

How are these blows to be avoided? Not by the executive branch of the government, for it "has abandoned all hope, we are told.

By the action of congress, then, that seems the authorized and will not have called to similar action next December.

So courses, target "divert these blows" hostile of ten months. That is, the executive can be authorized to frightened to demand that congress be called together in extraordinary session to put our house in order in a manner. Was the official proclamation Hence, the Associated Press prepared with this end in view? Does it look like it?

If the state realizes the danger which if the American people can be what is into a panic merely because Germany and France have threatened to at some time or other do something which is our exact trade, unless they are prohibited on form a downward revision of the American tariff, then, of course, there will be a general demand in behalf of general action through an extra session of congress.

Is this the object of the same people on March 4? Is there anything to be done that will save the situation without the hasty convening of congress extra session and the hurried passage of a law authorizing the executive branch of the government to allow Russian vessels to obtain what the American tariff shall be.

Yes, there is something else that can be done to divert these blows. The executive branch can assert its dignity and its courage by ceasing awaiting the progress of events, by not dodging before a blow is struck, by speaking out in a manner, and then, when the threatened blows shall have been dealt, by taking prompt measures of defense and retaliation.

If emergency of actual blows and retaliation shall prove to be the highest sum that either the Congress or the French Halls will be carried into effect before such blows or if at all events congress can be called into extra session.

Of what? Germany and its blows to Germany and France. Do they back and for have by the action of a high morning show that Germany has the advantage of importing worth of German and French goods above to their trade.

If there is to be an extra session of congress to deal with threatened blows at the American export trade that is what it should be called for. Not to amend the American tariff system at the dictation of any one or more foreign nations.

Meanwhile, as we have said, there is no apparent significance in the heartbreak from official pronouncements that the industrial problems will do well to take care of Aiken's tariff revising has been postponed until 1895. It is said, but has indirect revision also been postponed?

Nothing through reciprocity commissions to Germany and France should be an easy form of revision. It would also prove to be the very worst form that tariff revision could possibly take. We do not expect that such is the true inwardness of the announcement of March 6, but we think it would be wise for those concerned to be on the lookout for developments.

The Probable Reason.

The Washington Star professes great mystification as to the influences that have prevailed with President Roosevelt in keeping tariff revision in abeyance for something over two years past. We have no explanation to offer which may help the Star out of its quandary. Ordinary, everyday, plodding, common sense. Those in search of a reason may go further and find worse.

Force of Habit.

"How was it, Wagnis was foolish enough to write those letters read in the against the broad of [illegible]? I don't know, unless it was from being in a district attorney's office he got so in the habit the [illegible] each to indictment in letters."

Psychological Doubt.

"I see that man in so on my places that sometimes I think he is [illegible]. "So do I, said the gentleman to decide whether he's a man a double life or not now."

DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY.

Arrangement May Involve Destruction of Protective System.

As the provisional arrangement with Germany made about a year ago whereby importations into Germany from the United States received the benefit of the minimum tariff should have expired next June, the record of exporting American merchandise to the imposition of a serious and possible of prohibitive tariff will, it is gratifying to hear, that Ambassador von Sternburg has been instructed by his government to renew the existing understanding for a period sufficiently extended to allow of the negotiation of some permanent agreement. The basis of the negotiation is to be formulated by the Nat [illegible] ment, which was to their a several months ago to confer with the German tariff authorities and which lately returned Germany with it. A report of our conference have not been publicly disclosed. It is the opinion which is embodied in the treaty which the [illegible] will be forced to apply should conditions [illegible].

It must be said that the problem presented in our relations differing Germany has adopted a tariff with reactionary and minimum rates for countries which make concessions to Germany on their commercial dealings the benefit of the latter, which [illegible] other the [illegible] are applied differentiating between two [illegible] countries every consideration. In some [illegible] to do away to concessions products of the manufactured industry from the [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] commercial [illegible] against the United States [illegible] would have been injuriously affected. Most European countries have qualified for participation in the minimum rate by reciprocal reduction of duties on the United States has thus far [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] that it will agree to do so in the near future and which [illegible] indefinite.

Inevitably seems for and [illegible] [illegible] made to assist the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Petoskey News—William C. Niles, whose illness has been chronical in these columns, has passed to the great beyond, death coming to relieve him of earthly cares and tribulations at 11 o'clock Monday morning. The funeral will be held from Walloon Lake on Tuesday at 2 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. J. J. Bickford, pastor of the United Brethren church of which the deceased was a member. Mr. Niles came to Petoskey in the spring of 1883 and lived here for about a year. He then homesteaded 160 acres of land in Springvale township, eleven miles southeast of Petoskey. He was employed a great deal of the time at the lumber work at Inwood. During the week and on Saturday night would carry provisions for his family home on his back from the farm he moved to Inwood and later to Walloon Lake where he resided up to the time of his death. He was a member of Co. H, 2nd Regiment Michigan, United States volunteers, but recovered an honorable discharge after about nine months' service. He was a member of the G. A. R. Department of Michigan, Post Pulaski, and generally appreciated and esteemed.

My Best Friend.

Alexander Boston, who lives on Rural Route 1, Fort Edward, N. Y., says: "Dr. King's New Discovery is my best early friend. It cured my asthma six years ago. It also performed a wonderful cure of my client consumption for my son's wife. The first bottle ended the terrible cough, and the accomplished the client symptoms left one by one, until she was perfectly well. For King's New Discovery's power over coughs and colds is simply marvelous. No other remedy has ever equaled it. Fully guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist. 50 and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Life Threatened.

As Small Knife entered the room Sharke had his gun and was still loud in his threats against the Judge. Knife pointed upon the would be assassin. With his right hand he seized Sharke by the throat, and with his left the gun raised gun. Disarming the man, who resisted strenuously, little throw him against the door frame with such violence as to fracture his ankle. He was overpowered and lodged in jail, still really threatening the life of the Judge when he should be released from jail or prevented. Was sentenced long term, death, coupled with a threat on his person.

The history of Sharke's trouble is as follows: A few years ago Sharke's wife and another man formed an illicit alliance, and were so bold in their lewd conduct that the neighbors gave the men a good of tar and feathers were arrested and convicted of excessive cohabitation. Judge Maynard sentenced them to the Detroit house of correction.

Sharke seems to have been attached to the woman, for during his incarceration and trial he mortgaged his property to pay the costs of her defense. This mortgage was foreclosed, and in the final wind up of the affair it found the mortgagee the man's strange action. It has developed that on the day of the annual bar sales at Bellaire about three weeks ago, Sharke was at Bellaire to see if he could find Judge Mayne, in his ignorance expecting the Judge to be there because his name was attached to the sale decree. It is thought that he intended to kill the Judge at that time.

Judge Mayne is charitably disposed toward Sharke, and thinks it probable that his troubles have rendered him mentally irresponsible. The proper thing would seem to be for the man's friends to bring an examination, and either the doors of the asylum or Jackson prison yawn for Sharke.

Death of Mrs. Gale.

The death of Mrs. Flora E. Gale, occurred at the residence of Mrs. Louis Hewitt on Friday morning, after a protracted illness.

Mrs. Gale was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Blanchard, of Albion, Mich., and was born 1861, at that. She married at the age of 19 Mr. Edwards Gale, and a long and happy union resulted, the entire pleasure of which was passed in Albion, where Mr. and Mrs. Gale occupied places of prominence in business and social life. Mrs. Gale survived her husband fifteen years.

Of a happy, contented disposition, fond of her home, her church and her's pleasures, the hospitality and good cheer of the home at Albion were known far beyond the limits of city and State.

Later years brought the loss of husband, father, mother and dear friends, and the bright intellect became confused and clouded. Tender care and careful medical attention did not avail and death claimed her tired spirit.

The remains were accompanied to Albion for interment by the daughter and son, Mrs. H. L. Iddings, of this city, and Chas. B. Gale, of Calumet, who mourn a faithful and loving mother.

Conferences Will Get Together.

Bishop W. F. McDowell of Chicago, will preside at the next session of the Michigan conference of the Methodist Episcopal church to be held in Albion for a week beginning September 10. The Detroit Conference will be in session during the same time in Detroit. Bishop Hurty, of Indianapolis, will preside there.

This being the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the conference in Michigan, plans are being made for a great celebration in which both conferences will join at Detroit during the conference week. It is the year for the meeting of the lay electoral conference also, so that there will probably be in attendance seven hundred preachers and seven hundred laymen at the two sessions.

Common Council.

At the Monday night meeting of the common council there was present a representative of the Port Huron Traction Engine Co. After a showing of the merits of the machine the council voted to purchase a $2,475 ton ton steam road roller, subject to approval, the company to furnish competent operative with machine. The machine will be tested on the Antrim street gulley.

A communication was received from the Northern Michigan Macedonian Association, asking for the privilege of using the streets for amusements on June 21st, and that all licenses be turned into association treasury. Referred. Dunbar's license was granted to R. M. Johnson.

The Gulf Club petitioned the council to extend water mains to certain parts of gulf links.

JOE THE TURK.

The Renowned Salvation Army Convert and Officer Here Tuesday and Wednesday

Joe the Turk, will explain to the Salvation Army, and an earnest and faithful worker in that great police through organization, spoke at Salvation Army hall Tuesday evening, and remained over Wednesday.

Attended city one times for operatic preaching. Improved immediable times and appealing to every city of any size in the United States is the record of "Joe the Turk."

It has been twenty five years since Joe came over from Turkey and twenty three years since he enlisted in the Salvation Army. His conversion took place in San Francisco, where he chanced to hear the street service of the army, and living their way he became converted and about that time he has been in the service, traveling around the country. The first place that Joe was arrested was in Eastport, Oregon, where the judge sentenced him to ten days in jail and it was while there that he converted the judge.

In the services the Turk gave a brief history of the religious and followed this with stories of Turkish life and his sales of the Armenian massacres were particularly thrilling. A War Cry sent by Joe to some of his friends in Turkey nearly caused a riot in that country where it was thought that the paper was the organ of some band of revolutionists and it was with considerable difficulty that Joe straightened matters out.

Joe is a unique character and is much thought of in Salvation Army circles.

County Normal.

The new practice teachers are Iressie Hanshew who has fourth and fifth grade music, Georgia Crowell, and Lulu Gibson, fourth grade arithmetic and Olive Sherman, second grade reading.

Mamie Williams, who has been absent for a week on account of sickness, returned to school Monday.

Miss Hinces and Miss Reed accompanied by the Normal class made a trip into the country last Friday for the purpose of visiting rural schools. The first school they visited was the Hilton school where Mrs. Mason's teacher. After remaining there until 10:45 they went on to the Clark school taught by Miss Ella Bergeson, arriving in time to partake of the dinner which they had brought along with them. At 2:00 they started for the Barnard school where Miss Morgan teaches. From here the trip was made arriving in Charlevoix at 5:00. The members of the class greatly appreciate the efforts made by these teachers, in the school visited, for their entertainment. They have now some idea what their surroundings next year will be like.

—Mr. W. H. Hunt, the seed man writes that the spring is backward all over the United states and that North is not alone. He says that one of the best crop of peas he ever saw was planted the last of May and the first of June.—Northport Leader.

Traverse City Eagle: H. M. Frank, who lives on the west bay shore near Markham's brick yard, has been over his orchard and says that he has found upon close examination that buds are in perfect condition. Generally other orchards are in as good condition.

East Jordan Herald: The mile of "good roads," which south Arm voted to build at the spring meeting, will be constructed south of the village on the road running into Echo township. Members of the township board, accompanied by a number of south Arm citizens, drove out there Wednesday afternoon, looked over the road, and secured assurance to the township gravel.

The annual entertainment of the Grand Traverse Soldiers and Sailors association will be held in Traverse City Sept. 23, 24 and 25. Arrangements were begun last week. There will be about 300 of gates and a large number of tents are expected. The veterans will camp out in tents furnished by the state. Twenty counties are in the association.

Traverse City Herald: Mrs. A. W. Park who took charge of the shipping of the barrels of old rubbers to Honolulu Home, received a very nice letter from Mr. Park with acknowledgment. He says that the rubbers were sorted by the boys, cloth cut away from overshoes and then packed and sent to the rubber company with which he deals, and in return he received a check for $600.

Traverse City Eagle: John Morrow, who is doing the grilling at the resort of the river, went to East Jordan this afternoon to spend Sunday. He expects that it will take over a week to complete the work at the m. S. of the river. All the piles are in but the short piling is not completed. It will take about two days more to complete the start piling on the east side and about a week on the west side.

Undertaker J. A. Gill, and John Warren of nations Bay while returning from Traverse City were attacked by a pack of seven wild dogs that have inhabited the swamp a mile and a half south of town for more than a year. Time dogs are jet black in color, of a spaniel species and have returned completely to the savage state. They did not attack the horses, but in trying to reach the occupants of the buggy they grabbed the spokes and were thrown into the air by the wheels. The pack left town in pursuit, but did not locate the dogs. A reward is offered for their capture.

Petoskey Record: Twelve years ago Oliver J. Heath took the office of secretary of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance company of Emmet Charlevoix and Cheboygan counties. At that time the company was in a moribund condition, and looked like a hopeless undertaking proposition. It was in debt, had no credit, and no enterprise or business or available capital. It had not only left the public carrying a total of $100,314 insurance on December 31, 1895. But Heath at once put vast confidence and business into the company and 3,000 members, carrying insurance to the amount of $4,000,000. On May 18 last Heath received the secretaryship of the company on account of ill health and the burden of age, being now past the scriptural age allotted to man.

COMMENCEMENT EVENTS

Charlevoix Schools Passing Another Milestone in Their Growth and Upward Progress

While the series of Commencement events for 1907 really began last Sunday morning when Dr. Dr. Fairbanks preached the Normal Baccalaureate sermon at the Congregational church, the first strictly educational exercises will occur at the same church Friday evening of this week, when the Charlevoix County normal class will be graduated. "On the Stars Through Difficulties," is the sentiment that is inscribed upon the class banner—fitly a heroic motto. Following is the roster of the class.

Bessie Shaw, president, Charlevoix.
Georgia B. Crowell, vice president, Charlevoix.
Ethel C. Robinson, secretary, Boyne.
S. Marie Clark, Charlevoix.
Sarah Blanchard, Charlevoix.
Anna Dowdle, Charlevoix.
Elizabeth Tower, Charlevoix.
Ida Bennett, East Jordan.
Anna Conn, East Jordan.
Edna D. Gaston, Boyne.
Anna M. Olson, St. Jacobs.
Grace E. Sherman, Central Lake.
Minnie Wilkinson, Boyne Falls.

Following is the program of the exercises

Chorus—"Oh Come With Me" — Bracket
Invocation — Rev. Wilbur Chase
Vocal Solo—"Spring Song" — Becker
Address — Prof. A. B. Luing — Whitewater Normal College
Vocal Solo—"Irish Folk Song" — Finch
Presentation of Diplomas — Principal Emeritus Smith

The annual Alumni reunion will occur in the normal room, high school building, immediately following the graduating exercises.

The graduating exercises of the high school class of '07 will occur at the Charlevoix Theatre on Thursday evening of next week. "Not How Much, But How Well," is the motto adopted by the class, the roster of which is as follows.

Bessie Shaw, Charlevoix.
Georgia B. Crowell, Charlevoix.
Ethel C. Robinson, Boyne.
S. Marie Clark, Charlevoix.
Sarah Blanchard, Charlevoix.
Anna Dowdle, Charlevoix.
Elizabeth Tower, Charlevoix.
Ida Bennett, East Jordan.
Anna Conn, East Jordan.
Edna D. Gaston, Boyne.
Anna M. Olson, St. Jacobs.
Grace E. Sherman, Central Lake.

Presentation of Diplomas — A. G. Ordway, President Board of Education

The commencement Baccalaureate sermon for the class of '07 will be preached by Rev. Dr. Wright at the Methodist church next Sunday evening.

The Alumni Association will give the banquet and ball in honor of the class at Bank Hall, on Friday evening of next week. The usual literary post graduate program is announced.

The SENTINEL extends its cordial good wishes to the Class of '07.

Porter J. White in "The Fool's Revenge."

Porter J. White, the well known romantic actor in this season appears in that powerful tragedy, "The Fool's Revenge." Reports received from those indicate that Mr. White's conception of the part of Bertuccio is a most original and artistic. His interpretation of the routine part is entirely novel and unique and he holds his audiences as if by a spell. Mr. White carries a strong company and the play is produced on a scale of grandeur seldom witnessed anywhere. He carries elaborate scenery and elegant costumes. "The Fool's Revenge" will be seen here on June 5th.

Circuit Court.

Yesterday in the case of the People vs. Leo. Bulinsky, of Boyne City, the jury brought in a verdict of guilty of assault with attempt to commit the crime of rape.

In the People vs. Jacks, of East Jordan, for violation liquor law, the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty.

East Jordan Enterprise: The community were shocked Sunday afternoon to hear that Elias, wife of Peter K. Whelan had died of apoplexy. Deceased had been in poor health for some time but was thought to be in a fair way to recovery. She was in the village Saturday afternoon and even Monday morn had eaten well and was assisting about the house. Work which she was thinker as I did to a few minutes.

M. J. McGuire, of St. James, came over Wednesday, returning home Friday.

Gale Hines left yesterday on a few week's visit among friends in Southern Michigan.

The tresnury is turning out some of its gilt edge bills, and the output is gradually increasing.

Bishop McCormick held services at Christ's Episcopal church Monday evening, at which a class of eight was confirmed.

Lost August—Somewhere on the I. Bridge Gillespie, named Wm. Dougan, carried a rigid check for A Notice of the Hotel Eaton. Sheriff McWalts and Under Sheriff Wakefield have been trying to locate him. Success has thus far crowned their efforts. Dougan having been located in Boston, where he is held by the police. Sheriff McWalts will leave this week to bring him here.

INTERSCHOLASTIC ATHLETICS.

The Track and Field Meet at Traverse City Postponed On Account of Rain.

The track and field meet for Northern Michigan at Traverse City last saturday was postponed at noon on account of the drenching rain. It will come off next year at the same time and place and the medals will be kept over for that time.

Charlevoix, Traverse City, Petoskey, Manistique and Reed City were represented. A few events were run off in the forenoon in the drenching rain.

The events resulted as follows:

Hammer Throw—Austebrocher, first, Traverse City; Feiters, second, Traverse City; Smith, third, Charlevoix, 105 feet, 2 inches.

880 Yard Run—Beardsley, first, Reed City; Schalow, second, Reed City; Cleveland, third, Traverse City, Time 2:16 2-5.

Shot Put—Whiting, first, Traverse City; Austebrocher, second, Traverse City; Tarker, third, Petoskey. 36 feet.

100 Yard Dash—Miller, first, Traverse City; Blumenthal, second, Traverse City; Feiters, third, Petoskey. Time 10 2-5.

Discus Throw—Austebrocher, first, Traverse City; Feiters, second, Traverse City; Moeller, third, Petoskey. 91 feet three inches.

Coach Woodley was highly pleased with the showing made by the Charlevoix boys, and is of the opinion that could the days events have been lined, the boys would have given an excellent account of themselves.

Strond Got Mad

A Strond has a new requirement for the speaker of the House. He had been trying to attract Speaker Wheelon's attention for several minutes without success recently. Strond sits in the corner of the house where the speaker's eye does not readily rove.

"Hey—the back," said Strond.

"What's the matter?" asked Wilke" Harsis.

"If I ever come down here again I'm going to vote for a cross eyed speaker," said he.—Grand Rapids Herald.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

At the council meeting Monday evening there were no transactions that became a matter of record.

The mayor is shaking up the matter of cost of electric wiring, and agitation, and there was a general discussion of the question.

The board of public works and superintendent Marthindale were present. The mayor stated that there was considerable sentiment among the people that the charges for this work were excessive, and should be reduced.

Mr. Marthindale claims that the charge for this work here is less than in Traverse City and other towns, and are reasonable. He claims that of the 25 cents per foot charged, the workman receives 25 cents, and that the complaint is not reasonable. Instances as Mr. Marthindale is not in any sense benefitted by an excessive charge for electric work, the board of public works cannot see where any injustice is done the public.

The grounds taken by mayor Armstrong are that by doing this work at actual cost the use of electricity is encouraged, and the earnings of the plant increased.

VICTIM OF OWN HYPNOTISM

Man Can Not Be Wakened and Is Near Death.

Self-hypnotism is believed to be the cause of an extraordinary condition in which Andrew J. Lemoyne of South Weldon, Mass., has been lying for two weeks. Having done room in his wife's apartment owned by him in Hull and the real estate of the premises and appointed his brother Peter executor, Lemoyne laid down on the bed, the brother, Mr. Simpson has discovered himself into his present state and that, unless some thing happens he will be dead in a week. He is blind in spite of conscientious treatment by a skilled physician, causing his death from shock to the blood purifier fluid of the physician. Simpson is worried by the age and his inability to care for his wife and son in the absence of their father. The brothers have consulted Mr. Simpson's physician, who is a hypnotist, and he has promised to do all in his power to wake the sleeper. The physician has hypnotized the patient in the past and has succeeded in waking him from a state of hypnotism, but he has never been able to wake him from self-induced hypnotism. Simpson is worried by the fear that the physician may be unable to wake the sleeper, and that the family will be left without a support. The brothers have consulted the physician and have found that the patient is in a state of self-induced hypnotism and that it is not the physician's fault that he can not wake him.

EXCITING TIMES ON THE CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE.

RUEF PLEADS GUILTY.

Confession of Prison's Political Boss Terrifies Leaders.

The sensational court confession of "Abe" Ruef, political boss of San Francisco, and the regain for pardon when he was arraigned for trial before Judge Dunne on charges of graft and extortion, had the effect of partly but not quite the most profound sensation in San Francisco and throughout the State.

In the ranks of the grafters, gamblers and especially among the politicians little graters who have bought and sold public rights and franchises for years and corrupted scores of public officials, there's startling surprise and the explicit promise to expose those responsible for the existing visions and abuses, recited terror accounting to panic.

While Ruef did not go into details in his remarkable statement to the court he declared his desire to pay the

MEMORIAL DAY.

Sacred and polished and pray to stands
The flag, lifted high in loyal hands.
His cause no longer of Boston, "Nothing speaks with the tongue of light."
His thoughts wing back to the days of his youth, when Marshall Sullivan used to call:
"Up, the flag, up and out!
Let the fife and the drum shake the air with war!"
Again we see pass the ranks of blue, while the fife and drum
Again we hear the tramp of the defiant notes
Again we see the waving banner, the glorious stars and stripes
Again we see the Stars and Stripes, the emblem of a common kind.

Raising Jack's from its thunder in a common kind.

Above it, he pledge to stand and swear
Not alone in peace, but in war, and
Not alone, the grade crumbled to ashes he
With its great spirit, "what great an ended
He sees the basic banner now protected
Which death speaks up on the tops of this.
Yet cannot we forget, we who live
A cause so dearly won and sweet
So wind and silence the drum that will Be the cause of the spirit, "Long live the LOCAL NOTES.

The steamer Ely's new barge has arrived in the lake and will report soon to assist in the work on the Rock of Ages lighthouse.

W. H. Bell, who at Wexford leases land of Nathan Bell, has purchased the interests of Grand Rapids and the boat will be run as in former years.

Manistee may enlarge the canal so as to admit boats which it now turns away on account of the limit of a foot of the regular company, making arrangements for the transfer of the freight which now goes by other routes to cost Ecorse.

A Week ago special says: Shipyard of Jenkins perfects by water in a large scale this begun here. The S. J. Jenkins has just launched for Bonne Cette, Minn., with one hundred of grain cargo. Heretofore this freight has gone by rail to Cleveland and thence by water. Such craft must hereafter be regular Great Lakes freighters.

The Northern Michigan Trans. portation Co. has sold to the Chicago and Lake Superior Transportation Co. the steamer Lake Superior, which has plied between the company's docks at Lake Superior and Chicago for the past season. The company has purchased a short road line to connect with the Grand Trunk at Ludington. The company has been forwarded to Manistee R. R. Church and is expected that her and other officials of the line and will be there the latter part of the week.

The Port City Record: Caught in the act of taking a good point, west of Old Mission point, the tug Maggie was held from last evening until noon today while anxiety reigned in Traverse Bay and the search for the tug was made. Captain Morrison of the vessel set her low of tugs. The Maggie went to Cross Head yesterday afternoon after the barge, and left the tug in charge of a crew in the afternoon, expecting to reach Suttons Bay at midnight. Water alone was no sign of her late detention, the limits of the tug to hold for her of traces of any wreckage. Word was sent to this city and the Record tried all the towns in the vicinity the tug in doubt of the late point. Advert morning, however, another message came that the tug safe in the note. The Maggie is in charge of Captain Van Etten who has been a sailor of these men. There was no storm last night but at the time of the storm the tug was at Old Mission point. Captain Van Etten was in charge of the tug and he was in the pilot house and he was the only man on board. Heretofore this freight has gone by rail to Cleveland and thence by water. Such craft must hereafter be regular Great Lakes freighters.

The Commencement exercises will be held in the Congregational church Friday evening of this week.

Wonderful Eczema Cure.

"Six little boy had eczema for five years," writes J. A. Allen, Hunterville, Pa. "Two of our home doctors said the case was hopeless, his lungs being affected. We then employed other doctors but no benefit resulted. By chance we read about Electric Bitters, bought a bottle and soon noticed improvement. We continued this medicine until several bottles were used, when our boy was completely cured." Best of all blood medicines and body building health tonics. Guaranteed at F. G. Notice

At the special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, held at their office in the city of Petoskey, May 18, 1907, O. T. Booth, Secretary, and treasurer of said company, resigned his office in favor of C. Dingeldein.

The Board accepted said resignation, and immediately elected Cornelius Dingeldein to the office of Secretary and Treasurer of said company, to fill and office during the unexpired term.

To the stockholders of the above company and all other residents of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan counties, I cheerfully and heartily recommend to your kindly notice, the new secretary and treasurer, and he speak for him a cordial reception at your hands.

Mr. Dringeldeing has been in the employ of this company during the last eight years, and has ever been found honest and capable, doing his duty well in a clean manly way, without lying, fraud or deceit of any kind, and I have every reason to believe is the right man in the right place.

Now gentlemen, in entering my official connection with this company, allow me to return to you my heartfelt thanks for your generous and hearty support, in the endeavor which has been made, to build up in these three counties a first class insurance company, that would give to its patrons better and more comprehensive protection than is furnished by any other mutual or old line company doing business in the state, and just such a company you have in the old Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co.

Most respectfully,

—Mrs. G. A. Sears arrived home Monday from Saginaw and Ella island.

—Dr. G. B. Weed and his brother, John Weed, of Detroit, are here for a few days.

—A bountiful rain came Tuesday and the farmers and sugar beet people are smiling.

—Mrs. Clara Law, of Dowagiac, Mich., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hinton, is here for the summer.

—The 2nd team of the Charlevoix high school played ball at East Jordan Saturday, winning the game by a score of 7 to 4.

—E. A. Burnett and wife, who are temporarily living at Cross Village, were here the past week. They expect to return here for the summer.

—Robert Caldwell, of Traverse City, was in town over Sunday. He leaves to-day for the home of his ancestors in Scotland, and will be there all summer.

—John T. Kirkpatrick, on Monday last, had been dead but three weeks, and he leaves a second and two daughters—Clinton B. Whitmoyer and Mrs. Frank Merrill, of California, and Mrs. George Burns, of Shakeny, Mich. Whitmoyer was a member of Boston Post, G. A. R., under the auspices at which he was buried yesterday.

As a comrade, citizen, neighbor and friend, Leonard Whitmoyer was respected by all.

"On the Bridge at Midnight."

Tonight formats for its scenery "On the Bridge at Midnight," which is due here on June 12th is not a sensational play. Its most is thoroughly substantial and genuine, being a combination of absorbing story, and one of the most notable scenic achievements of the modern stage. The celebrated mechanical effects, which give the play its name, the bridge scene, is after all only an incident in the story of a blind mother's devotion and a long search for her lost child. Her patriotic quest led her, in the city of Chicago, to the river at the point where Chicago's engineering triumph, the huge jack knife bridge, lifts and closes its huge valves every day to let steamers pass. This revolving bridge is most faithfully imitated as well as the structure itself, but after all the scene is merely an embellishment of the intensely dramatic narration of the sightless mother's search. The great valves rise and fall as they do in the original, and a steamer passes through in full view of the audience, but presently these lookers are whisked into the progress of the story. While the tenth thread of sorrow there is plenty of comedy of the lively, whole some sort, two characters in particular supplying it. Germans and Irish and these are in the hands of two exceedingly clever actors, sunshine and shadow follow each other through all the scenes with strong, climaxes and scenery as natural as life and all without recent to the harsh and unnatural excesses of sensational melodramas. "On the Bridge at Midnight," is to be seen who an exceptionally strong company this season.

—Miss Alice Gallagher of the post office force is away on a two weeks' vacation.

—Lee Hosmond has a new ceement block machine in operation at his works on Antrim street.

—Special Communication of Charlevoix Lodge, No. 282, F. & A. M., next Tuesday evening for work on second degree.

—Prof. Leopold Fiedler, of Toledo, was here last Thursday and Friday. He will be here again about June 20, to open the swimming pool.

—All lifesaving stations on the great lakes will be equipped with motor boats as fast as the government can make the necessary arrangements.

—J. B. Parsons last week purchased of the C. D. Wood residence, on the south verdure, and has occupied it. Mrs. Wood will reside in Grand Haven with her daughter.

—C. E. Turrell & Co. have purchased a new auto-bus for the Charlevoix local route, and expect it here next week. It is much better equipped than the one in use last summer.

—Nathan Bollert is at the head of the Chicago 17th Illinois Band this year, and is reported here tomorrow to get the piece in shape for opening. The pleasant part of Mr. Bollert's coming is the fact that he comes with a bride.

—The Bakers, of the famous Inland Hotel, have leased the Lamphere, Gidney and Antolle residences for the season, and will use them as annexes to the hotel. They already had the Partridge cottage, and the new cottage they are building on the Horne lot will be ready for occupancy by July first.

—The average farmer is probably not aware of the fact that an average sized sofa takes a head more than horses. Such is the case and the price has been gradually rising for a number of years. There has never been what would be called an overproduction of sofas, while the market has often been unable to fully supply.

—Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Woodruff delightfully entertained a dozen close friends at their home Wednesday evening, May 29. The house was artistically decorated, the color scheme being carried out in mauve and blue, the colors of the class. The effects of Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff were thoroughly appreciated by the class, and all agree that they are royal entertainers.

—A great change takes place at the Michigan office today. He is to night the editor force and Manager Crouter will be settled down in their new and elegant quarters on the third floor. A new and larger switch board is installed, and new furniture, including a fine public counter, is placed. We doubt if there is a finer office of its class and character anywhere. The public and Manager Crouter are to be congratulated.

—We acknowledge receipt of an invitation to the marriage of Mr. Ira Alexander Campbell to Miss Zenia Wood, Friday, at Los Angeles, Calif. June 7th. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Pier, of Los Angeles, and the groom is the eldest son of Capt. and Mrs. D. H. Campbell, of this city. Mr. Campbell is a practicing attorney of Seattle, Wash., but a landed fellow of means, and is already making his mark in the world. Here's hoping that Ira and his bride will prosper and be happy all the days of their lives.

—Charlevoix will local stock have a complete, up-to-date laundry in operation. M. M. Dieting & Son, who come here from Central Lake, have this plant nearly ready for work in the building at the foot of Clinton street, formerly used as a bowling alley. The establishment is provided with every appliance required, and everything is new. When in operation it will be one of the best plants in Northern Michigan. The proprietors are experienced men, in this work and propose to make the plant fully up to all requirements. Charlevoix needs such an ideal one, and the building is particularly well adapted to the work.

—Everybody felt that the great feature of Memorial Day in Charlevoix was the grand sight of six hundred pupils in line, accompanied by seventeen teachers and the superintendent. The comrades of the Grand Army and the Women's Relief Corps, which especially to convey to both teachers and pupils their grateful appreciation for the efforts which brought such grand results. Mrs. Adella Porter, President of the W. R. C., Geo. W. Cross, commander of Baxter Post, G. A. R., and J. G. Reed, patriotic instructor, all speak in words of praise and pride of this inspiring feature of the services.

Charlevoix Postoffice Raised From the Lightweight to the Middleweight Class.

As a result of the steady growth of the city, the Charlevoix postoffice was last week raised from the third to the second class. Postmaster Sheesh was notified of the change on Tuesday.

This raises the postmaster's salary from $1,300 to $1,600.

MACCABEE ATTRACTION

"What Happened to Jones."

Arrangements have just been perfected by Mr. Geo. H. Hoskyn whereby he will produce Broadhurst's famous farce comedy, "What Happened to Jones," on June 21st, when the great crowd of Maccabees will visit Charlevoix. The cast will be a carefully picked one, made up by the course de la crème of our clever Theatrical world. The play is so well known that it hardly needs any comment, but suffice it to say that Mr. Hoskyn promises that this attraction shall transcend all his previous efforts in point of merit, as we can safely rely upon a great performance. Mr. Hoskyn will appear in her original role of Helma, the Swedish servant, a part to which Mr. Geo. Broadhurst featured her for three years. Mr. Hoskyn plays his own particular creation, "Jones," the lovely, rattling big lip burnt Jones, and "what happens to him" is plenty and uproarious. Details of the cast will appear in our next issue.

Alumni Reception.

The Alumni reception to the Charlevoix high school class of '07 will occur tomorrow (Friday) evening at 8 o'clock sharp at Hank Hall. Following is the literary and musical program:

To the Unknown Critic.

A few weeks ago we had occasion to remind an anonymous writer in the Sentinel, that the editors of journalism forbade the publication of correspondence that was not signed by the writer—the signature to be considered only as an evidence of good faith on the part of the writer. To the letter was attached only the suggestive word "Mixer."

And now comes another letter from the same source, with the same name in mind. At the outset the writer states that he did not write either letter for publication, but as an inspiration to the editor to take up the cudgel along the line so vigorously treated in the letters.

We presume the writer is a friend of ours—in fact the tone of the letters indicate it. Therefore, why should he ask us to shoulder responsibility which he is unwilling to assume? Both letters are extremely radical criticisms of the administration of city affairs, and contain in their scope everything from the steam road roller to the water tower.

There is no question about the right of any tax payer to criticise the administration of public affairs. He may do it on the street or in the newspapers. But it is not the bravest act among the prerogatives of human liberty to direct shafts of criticism from ambush. If he believes his criticisms are just, he should be willing to stand for them in the open. The editor is not to be made victim the critic of either insincerity or moral cowardice.

The editor of this paper has generally been pretty blunt in the expression of his opinion on public and quasi-public questions. He would be the first to criticise the administration of city affairs if he thought there was good reason for it. For he is constituted to believe that "Mixer" is troubled with indigestion. Indeed, it would be hard to find in the human mind a greater number of errors than we find in the two anonymous letters. We have no intention of reviewing them, but we are tempted to briefly refer to a few of them.

Economy and cheapness are not necessarily synonymous terms. The tree of economy does not always bear fruit the first year, nor yet, maybap, the second. The true economist looks to the future, or the results to the "long run," to use a homely phrase. The transition from the old to the new in the water and light systems, which seems to be the most conspicuous target for "Mixer's" arrows, was wise and economical. In fact it was the only sane solution of a problem that demanded immediate action. Probably half a hundred villages and cities in Michigan have solved the same problem in the same way, and in not one has it been unsuccessful. The debit and credit of it, in our own case, has been so plainly shown that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not be uninformed.

We doubt if any village or city of the size in Michigan has more to show for its indebtedness than Charlevoix. It owns its own water and light plant, representing a value of five times the bonds issued, has two paved streets in Northern Michigan, and two paved residence streets that are models. It has substantial and commodious school buildings.

The "so-called park," representing "more dead capital at interest," cost the village $900 twenty five years ago. It would bring $10,000 to day if our up town resort lots. Who would vote to sell it?

Martindale and Campbell did not "make a cent act with the railroad company for light and water at less than cost." What they did was with the knowledge and consent of the common council, and was grounded in good business common sense.

It is easy to find fault, and no council or board of public works can hope to escape criticism. This is one of the "emoluments" of the office. But it should be borne in mind that the gentlemen who fill these official bodies are also tax payers, and have the good of the city at heart. To them "Martindale and Campbell may be "Mixers" asserts. But it is true that in expert matters his opinions have weight, as they should have, especially when those opinions are fortified by manifest fact and the experience of others. We consider the city mighty fortunate in possessing the services of a man so well equipped as he is a general knowledge of all that our public utilities involve.

"The popularity of a newspaper," "Mixer" says, "depends upon its ability to reflect the interests of the people at large. Don't be afraid, Pro-Smith, the people will be with you." Then, Mr. "Mixer," what is the matter with your courting a little popularity for yourself by signing your name to your criticisms? We don't want all the popularity. These columns are open to you.

A Traverse City special says: A dozen amputations deck hands on the Northern Michigan Transportation Co's steamer Missouri made a desperate attempt to throw the body of an Indian deck hand overboard during Monday's storm, while the boat was beating out into the lake where the storm encountered was the worst that she has ever seen. The Indian was drowned in the Chicago slip while drunk, and was being shipped to the house at Suttons Bay for burial. As the steamer left South Manitou the storm came up, and by the time she was ready to round Cat Head point and gain the shelter of Grand Traverse bay, the snow was so thick that the light could not be discerned, and the wind roared so loudly that the fog whistle was drowned out. It would have meant going on the reef if any attempt had been made to make shelter, so the captain moved her directly into the wind and steamed slowly toward the Fox Islands. While he was on the bridge facing the storm, the mates were below, keeping the crew of deck hands in subjection. They blamed the corpse for the storm and wanted to give it a quick burial in the lake. They made one rush, but were covered up in velvet held by the mates. That, they were sent to the forecastle and kept there. When the body was landed at Suttons Bay the storm calmed down and the sun came out.

"Well?" said Mr. Frost. "What is up now, sir?"

"I came over with Dubonski from Belgium this morning," said O'Rourke.

"With Dubonski?" repeated the elder. "Dubonski has an introduction from me to you. Unless he has in his luggage a thing to say, unless he finds it out by coming here when you and I are together, he need not know that we have met in Belgium. He has a plan which will serve our purpose perfectly. With his name behind it, I think it certain that our people will accept it."

He sketched Dubonski's nightmare tactfully and Mr. Frost listened.

"There is ability in it, of a sort," he said. "As a backing, it has credit, but it won't act."

"There are great advantages to you and to me in this plan, and as it links," replied O'Rourke. "Dubonski must be handled with extreme care. I and Ryan is going to play his game because I can trust your secretary and your self implicitly. I want him to be treated as a perfect defaulter. I want me to be greeted with enthusiasm. I want at least an air of remonstrance for us from you, and then a fiery acceptance of it. I am going back to Belgium. Dubonski is impatient because there, and I shall be compelled to leave the matter in your hands. I trust, hope, if you imagine it to my satisfaction I may be of service to you. I am Michael Michael Michael, Michael, and I may sympathize in this with the sensations of the audience."

"I am your secretary, Mr. O'Rourke," he said. "And I will do my best. To tell the truth, I never thought there had been a deal less in the business than I looked for, and it carries a good deal of dodge with it."

"I think we have said almost all we have to say," O'Rourke said, as he rose and looked his watch and a cheque-book. "Dubonski is coming to-day. I'm off to Belgium. Ryan and I will be in touch with you. Ryan, you and I must be off. Good-bye, Mr. Frost."

"Not all in my side. Listen to this one," said Ryan as he drew a crumpled sheet from his inside pocket. "I found it on the floor of the cab. I'm going to give it to the British government, and you'll provide something for the Times to get up and howl about, and I can't be of the greatest use to me on the other side of the water. Otto, man, Mr. O'Rourke. He is a very thing all round—good for you, good for the newspapers, credit to the police, and good for me. You stand sponsor in the confidence of the government, and they'll cram nobody. The sooner there be a search for the man the better for my purpose. I might be knee-deep in Belgium, man, if we had a splash of some sort on that."

"Is everybody absolutely safe?"

"Absolutely safe, I tell you!"

"Very well, third afternoon, Frost."

"Third afternoon. Shall I meet you again before you go?"

"I think not. I will probably start in mid-run. Remember, The matter of the cheque and authorities for the money I don't understand and don't ask you to do it."

"Shall I meet the Frost? and the person in himself when the counter had been shown out of the front drawer? Remember, if I took me a year to find him, and I thought I was on the right track at the end of this. It is surprising to notice how very few of those fellows think it worth while to assist a searcher."

CHAPTER IX.

There was little one thing just now that troubled Mr. Frost. He was very back to his Devonshire home and he did not want to have Dubonski in his lodgings. Bring there any road Dubonski and Dubonski appeared, and Dubonski would be gather about him. But Dubonski himself never lost from this difficulty.

"You will see that, sir," he said on the morning following his war, "that I do not value your hospitality. Indeed, I shall be more free to move if I am away from you, and shall offer no publicity of our joint service here, for while to complete with, I am not in your confidence."

O'Rourke was more than politely regretful at parting from Dubonski, but he recognized the wisdom of the proposal, and the old man took lodgings at a good distance from the Frost. Communication passed also more freely concerning the cheque to O'Rourke. The Frost and Dubonski, for the time, had written a fairly looking note to Ryan, and Ryan had written a friendly letter to O'Rourke, which a person in Belgium, who a person in Belgium, was to deliver to the person from his friend Shagpatch.

He hardly knew what to make of the plan, and could only commentate that Dubonski knew what he was about, and of appeal to personal, who seemed to Angela. Frost was a man who had a friendly expectancy in life this and had the due of the Frost family, and he was while he reached out the clue to anything he was interested.

"Why, Mademoiselle, all fellow what brings you to London. Come in, old man, come in."

Mademoiselle Brook frank to chally enough but with strange gravity a gravity unusual—a gravity unusual.

"Dubonski, I want to talk with you. I believe" he said, questionably. "I have an important message for him. I followed him to Brussels, but could learn nothing there until I found out and again that you and he had come over together, and that he was in London. Is he with you?"

"He was, until this morning," said O'Rourke. "I wanted to show three people that he was a business man, and of sympathizing with him. They were talking about our getting into holes and rotters at Jamaica, and seemed to think that I dare not own the grand old fellow to London."

"There is no owning you." Mademoiselle said with a smile. "Especially to his kin."

"What?" cried O'Rourke, early, sitting down at his desk to write the address. "Is Mademoiselle Brook, the search lists?"

"No," said Mademoiselle. "I'm an outsider there as elsewhere." If little speech expressed with a sudden bitterness, the voice her manner declared it.

"You're going back to Hunter, I suppose?" said O'Rourke, in a voice friendly to you as he spoke.

"Well, no," said Mademoiselle. "I have not, as yet, at all events, for a time."

"Then" asked the other, in himself surprisingly applying a sheet of paper to the address, and looking at the memory of his friend. "Dublin one of the find although."

"Do you speak to Jamesie." said Mademoiselle.

"I start tonight" returned O'Rourke. "I promised Farley to go back again. Of course Mademoiselle saw through that little subterfuge, and of course O'Rourke knew he would.

"Tonight?" said Mademoiselle. "You'll do me a service, won't you?"

"Is it a service, sweet, you?"

"Take a letter to my friend, with smiling seriousness.

"To meeting at the Langham." Mademoiselle said. "Thence a lady there—an American—whom I know at home. She's going to visit Brussels, and except for her maid stays alone. Neither she nor her maid speaks a word of French, and shall be obliged if you'll put yourself at her service in case she wants anything."

"Invariably gallantly," said O'Rourke. "Pin I know now?"

"I think not." answered Mademoiselle. "She is a quiet lady, rather pretty, and ennui's sick. A Mrs. Stone."

"And what excuse for my visit a year ago I can take yourself can be said carefully."

"Well, say that I wished to know if I think two millions can deserve it."

"Two millions?" O'Rourke whistled and then laughed. "Two millions!"

"Mrs. Stone."

"Two millions sterling? Mademoiselle, I ask you seriously, as a man of money, is there a person alive who is worth two millions sterling?"

MERELY THEORIZING

REFORMERS WHO ARGUE FROM A FALSE STANDPOINT.

Contending for the Abolition of a Protective Tariff They Exhibit Complete Ignorance of Facts and Conditions Relating to American Industry.

At the head of the leading educational institution in a state which is increasing in its area and population, has promoted through protection more, perhaps than any other state of the union. Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton college, became unable to shake off the effects of early training sufficiently to grasp the fact that this world has moved since he at the feet of free trade college Democrats. Accomplished facts, the actual results of nearly half a century of protection are to him as nothing when they conflict with the theory that protection was wrong in the first place, and is all the more so now that it is universally credited of all forms. Speaking not long ago at the dinner of the South Carolina society in New York to the congenial toast, "Home, O Catiline—the Patriot," president Wilson deplored the "situation of the tariff, the "artificial advantage" which has made it possible for many people to thrive and make money. Said he:

"Congress became the general foster mother—and that in a country where rich and almost fabulous natural resources made such fostering absolutely unnecessary—behind the initial point where industries had once been established by aid on their feet as against foreign competition."

Only supposing for the moment an acknowledgment that there was once a time in the history of the republic when infantile industries needed assistance to enable their feet as against foreign competition, we would like to know upon what scale of facts and conclusions Mr. Wilson bases his hypothesis that such fostering has become absolutely unnecessary. How has he arrived at the conclusion that protection is no longer needed in this country? We are aware that in the general free trade view and argument, but we do not recall that any among the free traders has in recent years come forward with a bill of particulars.

Take, for example, Mr. Woodrow Wilson's own state and the city of his residence. Is he, perchance, aware that Trenton's pottery parents carry the crockery ware into three times the pottery wares raise of Germany, Austria and Hungary? Does he know, perhaps, that five per cent of production will sell at more than twice the cost of doing down Saxony pottery at New York? As a matter of chance he did, does he know that a crate of pottery can be freighted more cheaply from Trenton to Chicago than from Trenton to Chicago?

Whether or not Mr. Wilson knows these things, they are all true. Being true, how does the gentleman, are these? How does he figure that foreign has become unnecessary. Did the absence of a protective tariff Trenton could continue to make and sell pottery in competition with a foreign production can unsettled the Trenton production cost?

What is true of Trenton's pottery industry is equally true of all manufacturing industries in this country. Outside of a few establishments whose products are by patents or unusual processes secured against foreign competition, it would be hard to name any American industry which would thrive, and make money as well without as with the fostering of a protective tariff. As a matter of fact, it would be impossible to name a single industry that would be as well or better off without such fostering. For by how than that time the incident upon protection would unfavorably imply—these which do not depend upon the tariff to hold the American market. Not even the few would thrive when the many were prostrated.

Calhoun was for many years a protectionist. He did not become a free trade until the south, leaders and expressions of the growth of northern industries, decided that it would be better to sell its raw cotton in the nearest market and buy its manufactures in the nearest market. Today, thanks to protection's fostering, northern cotton mills keep at home more cotton than they send to New England factories. Today the south has grown rich at an enormous rate through its own industrial development. Today, if slow and better informed as to facts and conditions than Woodrow Wilson appears to be, John C. Calhoun would probably be a "protectionist."

Mr. Woodrow Wilson should be the presidential nominee of the Democratic party in 1908, he would receive the electoral votes of all the southern states, but it is questionable whether his chances are going to be improved by the advocacy of free trade as the American policy.

Neither Long Nor Loud.

The call for tariff revision at this time is neither long nor loud. The general disposition on the party of the majority in congress is to let well enough alone, preferring to rather bear the ills they have than fly to others that they know not of. With all sorts of business prosperous—even the shoe manufacturing business, though it is reduced with a 15 per cent duty on his wares—it is evident that the country at large is not in immediate need of any revision.—Lawrence Telegram.

TRUTH ABOUT EXPORT PRICES.

All European Countries Sell Some Goods Cheaper Abroad.

When it is remembered that almost the sole ground of antagonism to the present tariff on the part of Republican "progressives" is the small exportation of American manufactures at less than average domestic prices, and that last year's Democratic congressional campaign had this for its principal asset, especial interest attaches to the following statements by Secretary Shaw in his recent speech before the chamber of commerce at Springfield, Mass.

If there be an article prominent in Europe which is not regularly sold for export to America cheaper than it is sold in the country of its origin, the treasury department has not discovered it. Every country in Europe sometimes selling goods abroad cheaper than at home and the practice prevails everywhere.

The charge had been so frequently made that steel rails were sold abroad at $7.50 below the American price that I took occasion to investigate the matter. I asked the president of the United States Steel corporation to let me see the records of their foreign sales covering the period of the preceding 60 days. This favor was promptly granted, and I personally examined them. The sales aggregated 25,000 tons, and the average price on board cars at factory was $27.60 a ton. The lowest sale was $27.60 a ton, 50 cents lower than the American price."

Republican editors should paste this in a conspicuous place at their desks where about to take their pens in hand for a fresh outbreak against the tariff lest it became of goods sold abroad cheaper than at home. Perhaps they would write about something else if they were thus constantly reminded that the practice of cutting prices on exports is a universal one and that less of it is done in the United States than in any other part of the world. Perhaps, too, they would reflect that if we should reduce our tariff on account of the insignificant volume of our cut price export trade we should be merely providing a bigger margin for the cut price exports of all the rest of the world. Perhaps they would end by deciding that the best thing to do is to let our tariff alone.

UPSET AGAIN!

Silent on the Tariff.

The silence upon the tariff question, to President Roosevelt is evidence that he is not in line with the tariff revision. Has President Roosevelt, a man who does not hesitate to mention, when needed, and only when needed, change in laws. He is not a man to wait the actions of others, but he is always a leader. If he was satisfied that the tariff needed revision he would have said so. His nominee for the governor he is silent, which means that existing conditions do not demand a general change.

This, of course, does not meet with the approval of our opponents of the Democratic party in this state, but it does vindicate the great mass of Republicans in Iowa for their convention "that so long as we are prosperous it is right and proper to let well enough alone." So far as the tariff is concerned.—Atlantic (Ia.) Telegraph.

Know Where They Are At.

Not only have the tariff sharps dropped the issue, but John Sharp Williams, the Democratic leader of the house, asks for more protection for the farmers. It was expected the Democratic tariff simply entered every agricultural interest. Indeed many of the reformers have insisted the rates are unnecessarily high and have pressed to scale them down by direct reduction, or partly neutralize them by reciprocity treaties. In the shifting of politics it is difficult to keep track of all the positions of the opponents of the protective system. The protectionists, on the other hand, know where they are at, and they know the consistency of standpatism.—Harrisburg Herald.

No Relief.

Sympathizing deeply with the sufferers of those Massachusetts manufacturers who long for free trade in crude materials while retaining protection for their finished products, John Sharp Williams leader of the free trade minority in the house of representatives let long ago in a refined a bill abolishing the duty on lumber imported from Canada. The house committee on ways and means has voted in favor of the shoe manufacturing business, though it reduced with a 15 per cent duty on his wares—it is evident that the country at large is not in immediate need of any revision.—Lawrence Telegram.

LIVING IS HIGHER

BECAUSE EVERYBODY LIVES BETTER THAN EVER BEFORE.

Wage Earners Eat More Meat, Wear Better Clothes and Get More Pleasure Out of Life Than They Did Twelve Years Ago.

There has been much said of late concerning the great increase in the cost of living over the increase in wages. Some people make this a basis for an attack on the protective tariff. They insist that the higher cost of the necessities of life is caused by the tariff duties.

But those who are advocates of the protective tariff argue against any such conclusion. They contend that it is the protective tariff which has given the country the great prosperity that it now enjoys. This prosperity has enabled every one to draw good wages, where during periods of hard times only a portion of the people in the country were receiving anything like adequate financial income.

The whole country is now living higher than it ever was in its history. Everybody, both capitalist and laborer, is indulging in greater luxuries than ever. The wage earner is eating more meat and wearing better clothing than he did 12 years ago. He is taking more pleasure out of life, going on more vacations and attending the theater, going on railroad journeys and living nearer to the limit of individual comfort than before. All of the costs money, and consequently his expenses are very much greater.

Ask a man to name the particular line of necessities of life that caused the increase of living and there will be hesitation, and a vague declaration that "all of them have advanced in price." As a matter of fact, however, it will be found that the advance in the cost of living does more in the higher lines indulged in by the wage earners than in the greater cost of the commodities. Were people willing today to limit themselves to such living and food which they could afford during the hard times they would find that the cost of living would be very little if any higher now than that and that their savings would mount up more rapidly.

But the rule of life is "Easy come easy goes," and it is only with the utmost frugality of thrift and careful business management that the wage earner today is able to keep from allowing his good fortune to run away with him.

With the present indulgence in extra living, because of the financial ability to do so, there is a tendency to waste. It is not fair to lay the blame to the policy that has created the larger income. It is well in this connection to consider the conditions that confronted the wage earners in earlier times. The Kansas City Star has collated from a report made by one of the wages of 12 classes of laborers mechanics and artisans in Germany, England and the United States. The comparison shows that the wage here is more than double in the other countries named, while prices in Germany are as follows: Beefsteak, 26 cents a pound; porksteak, 20 cents; bacon, 20 cents; ham, 20 cents; butter, 32 cents; coffee, 25 to 45 cents; eggs, 20 cents a dozen; potatoes, 24 cents; flour, nine dollars per barrel. Little comment in this case appears to be necessary.—Huntington Herald-Press.

A Vicious Political Heresy.

Some things of immediate relevancy to industrial conditions in and around Boston were said by Secretary Shaw in his speech before the Boston chamber of commerce on the 19th of February. After discussing his plan of a free zone for manufactured exports—a project whose realization he no doubt, not to say hopeless, he is to be hardly worth discussing—Mr. Shaw turned his attention to the Massachusetts idea of freeland free trade and protection to others.

"Free trade and protection are at constant war with each other, and will not harmonize. If New Hampshire is to have protection for her manufactures, then I trust that Florida will have protection for her citrus fruit, Louisiana for her sugar, Texas for her cattle, Montana for her wool, and the Dakotas for her wheat. If New England is to have free trade in the things she consumes, then let her consume free trade in the things she produces. Protection in agriculture and free trade in agriculture is the most vicious political heresy to teach, and resolves all opposite legislation into a squabble for local advantage. We have had more than one experience with this kind of legislation, and we ought not to invite a repetition."

It seems a pity that those words of plain common sense could not have been addressed to the members of the Massachusetts legislature before they signed that foolish petition in behalf of tariff revision. We can anticipate and reciprocity in competitive products. In that case the petition would not have gone to Washington with fewer signatures.

Should Mind Her Own Business.

Massachusetts would best mind her own business and let other states mind theirs, so far as urging the president to veto any bill relating to the tariff of other states' ideas rather than a individual solicitude sent in from one state. The revision of the tariff is a grave enough question to warrant a real expression of the general belief and too grave to warrant imposing a petition from a part of the people and from the sporadic personal opinions of state governors.—Lowell Citizen.

THE FARMER'S LARGE SHARE.

Remarkable Rise in Value of Agricultural Products in Ten Years.

Believers in the policy of protection have long had to contend the almost not absolute assumption that the farmers of the country are benefited by a policy intended primarily to aid the manufacturer and protect him from foreign competition and profits. It is singular that even to this day, in the face of such conclusive proof to the contrary, there should be found ready to take the affirmative side of this free trade proposition, some editorials as it has been let the blinders of our own vision. Time has in hand of it than in former years, for a long as prejudice and ignorance in dare its abandonment may not be looked for.

The department of agriculture has recently thrown some light on the level of prices obtaining under a tariff designed "for revenue only" and a genuinely protective tariff. For the purpose of making a comparison which will be valuable for illustrative purposes. The capital taken the five years just passed by the department and contrasts with the year 1897, Dun's Review like stock exchange of a decade ago. The results are startling. For instance:

January 1, 1897, under the Wilson-Gorman Democratic tariff the average value of horses in the United states was $23.66 per head. Today, if the department of agriculture is rightly informed, that value is $85.50. Under the Bagley tariff the American horse has more than doubled in value. Isn't this worth something to farmers, especially when it is carefully considered there are nearly 20 millions of them in the world, worth almost two billions of dollars?

Secretary Wilson's books say that the value of the American milch cow has increased during the past ten or 12 years 50 per cent. The average heifer sold for $21 and $22 a head on the farm. Today it is worth $35 a head. Now the average price is $21 per head and the milch cows of the country are worth a hundred millions more than they were worth in 1897 during low tariff times. Does this increase mean anything to the farmer or is it a purely imaginary enjoyment? Why, yes, it means something to the farmer. The increase in the price of hogs for 1897 and 1907 means mighty many dollars. Under the tariff sheet, for instance, January 1, 1897, the average price of hogs was $3.67. At that time so what the agricultural department calls "farm value." Today the average with the figures as indication of an increase in the farmers' share of the "farm value." Today the average is $6.10. And it is high time that we had in hogs than in the year 1897 and the United States. The comparison shows that the wage here is more than double in the other countries named, while prices in Germany are as follows: Beefsteak, 26 cents a pound; porksteak, 20 cents; bacon, 20 cents; ham, 20 cents; butter, 32 cents; coffee, 25 to 45 cents; eggs, 20 cents a dozen; potatoes, 24 cents; flour, nine dollars per barrel. Little comment in this case appears to be necessary.—Huntington Herald-Press.

CRUELTY TO HUMBLE HEN.

Man Complains of Mean Trick Played on Defenseless Biddy.

"The greatest trick I ever heard of," said a gentleman in one below plume of a jaunty fancy of the lumber boom. "Pick little young man out yonder in the corner of the lobby by himself and point him out to someone and point the head of some incomprehensible dollar to notice. It stand to reason and you will say to me, 'Why, I wonder what that fellow is thinking about?' Well, I'll tell you what he is thinking about. I'm thinking you were thinking same angle." I am thinking about eggs. That is the point to my story. You know how hard will start to set an egg on fresh eggs, then set hard a month of days and hatch out a little fluffy chicken? Well, on this boom lumber, I have spent a week of days and hatch out a little fluffy chicken. Well, I'm from Boyne City, and I'm the hen mentioned in the story. I'm the hen mentioned in the story. I'm the hen mentioned in the story.

LAKE TRADE RECORD

TRAFFIC EXPECTED TO EXCEED THAT OF LAST YEAR.

Immense Tonnage to Be Moved by Enterprising Shipowners—Illinois Heavier Than Ever.

In numerous ways the shipping interest of the lakes is showing signs of great prosperity. Indications point to a very large increase of business of the year just passed over that of last year, which was by hundreds of cargoes and by millions of tons ahead of any previous year in the history of the lakes. The tonnage of the lake ports for the year just ended will exceed 100,000,000 and some of the ports will double their tonnage of last year. The iron ore movement will be the heaviest ever known, and the lumber movement will be much larger than last year. The grain movement will be much larger than last year, and the coal movement will be much larger than last year. The coal rates are now 50 cents per ton from Ashtabula to Chicago, and 50 cents per ton from Lake Erie ports to Milwaukee, and 50 cents per ton from Toledo to Chicago. The lumber rates are now $2 per ton from Michigan ports to Chicago, and $2 per ton from Green Bay to Buffalo. The grain rates are now 5 cents per bushel from Chicago to Buffalo, and 5 cents per bushel from Milwaukee to Buffalo. The iron ore rates are now 90 cents per ton from Duluth to Cleveland, and 90 cents per ton from Marquette to Lake Erie ports. The rates on ore from Duluth to Chicago are 50 cents per ton, and from Marquette to Chicago 50 cents per ton. The rates on ore from Duluth to Milwaukee are 50 cents per ton, and from Marquette to Milwaukee 50 cents per ton. The rates on ore from Duluth to Ashtabula are 90 cents per ton, and from Marquette to Ashtabula 90 cents per ton. The rates on ore from Duluth to Erie are 90 cents per ton, and from Marquette to Erie 90 cents per ton. The rates on ore from Duluth to Lake Erie ports are 90 cents per ton, and from Marquette to Lake Erie ports 90 cents per ton. The rates on ore from Duluth to Gulf ports are 90 cents per ton, and from Marquette to Gulf ports 90 cents per ton. Chickens and Ashes Killing the Whitefish.

Are the large deposits of chickens and ashes dumped into the lakes killing off the whitefish.

Fishermen all over the great lakes believe this to be a fact. A Marquette man, who has made the decrease of fish a subject of considerable study, said recently:

"The United States government should make an appropriation for an exhaustive research in the waters of the great lakes to discover, if possible, just what is causing the decrease in the numbers of the whitefish.

"About 1890 Prof. Woodman of the natural history and biology department of the Duluth high school, under the direction of the United States fish commission, worked through the sounds with a small trawl and dredges, and scanned the bottom of Lake Superior in several localities.

"The long way grass was found to be disappearing. The minute green slimy creatures, so abundant in the new years, were rarely found. Instead of clayey banks to nibble, the common snaky, used to scuttling, brought up from the bottom ashes and chink or slag as an evidence that this was the material which turned the lake bottom. Chickens too and the inches long crabs came up with the trawl.

"This state of affairs has caused the death of the greatest parent fish of the country, for such fish have been named in honor of the other 1896."

Remarkable Results.

That truth is stranger than fiction has once more been demonstrated in the little town of Fadora, Tenn., the residence of C. V. Pepper. He writes: "I was to bed, entirely disabled with bronchitis, coughing so that lungs and throat. Doctors failed to help me, and all hope had fled, when I began taking Dr. Kings New Discovery. Then instant relief came. The coughing soon ceased, the kindling inflamed rapidly, and in three weeks I was able to go to work." Guaranteed cure for coughs and colds. 50c and $1.00 at E. G. Rose & Co. drug store. Trial bottle free.

Epworth League at 6:30.

At 7:30 there will be a concert given by the Sunday School.

Service on Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

Preaching at Epworth church at 2:30 in the afternoon.

Congregational Church.

Children's Day will be observed next Sunday. At 10:30 a. m. the service will be under the auspices of the Sunday School. The program will consist of recitations, class exercises and music by the school. An interesting service is assured. At the service the annual offering for Sunday School missionary work in this state will be received. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

The Christian Endeavor prayer meeting will occur at 6:30. Topic, "How to help those who are younger than we are."

There will be no preaching service at the evening hour on account of the absence of the pastor, who is attending the State meeting of Congregational ministers and churches at Hancock. This is the first time in the history of Congregationalism that the state meeting has been held up the Copper region.

The topic for the midweek service Thursday, June 13, will be "Lessons from the Character of Joseph."

—Hon. H. O. Rose, of Petoskey and W. E. Gill, of Harbor Springs, were here yesterday attending the funeral of the late Albert Haley.

—The Petoskey Daily News publishes an announcement of the death of Mrs. J. H. Allen and credits it to another paper. That is worse than stealing.

—Mayor Armstrong has been quite ill the past week with rheumatism. In Thursday he was able to be out in the sunshine, and is already here for the campaign.

—Contractor Gaylord was here several days last week with a steam hoist and concrete mixer, unloading stone in the pier work of both channels constructed last year.

—Friday of this week will be the one hundred and thirtieth anniversary of the birth of the flag, and is officially known as "flag day." Fling the banner to the breeze.

—Mr. C. G. Carvette is the U. S. inspector in charge of harbor work here this year, and will remain until the stone are placed in the piers under the Gaylord contract.

—Lieut. Roy Marshall, of the Salvation Army, who has been on walking orders here for two weeks, received orders Tuesday to join the Saginaw corps, and he left yesterday.

—Judge Mayne's decision in the matter of Podelsky vs the Village of East Jordan, on a writ of mandamus to compel the council to accept sellers bonds, compels the village to accept such bonds. It is pending that the sureties are sufficient.

—The bill empowering the city of Charlevoix to loan the number of moneys within its corporate limits has passed both houses of the legislature and is a law. Hereafter the common council has the power to refuse a saloon bond if, in its judgment such a course is justified, and a mandamus will not hold.

—Miss Ina Cook-Gibson, who is a teacher at Pueblo, Colo., is home for a visit for the summer.

—Miss Madeline Mason, who has been taking a musical course at Valparaiso college the past year, is at home for the summer.

—Married in Petoskey Tuesday, Mr. Fred G. Bellinger and Miss Bertha Upthegrove, both of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Bellinger, after a short wedding trip, will be at home in Charlevoix. Congratulations.

—Peter Hisek's cheese factory at Harbord is turning out goods that have already found a firm standing in the local market. Our dealers find the cheese to be fully up to that of any outside factory, and it continues to grow in favor. This being the fact, our people should favor the home manufactured goods.

—Capt. Stetlin, superintendent, and Lieut. Bellinger, inspector, were here Monday and inspected the local life saving station, going to St. James on the morning boat. While at St. James they will arrange certain details of the establishment of a full station there. It is not expected that the station will be completed and in operation before next spring.

—Miss Pleasant M. Gelkes, of this city graduates this year from the literary department of the University of Michigan. We are pleased to learn that Miss Gelkes has been engaged as a teacher in the Charlevoix high school for the next year.

—The Northern Michigan transportation Co. boats will have to an summers schedule next week. The Missouri will be here Sunday, and the Illinois Tuesday on the new schedule. The steamship Manitou will arrive here on her first trip on the 20th.

—The auto bus for the Charlevoix and Traverse City road, and will be used for parties and other special purposes until July 1st, when it will resume the Ann Belvedere half hour runs. It is stronger and much better machine than the one in use last year.

—Miss Winifred Gale will leave this week for Havana, Cuba, to spend the summer with her mother, whose husband is an army surgeon stationed there. She will be accompanied by Miss Constance Billings, and the young ladies will take in the Jamestown exposition on the way.

—The W. C. T. U. will observe Power division Day, June 14th, at 2:00 p. m. at the home of Mrs. S. I. Alexander, Antrim street. An excellent program has been prepared. Ice cream and cake will be served for refreshments. Donations of flowers solicited. A cordial invitation to all.

—Mrs. Lottie Wakefield, wife of Horace Wakefield, of the city died early Thursday morning of heart disease aged 41 years. She had been troubled for some years with heart weakness, but death was entirely unexpected. Deceased was a sister of Robert, John, James and William Withers.

The Public Library will be open Saturday June 15 from 9 a. m. to 8 p. m. Over two hundred new books have been purchased including an especially fine line of children's books. All patrons may come to the library anytime during this week, receive their cards and have them signed and ready for Saturday.

—On The Bridge At Midnight" will be presented at the Charlevoix Theatre Friday June 14th. The company is one of the best ever offered in this popular comedy. The clever character actor will be seen to excellent advantage as Herman von Schultzberg a charming study of the german professor. The play is full of humor and pathos, and the part of Dorothy Vane is a triumph of ingenuity. The price of admission for this engagement will be, 25, 35 and 50c. Seats may be secured at the Ivy Drug Store without extra charge.

—"On The Bridge At Midnight." The plot and story of "On The Bridge At Midnight" which is to appear for the first time in Charlevoix on Friday June 14, is a triumph of ingenuity and play construction, are among the cleverest and most interesting on the stage. A third mother seeks her kidnapped child and meets with an experience that would overwhelm any body but such a mother. The child is an important part that involves much of the interest. The play was an instantaneous success in Chicago where the scenes are laid and the famous bridge located.

—The steamer Beaver is being repainted.

—Son B. Hance the sage of Northwood, was in town Saturday.

—Mr and Mrs. J. H. Stack, of Birmingham, Ala., is here for the summer, as the guest of W. H. Smith and wife.

—Mr. and Mrs. Greenaway, of Fowlerville, are here visiting their daughters, Mrs A. L. Fitch and Mrs. W. C. Dolinger.

—Pagan's new electric theater opened Saturday night with a full house. The place has elevated seats, and a most complete system of moving pictures.

—The county has taken a stiff in the Sensational respectabilities. The new district constitutes the "peak" of the lower peninsula—Charlevoix, Emmet, Cheboygan, Presque Isle and Alpena.

—The steam road roller has been given a thorough test the past ten days in rolling the streets, and in the Antrim street paving job. It fills the bill to the satisfaction of the street committee, and will be kept.

—Four Chicago business men—W. H. Gail, J. Anderson, Chas. Linger ladder and Ed. Trombley, have been here several days. They are friends of John A. Linn, who has been trotting them around the various trout streams.

—Miss Pleasant M. Gelkes, of this city graduates this year from the literary department of the University of Michigan. We are pleased to learn that Miss Gelkes has been engaged as a teacher in the Charlevoix high school for the next year.

CAP AND GOWN

Class of '07 Adopt Mortar Board and Robe—Commencement Dignified and Beautiful.

The splendid little Charlevoix Theatre was more beautiful than ever Thursday night when the class of '07 was officially cut loose from home school life, and its members officially declared to be men and women, bright, well equipped and well seasoned in mind-discipline. The college or university may confer a more glittering polish, but these young men and women can face the world and win their way with what the Charlevoix High School has given them.

It has remained for the Class of '07 to be the first to adopt that historic educational garb, the cap and gown—the most dignified and elegant dress fabricated since the fig leaves of Eden—and the twenty-three young graduates made the school board and faculty look like "thirty cents."

The rumors occupied the boxes, which were tastefully draped in their class colors. But the stage and proscenium presented a vision of light and color that was dazzling. The class motto was conspicuous, and a blaze of light, and the exhaustive "toast" was a combination of class colors in electric bulbs. It was indeed a beautiful setting enlivened by a moving picture that science could not duplicate.

The musical numbers, both instrumental and vocal, lacked something that was essential to so dignified and historic an occasion. They were all a credit to Charlevoix and to the participants. Especially creditable was the salutatory of Miss Weed. Not only was it appreciatively received by the large audience, but it was, in the opinion many, such a paper for the young lady's thoughtful and well delivered address. No less creditable and interesting was the valedictory by Forrest Kane. The young gentleman was as dignified as a Princeton president and made a marked impression.

The "Class Prophecy," by Edward M. Hinton, was augmented in its effect by very pretty and appropriate class assistance. President Crossett of the school board, presented the diplomas, and superintendent Woodley addressed the class very ably and tantalizingly. It was out of place at this junction to anticipate the fact that never was a superintendent more beloved by his class and school than is superintendent Woodley. He use the word "beloved" in place of the stereotyped "popular." Efficiency and force are no less appreciated. Mr. Woodley has been a success, and that is saying much.

It is the generally expressed opinion that the "commencement was the best in the history of the schools.

The Alumni reception and ball at the bank hall Friday evening, was a great social event. During the progress of the festivities the class of '07 succeeded in decoying superintendent Woodley into a side room. He had no sooner entered the room than he was surrounded by the class, and presented with a handsome gold watch. Mr. Woodley was speechless—perhaps speechless. No gift was ever more worthily bestowed.

MACCABEE DAY.

All Evidences Point to a Stupendous Celebration June 22nd.

The K. O. T. M. M. and I. O. T. M. M. joint executive committee held a meeting last night on "Maccabee Day" matters.

A place of $10 was voted for the best decorated piece of business on the 21st.

The big feature of the day will be the ball game between the Cadillac city team and the Manistee Records. These teams rank among the best in the state, and a good game may be looked for. The price is $25, the gate receipts to be divided between the two clubs.

The steamer Beaver and Search light will give frequent ten cent excursions on Lake Charlevoix.

Enough is already known to make it certain that Charlevoix will witness the biggest crowd on the 21st that ever gathered in Northern Michigan.

FEASTED THEM

East Jordan Board of Trade Members Visited Charlevoix Tuesday Night.

East Jordan and Charlevoix fell upon each others official neck and embraced Tuesday night. The steamer Ilsan brought down a delegation of the board of trade of that enterprising town, and the Charlevoix board of commerce banqueted them at the Hotel Bartlett. There were about a dozen members of each organization, and the East Jordan gentlemen were not released until midnight for their return home.

Dr. and Mrs. Bartlett did the house great credit by not only the elaborate menu, but in the excellent service and beautiful table management, in which cut flowers were conspicuous.

President Torrell, of the Charlevoix board of commerce, was toastmaster, and when the cigars came the manner in which that official ordered up the banqueters was a "terror to snakes." There was not a man in the two dozen that was missed, and there were two dozen speeches.

While East Jordan and Charlevoix were conspicuous topics, Charlevoix county was the burden of the song. A resolution was adopted that a plan of joint advertising be adopted, in the interest of the county, along the line of agricultural improvement, and that Boyne City and Boyne Falls be asked to join in the good work. The advertising committees of both boards were instructed to formulate a plan for this work.

Other work was suggested that combined the mutual good of both towns, and it is evident that much good resulted from the meeting, in the way of a better acquaintance and a better understanding of each other.

It was the generally expressed opinion that, in view of the certainty of the two towns being joined by rail connection, there should be concerted effort for the mutual good. The meeting was a happy, pleasant, and, and will fall to be a benefit to both towns.

Death of Albert Haley.

To few men is it given to live ninety years. But Albert Haley, who died Sunday night, almost reached the fulness of decades. Mr. Haley died peacefully at the home of his daughter, Mrs. O. E. Wilbur the night of Sunday June 9th.

Deceased was born in Glastonbury, Conn., Oct. 20, 1818. In 1836, with his family, he removed to Northern Michigan, locating at Northport. In 1847 he removed here, where he has resided up to the time of his death. His wife died about three years ago.

Mr. Haley was a charter member of Dascom Lodge, F. & A. M., of the place of his birth, and had been a Mason only eight years. He was a very devoted and zealous member of the fraternity. We doubt if there can be found in the membership of this grand jurisdiction a Mason who has been that long a member of the order, if, indeed there is one anywhere.

The funeral was from the house on Wednesday afternoon, with Masonic honors. Rev. Brother Hallowell, of Harbor Springs, preaching the sermon.

The Steamer Chequamegon.

The Traverse Bay Transportation Co's new steamer, Chequamegon, arrived at Traverse City yesterday. This boat is the successor of the Webb Traverse Bay line, which has operated on the bay for several years. Capt. C. A. Webb will command her. From the Traverse City Eagle we take the following:

The boat will not run on a regular schedule until after the Fourth of July. She will then run on schedule time, going as far north as Charlevoix. Upon the patronage she receives will depend her remaining here another year.

Traverse City people have invested $20,000 in the boat, but of course cannot afford to keep it here year after year unless it proves a paying investment, and this depends upon the patronage Traverse City people give it. That it can look for the purchase of this boat, the bay would have been without a pleasure craft at present.

The officers of the Traverse Bay Transportation Co. are: President, A. V. Friedrich; vice president, C. A. Webb; secretary and treasurer, Samuel Gurnell; manager, C. A. Webb.

"Do you think you can safely retire there and do it?" said Zoe, doubtfully. "Remember Zoe's work is more at sunset well-nigh impossible."

"What are you?" Frost demanded. "There is more than one sunset." He took the second hand at Zoe, taking for another look at her.

"Would you like to see it?" I can tell the time." Zoe's face was flushed, and her eyes were as the light of sunset, and dropped in a manner that was bewitching.

"Bring him here, and the eye will can tell between us if he knows, and little courage." Take the ball by the horse. We can see if he knows, and bring to arrive, as and if there is anything to be done."

With all this breathless in one breath whispered in Frost's ear, and he turned from the Zoe. While he blundering's discussion Zoe's attention was taken up out and receiving the window and the blind to bring still more.

"Do I want anything to could know?" he asked at last. "Yes, I want a rapid hunter's eagle notice of his sentiment, and the fair of his watch chain through the hallway and treasured out watch and chain to his poor owner. Then he attempted to be a little more in the scene and put them in his purse, and as he did so he turned to the Zoe and the Frost door opened. The breath came hard and fast, and he asked Frost to be blanketed, but he could himself in a harassed attempt to be calm.

"Are you alone, sir?" asked Dobrosk. "Have you anything to tell me? Do I speak with one?"

"I am alone," said Mr. Dobrosk, as amazed Frost. "If there is friend with me, he will come soon. Is it a conversation of yours?"

"I will come to be a moment," said Dobrosk. He stepped from the door, where was Frost and Zoe. Frost closed the door as well, as true gill and Zoe, and Dobrosk was alone. He advanced to Jacobs this error.

CHAPTER XI.

For a moment Frost felt hollow and had some idea that Dobrosk was leaning the handle of the door in one hand, and with the other propped himself against the wall.

"Zoe!" he contrived to say in a voice which he felt was not his own. "Zoe, you—Ah. The spy."

He expected some sort of instant consternation for to his startled mind the statement that Zoe was there meant that Zoe was actually within the house, and was of itself proclamation of the discovery of treason. He had time enough to be shot, stabbed, poisoned, shibboled, and tried for treason in his own with darning frightened faces before Dobrosk spoke again.

"Yes," said Dobrosk. "he is here. It is well that everybody should be warned of him."

"Of course," returned Frost, trembling in his frame, and speaking with a shake in his voice. "He seems to be a dangerous sort of fellow."

Dobrosk mounted the staircase in silence, and entered Frost's room in obedience to a jerk of his head from the regular occupant. Frost followed in time to see Zoe turn in his armchair and look at the newcomer with a casual air. This was announced by a start of surprise, which Zoe arose slowly and as if unconsciously from his seat.

"This," said Frost, who knew not what to make of Dobrosk's face, and was sorely frightened by them—"this is Mr. Dobrosk." He was vainly casting about in his mind for Zoe's alias, when Zoe himself relieved him.

"I know it," cried the spy, in English, and then with a sudden forward rush he threw himself at Dobrosk's feet, and seizing one of his ankles in both hands kissed his boot again and again, with wild, gurgling ejaculations which meant nothing to Frost's ears, but stood in English for "Angel! Preserver! Patriot! Pluto!" Such a variety of expressions of worship and affection. Dobrosk stood as

OUR FOREIGN TRADE

WORLD MARKETS COMPARED WITH THE DOMESTIC MARKET.

Before We Can Greatly Increase Our Nearly $2,000,000,000 of Exports We Shall Be Obliged to Reduce Wages in Order to Lower the Cost of Production.

Approvingly the Washington Post quotes the Toledo Blade as wishing the Democrats are disappointed for this extends that big foreign trade and highly protected domestic trade are incompatible and cannot long exist together. The Post adds:

"Foreign trade means exchange of products and it means nothing else. Believe it or not, yesterday the Blade on such problems as the tariff schedules must be experimentally determined.

"So it is reduced to this: We must let in foreign trade while or abandon tariff for protection only, with best general revenues.

"Neither the free nor the Post seems to have lost in mind the fact that a tariff for foreign trade and a very big protected domestic trade are, after all, well together that it is Britain with ten times the space of unknown protection our foreign trade has practically vanished. Under a protective tariff we buy of foreign countries goods of the value of $1,250,000,000 a year and these imports more than $700,000,000 worth are competitive under a protective tariff we sell to the outside world of our products more than $1,000,000,000 worth a year. This makes our total exchange of products equal to considerably more than a billion dollars. If we should enter Germany, our duties on cotton goods, iron and steel, chemicals and dyes in connection with hundreds of other items is a tariff for revenue with competition, we should be unable to compete for such business. Our duties on cotton goods, iron and steel, chemicals and dyes are prohibitive. Under a tariff for revenue with competition

MUST COME TO IT.

County Weekly Papers Cannot Live on Price of $100 Per Year.

We are living in an age of rising prices, and as the country has not seen since the days of the Civil war, everything is going up—raw materials, manufactured goods, machinery alike, whatever is used or needed. Statistical articles show up the facts very startingly, but anybody can verify them by his own experience.

The cost of publishing a newspaper, to take one example out of many, is at least 25 per cent higher than it was five years ago, and 50 per cent higher than it was three years ago. In the short space of six months printing paper has risen fully 50 per cent, which means that the cost of paper for the News will cost from $300 to $350 more than the last carload. Probably every line of business can show similar items that have taken similar flights upwards.

Rising prices are a good thing on the whole, but occasionally they hit the individual pretty hard. Rising prices stimulate business generally. Dealers will buy more goods, and sell more at a profit, if the market is rising, when they will not, if the tendency is downward. This encourages production, creates a demand for raw materials and increases wages. But the raise does not all come out of the consumer. A considerable share comes out of the manufacturer and retailer, for they can't always mark up goods fast enough to keep pace with the rise in purchase prices.

Newspapers are peculiarly unfortunate in this respect. Their selling prices are practically fixed. The News sells at a dollar a year and the silver-lining space goes for twenty cents an inch, whether paper and labor go up or down. A few big creditors, therefore, come directly out of the till and the only way to offset it is to increase the volume of business which at least is only a partial remedy. Newspapers have long been the cheapest commodity on the face of the earth. Subscription rates were formerly double or treble what they are now, but prices came down when material became cheap. Now the tide has been going on for years and still the rising price stands where it was ten years ago. Sooner or later a readjustment will take place, and it may come all at once

CHAPTER XII.

At Ostend the pretty widow showed signs of fatigue, and O'Rourke having seen her comfortably tucked away in one fourteen-arrangement with the ever-traveling rug for a pillow, sought another.

Mrs. Spry was leaning when she awoke, and yawned behind her little glove and as she stood upon the platform watching the sunbiums O'Rourke, who hurried hither and thither in her behalf in his own brightest and most cheerful manner.

"I suppose your friends expect you at—I forget the name of the place. In—some? In in Jamesse?" He glanced at her quickly and with an evident surprise that she added "Mr. Manderville told me you were going there. Is that the name of the place?"

"There is a little place of that name, said O'Rourke. Manderville and I were there together a few days ago. I may go on, or I may not. I shall probably have a day or two in Brussels in any case."

When the hotel was reached, O'Rourke secured rooms for Mrs. Delpfelt's maid too and ordered for her at her request a cup of coffee and a bowl. The modest refection was conveyed to her bed chamber, and she retired, parting as her acknowledgment of obligation

"If Mrs. Spry had been charming the night before she was still more charming for most morning. O'Rourke made a grave mistake in age, and set her down in his fancies to her and Zeno's cousin. It which he admitted her. Having in mind all the while how time was flying and how it behooved him to make the most of chances which were flying to be missed, he turned the conversation to the ladies probably necessary. All she knew of Zeno was in his letters. He was a good boy, but he was a boy, and had his faults. He was never nice a relish and ate as he leaned his head on the window sill, he confessed, rather than sat at the table with the which disappointed him not with a rise of delicious satisfaction. The evening his cousin had spoken of Zeno's coming home, and gave his address as in Paris.

"What do you want to do? Let all the world go? Or shall we go to Paris and be a good? What do you want to do?"

"Why, I want to see Zeno, of course," replied Fleur. "Come to such a place, and not see my cousin! Why, I don't know what I'd do!"

"You don't just need join in the festivities with Zeno. I know the sort of thing he likes. Suppose you go to Paris, and I will go on with the party? You would enjoy every minute of the time, and I would be in constant fear lest you should get into some scrape. Zeno is a good fellow, but he is a boy, and he has his faults. Now, I'm a man, and I know what I want and how to get it. Let me go on with the party, and you go to Paris and be happy."

"That is—I don't like to be a Sunday-descendant. Is your friend a Sunday?"

"No. From what I can learn, she's good and bored sometimes, and has a dreadful jolly place, miles and miles away from a railway station. I was looking up on the map, and I make out Nancy to be the nearest, and it is a little place called Hooby."

"I have been there," returned O'Rourke with admirable nonchalance. "There is one of the finest chateaus in France. I have the pleasure to know them."

"Oh, of all luck, rapidly and enthusiastically, "do you know Angela Hunley? Isn't she charming? I wish I could give the world to be some. Well, now, I do wonder what young Count Blankitten never told me that you knew Angela Hunley."

"I may know them very slightly," said O'Rourke. "I only met them a fortnight ago. We were always shy."

"Oh," purred the widow, making her bow and more expressive eyes at her companion. "I wonder Angela Hunley didn't you adore her. Mr. O'Rourke? Oh, I'm sure she—"

"I think her a very charming girl," said O'Rourke, with admirable cool flat tish.

"Oh, so very English," said Mrs. Spry. "And you are going to Hooby to see Miss Hooby? Lucky girl! Hooby is delightful, even indeed to me. We shall be neighbors. I am going to Jamesse to see some old friends of mine, and Jamesse is only a few miles from Hooby."

"This will be pleasant," said Mrs. Spry. When she had said this she bowed her head sweetly sidewise, and a second or two later was in her apartment glasses at O'Rourke.

She discharged her one trifle of a maid business, and she set out on a bright afternoon in one of the public conveyances O'Rourke in attendance, for Hooby, having paying some of the regards of her coming by wire.

"Tell me, you and Mrs. Spry holding her hand on one side and looking up at O'Rourke thoughtfully, "you will take this train to reach Hooby?"

"It does not go as far as Hooby," said O'Rourke. "It reaches Jamesse in two hours and a half. I have forgotten—"

"I think you knew everything Mr. O'Rourke," said the lady, admiringly. Then, clasping her hands and looking very, "Will you do me a favor, Mr. O'Rourke?"

"Try me," said O'Rourke, with his eyes admirably mirthful, and a little sad.

"Will you go to the telegraph office and write a telegram? In French or Italian dreadful Italian—I should look from Mrs. Spry Brussels to Miss Angela Hunley, the Chateau, Hooby. To say that I shall be at—that's the name of the station—Jamesse, and that I shall be there—and to ask her to meet me there because she might forget."

"May I look at your books?" he said in a loose jocular and leaning then over the book, he raised his eyes not high, and he drew their gaze upon her. Mrs. Spry blushed, and seemed not to be displeased, saying, "Ah!" cried O'Rourke brightly, a moment later, "you have bought Fleurette I see."

"You" she answered looking up with a faint mockery of the blush still lingering in her eyes, "I heard a great deal of talk about it in London, and I want to see what it is like."

"A delightful book," said O'Rourke. "A lovely book. I've written to my friend of mine. He is staying at Jamesse with his wife and their little boy. I am going down there to pay them a visit."

"Oh!" cried Mrs. Spry, clasping her hands. "How delightful to know such people! Oh, how I do envy that privilege!"

"You will be asked to meet him, O'Rourke said "and sure to like him. I believe that Mrs. Hunley and Mrs. Farley are great friends."

"I shall be afraid of him, I'm sure," said the widow, biting her fan in her hands, and surveying O'Rourke through her fingers. "I was afraid of you at first." She blushed prodigiously at this avowal, and dropping her hands before her she turned her head away. O'Rourke caught her hands and held them for a moment.

"If one," he said confidingly.

And here, once more were alone in the carriage and had with a good twenty miles to go before one reached their first stopping point, so one can not few rapidly and fast caught fire between them. Half an hour had been devoted, if only the adoration had been paid to England, where the guards refrain from walking about the grounds of their cousin during transit. But at this instant the Sun, seeing upon and the jolter, commenced operations and was rather inclined to be jocular, and pounded their tickles among himself on through the door on the other side of the carriage and went on his way with a broad grin. O'Rourke was in a great fright for a moment, though he was fairly good tempered man as a general thing, he said enough. The obvious impossibility of fastening the door was a great comfort, and he soon did nothing to savage his anger for the time.

CHAPTER XIII.

"I should like," said Mr. Fleur—"I should particularly like to know what your individual opinion of Zeno is."

"Make your desire a little flexible," returned Mr. Fleur, "and I will gratify it with pleasure. Well, but I have yet to know what I am to do."

The two were seated in Fleur's living room in the Hotel Bellevue, and it was not after dressed time yet. His clothes were thrown about the place, and coffee and cognac than ordinary. A lazy, sleepy, half-dressed man, he looked better dressed than ever, his

THE GRANGE

Conducted by J. W. DARROW, Chatham, N. Y.
Press Correspondent New York State Grange

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

If a Grange Disbands, What Should Be Done With its Property?

Under New York state grange laws, the personal property of the grange which comes from the national grange, such as manuals, charter regalia and seal, are taken by the subordinate grange and held in trust in that body until with those as the grange should again become active. The real estate, such as halls, barns, etc., are sold at public auction under the direction of the state grange, and the proceeds of such sale are divided equally among the members of the grange who were in good standing in the date at which the grange became dormant. There is a misapprehension on the part of many patrons that in case the grange becomes dormant, if it owns a hall or other property, such property reverts to the state grange. Such is not the case and has never been the policy of the New York state grange. The property belongs to the members of the subordinate grange who are in good standing, and when the grange disbands only such participate in the division of the property. The property of a grange cannot be divided so long as there are members in good standing of that grange. Some granges have refused from having their halls dedicated to the uses of the order for fear that such halls would fall into the hands of the state grange in case the subordinate grange became dormant. We hope this explanation will make the matter clear to everybody and that no grange will hesitate to build a hall for fear it will fall into the hands of the state grange if the local grange should become dormant. Such a thing has never happened in the thirty-three years the New York state grange has been in existence neither can it ever happen under our laws.

The Grange and Temperance.

The question occasionally arises in various localities as to what the position of the grange is concerning temperance. It may be said that a cardinal principle of the grange is to guard all intemperance in eating, drinking and language. We believe it should be within the province of every grange to give its entire support to sound and sentiment for the enforcement of existing laws against drunkenness. At the last meeting of the national grange the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the grange hereby reiterates its policy of abstaining in all things that is conducive to belief that the doctrine of moderate drinking and of providing and educating educated and intelligent people to use intoxicating liquors in moderation, shall be abolished and in the meantime be made and held to a strict responsibility for the evil results of the use of intoxicating liquors, and that we do hereby commend to law to vote every saloon from its midst or its neighborhood.

Antidotes For Dormancy.

The best antidotes for a grange that exhibits signs of dormancy are a livelier and some young people. The active lecturer is he who interests as many people as possible in each evening's programme. At a recent meeting in the writer's home grange a little 12 year old whistle entertainment involved every member in the room. The lecturer also reported that at the following meeting each person would be expected to relate some actual experience in life, describe some scene or relate an event of which he had a personal knowledge and that meeting was the most interesting one in many weeks. Such granges do not become dormant. There should be practical farm papers and talks and all that, of course, but there should be one member of the evening programme that will include several of these present.

A Question Well Answered.

In not the present a good time to reform our grange does[illegible] also the opinion of State Lecturer Taber. No, that time will never come. To reform grange must could but weaken the grange. If it is not worth 10 cents per month for a man to be a member of a good live grange, to say nothing of the immeasurable benefits conferred in legislation, state and national, it is worth nothing.

Hartford Getting Busy.

Grangers of Connecticut are already inquiring suggestions about the next national grange meeting to be held in Hartford. The matter of accommodating the hosts is a serious one, but it will be satisfactorily adjusted when the time comes. Hartford is hospitable.

Kentucky, following the example of her progressive sister states of the north, has organized a grange with the charter list composed largely of the faculty and students of its agricultural college at Lexington. The national station corps of experts is also represented in the charter list of twenty-five.

Grange visiting is very popular among granges that are of easy access one to another. The visiting grange goes prepared to furnish the literary programme, while the entertaining grange furnishes the refreshment feature.

The most important person to promote a full perfect grange organization is a fully equipped and progressive deputy.

There is a possibility that the national grange will meet in Buffalo in 1898. But Ohio may claim the honor.

PRIZE SPEAKING CONTESTS.

A Suggestion Which Has Many Possibilities in It.

(Special Correspondence.)

The grange is a training school for public speakers. Many a man can trace his initial effort along this line to the opportunity for debate, recitation or extemporaneous speaking offered in and by the grange. It may not have developed many orators but it has given war poise and confidence to many who have found themselves quite at ease in public address.

This being so, should not the grange endeavor to bring out its latent ability and develop the talent for public speaking which it may not know it possesses, and where such talent is already evident should it not be encouraged in every legitimate way? To this end I suggest:

At the next meeting of the state grange in every state let the executive committee or a special committee be empowered to formulate a plan whereby there shall be a prize speaking contest at the following session of the state body to which the contestants shall be chosen from Lecturers' grange when no grange has a regular speaking contest had been held, its contestants being chosen from subordinate granges in which also such contests had been before held, or, to reverse the order, each subordinate grange that chooses to enter the contest should first have a contest among its own members to determine which shall represent the grange at the Pomona public speaking contest.

At some Pomona session, regular or special, there should be a speaking contest for representation at the state grange. It is hardly fair that subordinate granges would have a contest and at any rate, not more than ten competitors should be allowed at the Pomona contest, nor at the state grange should more than two speakers be permitted to contest for honors. These would be sent by the Pomona granges to have representatives at the state session, but if there were the others could be represented the following year. The state grange should offer either a cash prize or a medal or both for the best three speakers. The Pomona grange should pay the expenses of its contestant to the state grange, which will be a sufficient honor for any winner in the Pomona contest.

The prizes should be awarded for originality of thought as well as elocutionary art, and therefore only original essays or orations should be considered, not mismatched selections. Subjects might be confined to any of the great public reform questions of the day, not necessarily pertaining to the grange, however. A former step which I have in having a national grange speaking contest, the contestants being taken in each state grange contest being representatives. This would be an honor, indeed, for the fortunate prize winners, and its elaborate model should adorn the breast of the first honor man or woman.

This is a crude plan briefly outlined, but the idea is what we are after, and this article may lead to a development of it. The highest good would accrue to the several contestants in the training they would receive in the preparation and presentation of their literary production.

J. W. D.

An Excellent Work.

An excellent work is being done in the order by persons engaged in writing for and contributing grange department to local papers, says the Pomona Grange News. These members should be commended and encouraged in this good work, for it not only aids in keeping the general membership posted on the activity and progress of the order, but is thereby placing these matters before many readers who are not members, thus directing their thoughts toward the grange.

Editors of local papers, as a rule, are very friendly in this work, and if people not having any grange matter in the local papers of your vicinity would at once be a desirable beginning, and before the next Pomona session and some of some action cannot be instituted to bring it about?

Advertisements on Barns.

Every grange should devote at least one evening to the discussion of the question of advertisements on barns and on large signboards in the fields through which railway trains pass. It is a blight on the landscape of farm homesteads and should not be permitted. Every grange farmer should resolve that no such advertising can be done on his buildings or premises.

Delaware Grange Work.

The state of Delaware reports an increase of grange membership in one year of 25 per cent. The grange is endeavoring to induce the trustees of the Agricultural college to use the federal appropriation for strictly agricultural courses in the exclusive interest of building up other departments with it.

Pittsford (N. Y.) grange will give a floral exhibit in the town hall in August. Competition is open to all who reside in that town and vicinity. Prizes are offered in forty-six classes.

friendly way so that the various and usually deep relations connected by the classes take at times within bounds, and never have they been carried to the extreme. This show of class spirit may seem of no great importance, but it has served a purpose that of teaching one to think and act quickly during exciting circumstances.

In leaving the schools now can we sufficiently repay our conscientious and energetic teachers who have so patiently imparted to us their knowledge and experience? How willing they have been to assist us after hours when we needed help. How thoroughly they have impressed upon our minds the necessity of having each lesson well learned. Many a night have I seen the teachers working over books, that they might help the students keep up with their work.

For all these and innumerable other deeds of kindness and self-sacrifice, together with the instruction received at your hands, we wish to thank you from the very depths of our hearts.

To the Board of Education, who have worked so earnestly for the benefit of ourselves and the school, it due our heart felt thanks. Never have they refused to grant us any reasonable request which we have asked of them. They have worked for us without compensation, always doing what seemed to them best, regardless of criticism.

And now to our Superintendent under whose skilful direction we have reached this grand point in our lives. During the past two years he has worked for us and the school in general, as we have never before seen a man work. He has borne more than his share of the responsibility upon his shoulders without a word of complaint, and has always been ready with a kindly word for each one. By his frank and friendly manner he has won our hearts and respect as no one else has ever done. Words are inadequate to express our gratitude. Money would never repay him for the kindness shown us, and the many lessons he has taught us from his experience.

But who is it that has made our education possible, that has furnished the school buildings and the instructors? The citizens of Charlevoix. To each and every taxpayer we extend our sincere thanks.

Classmates in the Junior Class with a few minutes you will be Seniors. We shall now retire in your favor. We have not the slightest doubt but that our places will be ably filled next year, and that you will set the other classes a pace which will be hard to follow. You will be faced with what will probably seem insurmountable difficulties, but do not hold back or be discouraged. Do your best and we are sure that you will graduate with the highest honors.

Fellow classmates, the hour has struck, the hour we have tried to evade but which cannot longer be evaded, the hour when we must say farewell to each other. Soon, alas too soon, the four short years we have spent in others company will have passed into a memory. No longer shall we be able to express the feelings of class loyalty which have bound us together with their ties. We shall not rightly appreciate how strong and enduring these class friendships have been until we shall have been separated, but then,—then we shall realize that the days we were together as a class, were among the happiest of our lives.

"But time passes and changes are broad ocean seas;
Heavy freely sailed and tried as our own,
Classmates, let us live such manly and womanly lives, that our instructors, the Board of Education and our parents will feel amply repaid for the sacrifices made in our behalf.

And now to you, fellow class mates, and to one and all, farewell.

ENROUTE TO THE ANTILLES

Miss Constance Indings Writes From Newport News Concerning Her Trip.

Newport News, Va., June 19, '07.

Dear Pitner:

My, Oh My! What adventures! This is the first chance I have had to write letters, as at all our stops there has been no accommodations for writing, and found I could not write on the train. Well, to the first place, I want to say that I am in perfect health, Wingy included, never enjoyed myself so much in my life, and am happy as a sky-lark. Never the less, we have had adventures and I think I shall begin at the first and relate them in order. Can look back to Wednesday morning as if it were yesterday, and only wonder when I think of the distance covered. I remember the time when I saw the last of you all and also of shedding a few tears at parting, but that was soon over and we soon settled down to enjoy the remarkable scenery of Indiana, Williamsburg and those other small burghs. We reached Grand Rapids on time and went up town to look, it seemed very great to me then, but we soon have seen more wonderful things since. Went back to the depot and took the train for Cincinnati at 10:00 p. m. We both slept well and got up early as we couldn't afford to miss anything. It was a beautiful morning, and the country through Indiana and Ohio was lovely. Low rolling pasture lands with fine looking cows, and to wonder, when you saw the grain fields of waving grain and acres of delightful farms as far as eye could reach, with the hazy hills in the distance. Could often imagine some little home near a church to be the one where papa used to live. Saw the muddy Ohio, and because of the rainy season of the corn fields were actually submerged.

Just before pulling in at Cincinnati we passed through the tenement section. My, what misery and squalor, houses nearly piled on top of each other. I shall never forget Cincinnati. My first impression was, "is there nothing but negroes and smoke?" We drove over to the Central Union Station through the main streets and over cobblestones, then for the city. There were lovely stores and fine buildings. We went through the Arcade, equivalent to midway in Petoskey, and then we returned to the station and waited for the train train. We had a fine car and the scenery was grand—the swollen Ohio on one side and the mountains on the other. Saw the funny river boats. We often passed a fine old colonial homestead with a wide terraced lawn and then the little cabins with their rambling vines of roses. Such beautiful shade trees. I chose it as an ideal place to live. Nobody does anything down here but look out of their windows and sit on the verandas. Even saw men playing dominoes in the lawn.

But the best part was toward evening after we had left Charleston when the mountains began to increase in size. Such magnificent scenery. How anyone could live at the foot of those mountains without being inspired. We would go between high cliffs so close that the waterfalls would splash on the car windows. Saw negroes sitting in the doors of their cabins playing on their banjos." I never felt such delightful sensations. Everything was just as I have often pictured it. Slept fine. Awoke next morning to find that the train was ten hours late on account of land slides.

At Gordonsville we saw the best right old negro women with immense trays on their heads, filled with fry-chickens, pies and everything you could imagine. The Shenandoah valley was idealistic. We were somewhat elevated and could look down on that beautiful fertile valley with the blue hills in the distance. Arrived at Richmond about six p. m. From there it is a short distance to Newport News, and here we are and here we will stay until Wednesday, Kilpatrick guaranteed. Don't be frightened—only measles. Saw the quarter-master, and found it was nothing dangerous. Well, I'will close now as I am tired. Newport News is lovely and will write more about it to-morrow.

Lovingly,
CONSTANCE

Clarified Retail Milk Delivery

Ours is CLEAN MILK, it is not strained through three or four folds of cloth simply, but by centrifugal force. No sediment. When you see settings of any kind at milk you may be sure that there is considerable dissolved that you do not see. None of either kind in ours. Ours is clean flavored no. No cowy flavor or barny odors, but absolutely clean, and clean all the time—kept clean. Bottled at the factory and guaranteed. No sloppiness, not exposed to the dirt and filth of the street, but strictly pure. Ask our driver, Mr. Rob Withers, about cream and butter milk delivery. Costs no more than common milk. Visitors always welcome.

Letter to Mr. H. H. Smith.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir. Devoe is worth $1 or $1.50 a gallon, put on, how much is another point worth?

Depends on how many gallons you've got to put on, to be equal to one of Devoe.

Mr. J. J. Hall, Sheffield, Pa., painted two houses one coat five years ago, lead and oil, took 10 gallons.

Last summer bought 40 gallons Devoe for same houses, had 10 gallons left.

Mr. S. Avery, Dehli, N. Y., owns two houses exactly alike; painted one with Devoe, took 6 gallons. The other with some other, took 12 gallons. What'd you give for those off paints? Bear in mind, you've got to pay for the painting.

Yours truly

Precious Heritage.

Possession of temper is a precious heritage. It gives beauty to everything. It keeps its windows open toward the spice country and fills the house with perpetual delight. The fortunate possessor of a sunny soul is God's evangel in a dark world. He is a living gospel which no one will controvert, and the blessedness of which all men will appreciate. The body will grow old and the smooth brow will be furrowed, but a happy disposition is an antitoxic to the germs of age. Blessed is he whose life looks out upon the land of health and whose soul is responsive to the unifying vision.

Growing Old.

It is ten p. m. They are seated in the parlor. "No," she says, bowing her head: "I's says I am too young to become engaged. It is just 1:30 a. m. They are still seated in the parlor. Suddenly, from somewhere upstairs, a gruff voice shouts, "Hiram, if that fellow walks a little nearer you'll be old enough to accept his proposal!"—Woman's Home Companion.

Behind on Orders.

"I suppose there is such a person as the bookkiper," mused Uncle Allen Sparks, "but he has either retired from business or he's hopelessly behind on his orders."—Chicago Tribune.

IT'S QUITE A TRICK

To adjust glasses the way it should be done. Only an Optician can do it, and he needs the most ingenious appliances to help him. It's a great mistake for a person to choose his or her own glasses from a big pile of ready made ones. There is hardly one chance in a hundred that they will be a fit, and when they don't fit, a person might far better go without any.

Miss Bessie Warner, of East Jordan, is visiting the Misses Dunoy this week.

—The "Adorable Footlite," the latest and best in comic opera, at the Charlevoix Theatre soon.

Dr. Michlagine was called to Dunbagan, Mich. Monday by the serious illness of his wife's sister.

—James Mitchell of St Jacques, was in town Tuesday on his way home from Petoskey and Mackinac Island.

—Frank Hull is entertaining his mother and brother, Mrs. E. Hull, of Vassar, and Mr. L. J. Hull, of Cadillac.

—J. J. Pagel has bought the rustic bird-house built by Waterloo Boy, and is moving it to his property near the mineral well.

—While the through train summer schedule on the Pere Marquette is now in force, the "dummy" service will not begin until next Sunday.

The Charlevoix State Savings Bank has just declared its first semi annual dividend of 3 per cent, payable July first, a good showing.

Special communication of Charlevoix Lodge No. 282, F. & A. M., next Thursday evening, July 2nd, for work on first degree. By order W. M.

The sugar factory people are feeling quite encouraged over prospects. The beets are looking thinly, and promise a good yield. It looks as if we are doing well, with good prospects.

—There will be a supper at the home of Mrs. E. J. Meech from five to eight o'clock on July 3d, for the benefit of the Methodist pipe organ fund. Twenty five cents will pay the bill.

—The annual school meeting will occur at the high school room on the evening of July 8th, at which time there will be elected a trustee in place of F. J. Meech, whose term, of office expires.

—Hon. John Nicholls and wife left yesterday for Wisconsin. They will visit Mr. Nicholls' old home—Tremperleau, and then go to Whitewater to participate in a family reunion of Mrs. Nicholls' people.

—A force of men, under chief engineer Davidson, is at work putting the sugar factory in shape for the campaign. This force will be doubled as quickly as possible. Probably from 40 to 50 men will be at work all summer.

—Wm. Nicholls, who recently had his arm amputated as a result of a shingle mill accident, died in Harbor Springs from heart failure. He was thought to be doing well, and was in town Marcelline day. He leaves a wife.

—The arc lights on the main street were turned on the first time last Thursday night. As the system has been under a moonlight schedule the past week, fair judgment of the value of the lights could not be given, but there is no doubt that they will be worth all they cost in illuminating the river and harbor. A stranger, and serve as a beacon to mariners.

—Miss Helen Crane, who has been attending school in Chicago, is home for the summer.

—The U. S. gunboat Wolverine (formerly the Michigan) is at Harbor Springs on recruiting duty.

—Bert Benedict opened his new ice cream and candy parlors in the new Merriam building yesterday.

—The Elston Hotel has just installed a laundry with up to date machinery and a 5 horse power electric motor.

—The Detroit & Charlevoix R. R. is now Michigan Central property, but will be operated under the old management until further notice.

—W. E. Stephens of the Beaver Island Lumber Co., came over yesterday, and will take a day off to do some fishing on Intermediate Lake.

—The Sentinel job office has just turned out from 10 page pamphlets containing "Ordinances 98, and Rules Supplementary Thereto" governing the sanitary affairs of the city.

—Charlevoix Masons will visit their Boyne City brethren on Saturday night of this week. The officers of Beaver will leave Winter's dock at six o'clock sharp. All Masons are invited.

—Good bye, good old "Illinois." We love you if you did run amuck last summer. Come back again when that wind whose outlet gets through with you, and you will receive the good hand in Charlevoix.

—Superintendent Martindale has a force of men at work excavating for a new water works well. It will be twelve feet in diameter, thirty feet deep, and built of—stone. It will be just west of the old water works building, about five rods from the beach.

—Mrs. Chas. Collier, of Frankfort, has been the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Armstrong the past week. Mr. Collier, who is postmaster at Frankfort, was here Marcelline day. He will be remembered as inspector on a Charlevoix harbor contract several years ago.

—Among the old friends who paid Charlevoix a visit Marcelline day were Capt. "Tip" Miller, of the Pickford factory life saving station. Capt. Miller is seventy years old and is as lively as any life saver in the service. He has been 31 years in the government service in lighthouse and life saving departments.

The steamer Chippewanogan made this port Friday for the first time. She is a fine boat, with elegant and ample cabin accommodations, and is fitted up in powerful triple expansion engines. She will go on the run between Traverse City and Charlevoix daily for, now, a little more than trip, and will stop at all bay resorts.

—Thos. Sisler, long a resident of Charlevoix, died at his home on Sunday last, after a protracted illness, aged fifty years. He leaves a wife and four children,—Miss H. S. Fowler and Miss Lulu Sisler, of Charlevoix, Mrs. Louis Atchison and Robert Sisler, of Washington, D. C. The funeral was from the house yesterday, Rev. Dr. Wright officiating.

—The report colony of "early comers" is here, and by every boat and train the city and its resorts are filling up with the class of city people who consider Charlevoix the only place on earth in the summer time. Indications are that there will be more people here this season than ever before. The resort hotels are all open and gradually filling up.

—On Sunday evening, July 7th, there will be union religious services at the Charlevoix Theater, under the auspices of Hosea L. Swift and his lieutenant, and they forcibly illustrate what a business it intelligently applied can do. Again on Tuesday evening, July 9th, Mr. Swift and the boys will give an entertainment at the theater. The program includes stereoptican views and living pictures, speaking and singing.

—The following report was read at last City at the State G. A. R. meeting. There are now 11,916 members of the G. A. R. in Michigan, a decrease of two during the year. Of the decrease death was responsible for 189 in two years, it is said, the death rate will reach an average of three every two days, so rapidly has it decreased the last five years. The Women's Relief Corps reported today 5,835 members, with about $7,000 in the treasury, and a total value of relief afforded, cash and property, of about $5,200. The state department spent $630 during the year in further patriotic work in the schools. The ladies of the G. A. R. reported an increase in membership from 1,240 to 2,100 during the year.

Mrs. Wm. L. Tilden died at the home of her daughter, in Dunkirk, last Wednesday. Mrs. Tilden was well known here, where her husband was Methodist pastor twenty five years ago.

Miss Jeannette Campbell and Mrs. Emory Baldwin went to Chicago on the Manitou, Thursday, to visit friends. They were accompanied by Mrs. Allen, Mrs. E. D. Campbell's mother, who returned to her home in Illinois.

F. E. Moeller, general passenger agent, W. E. Wolfenden, general western passenger agent, and H. I. Gray, district passenger agent, all of the Pere Marquette, were here Tuesday, and agent Gunner had them about town in a carriage.

This afternoon at the Pomona Grange, the new Hall of Martin Corbet Grange will be dedicated, and the event will be made one of unusual interest by the members of that foraage. Several distinguished speakers are on the program.

Some of our leading citizens were victimized by a smart swindler one day last week, and the joke of it is, the swindler was a woman. It was a watch game. The lady gave her name as Hamilton, and claimed to hail from Hope City. It was a case of business in her family, and the necessity of raising money. The watch was stayed in the keeping of Frank Coleman. After gathering in a goodly sum she took up the watch at Coleman's, after telling him a plausible story.

—The Detroit & Charlevoix railroad will change this Sunday, June 23th, and put on fast visual summer schedule. A passenger train will leave East Jordan at 9:00 a. m. connecting with the G. R. & I. for all points north and south at Alba, and at Frederic with the Michigan Central railroad trains in both directions. Returning train will reach East Jordan at 4:25 p. m. A freight train carrying passengers will arrive at East Jordan at 11:55 a. m., and leave at 2:30 p. m.

Fred. Fischer will open the refreshing pool Saturday, June 29, at two o'clock. For the benefit of theatre city people the pool will be open on Wednesday and Saturday nights until 9:30, other nights it will close at six o'clock. The pool has a new heating plant with an improved method of supplying fresh water—the water changing continually. The Charlevoix swimming pool is the only place of its kind in Northern Michigan, and is one of the chief attractions in this, the greatest resort city in Northern Michigan.

The first Jordan Enterprise at last acknowledge that a dead horse has been closed whereby the Michigan Central becomes the owner of the Detroit & Charlevoix R. R. The Enterprise has persistently denied that any such deal was contemplated. And it has not been entirely alone in the disclaimer. The Sentinel has made a "holdup" of the proposition for the past five years and it has been right all the time. But this will show that the time is no more than up that the Sentinel fired for the final consummation of this altogether logical and satisfactory outcome.

—The time is to have several notable convention gatherings here this season. On the 5th the Equitable Life Association of Pittsburg will have a convention of its agents or that district. On the same date the west northern Excursion Bureau has a gathering. On the 15th the Western Passenger Agents will assemble in the Casino, and on the 16th the Western Freight Classification Committee meets. The later gathering not only brings a representative from each railroad system, but shippers will be represented. This will be the largest gathering and will continue longer than the others. These various gatherings will bring many people to Charlevoix before the big rush comes—during the August and the last half of July.

A GREAT DAY.

The Maccabee Celebration a Complete Success in Every Particular.

Friday, June 21st, 1907, will long be remembered as the day that Charlevoix got even with Dame Nature. Seven years ago Charlevoix entertained the Northwestern Maccabee Association, and it rained continuously from the rising of the sun to the setting thereof.

In no monetary the association landed in Charlevoix again last Friday. It is conservatively estimated that five thousand people came here by train, boat and highway—certainly it was the largest crowd that ever thronged our streets. A train brought seven hundred from Manistee and another brought six hundred from Cadillac. Steamships from the Traverse Bays and Inter Lake on hoofed crowds.

The weather was ideal. Nature smiled this time, from the rising of the sun to the setting thereof, and while not a cloud obscured the face of Old Sol, the temperature was just proper. The town was well decorated, the Maccabee colors ruling—in fact the town was gay. Tents from Animal Lake to the stone quarries and from Lake Michigan to the sugar factory.

Bands came—five of them—march in red, blue and green,—and down the smooth, clean streets they marched under the arches and the banners, amid the plaudits of the multitude. Grand Marshal B. S. Scadden, well mounted, was everywhere, arranging for the grand parade, which started at eleven.

The chief features of the parade were the floats carrying the digger teams of the various Tents and Hives. The knights in their costumes and the ladies in immaculate white presented an enchanting panorama. The local floats contained the N. I. Produce Co's creamery exhibit (Orbanski & Sim's display), and the local float of H. H. Emery, Jr., in our city hunters were there. The crowd was strong on either side. The free bands were conspicuous among the "ace of spades" the Knights of the Maccabees. Carriages contained the Great Tent and Great Hive officials, and the mayor and common council.

At three o'clock Mayor Ann Arbor delivered a short address of welcome, from the band stand. Then Dr. Bartlett introduced the officials of the two Orders. Great Commander Boynton was the chief speaker, followed by Hon. Perry Powers and others.

Following the speeches came the band concert, the Knights drill by W. McCallum, of Petoskey, Frank A. Ferguson, of East Jordan and W. A. Smith, of Charlevoix. Five drills responded—Cadillac was first, Petoskey second, Traverse City second, East Tawas second, Ann Arbor third, Alba fourth. The prize bands competing were Mancelona and Mancelona High school.

In the games and sports the contests were spirited. In the dash Grand Cadillac defeated Manistee by a score of 4 to 3. In the launch race Cedar Kenyon, of East Jordan, took first. In the free for all launch race Roy Ranger took first, Earl Young second, and Joe Smith third. In the rowing race Sam Hamilton won first, and Will Allard second.

Belvedere hall had been fitted out for the degree team contest and was a beautiful sight. The immense room was gorgeously decorated with flags and banting, while hundreds of lights filled it with dazzling brightness.

On account of a misunderstanding, the earliest degree team contests were not pulled off. Traverse City had two teams proved and Manistee one, but the prize will probably be kept until next year. The graduates of Cadillac and Traverse City gave exhibition drills which showed care ful work and long practice.

The Northport Cadets, so strong commanded by Capt. S. V. Porter, were a very pleasing feature. They gave several exhibition drills that drew the crowd.

The business meeting was held in the afternoon and Manistee selected as the next meeting place. The following officers were elected.

President, John Keegan, Manistee.

First vice-president, Russell Lee, East Lake.

Secretary, William Mansaw, Manistee.

Treasurer, August Holmes, Manistee.

Many words of praise for Charlevoix were spoken by our visitors. Many had never seen Charlevoix before, and these were lost in their enthusiasm of admiration for our beauties, and our hospitality.

GRAND RAPIDS NEWS.

ANCIENT WRECK UNCOVERED.

Ribs of the Old Steamer Sunny Sides Uncovered.

In excavating for the new water works well, about four rods from the water's edge, four feet under the sand, just west of the old water works building, the workmen uncovered the remains of the steamer Sunnyside, which was wrecked at the mouth of Pine River, during a gale, the fall of 1883.

The Sunnyside was owned by Hannah, Lay & Co., of Traverse City, and was commanded by Capt. Jones. Johnson, who died at his farm near Traverse City about a year ago. The steamer was caught in a gale while at the old pier, and went high and dry upon the beach. When the water of this came to Charlevoix, the spring of 1885, the wreck was lying on the beach.

The oak timbers of the old boat, yet uncovered, after lying in the sand nearly thirty nine years, are yet quite sound. One of the workmen in digging among the timbers found a watch chain which Bellinger pronounces good gold.

It is a good time to get relics down at the water works.

GASOLINE BOATS

The Law Governing Their Operations to Be Strictly Enforced.

The following from the Muskegon News will be read with interest here as some of the owners are laughing expectedly those who own such boats:

C. L. Chamberlain, deputy collector of the customs of this city, has just received a communication from Washington, collector of customs for this district of Michigan, at Grand Haven to the effect that several complaints from revenue cutter officers have been received at his office so far this season, principally on account of violations of the pilot rules by the operators of gasoline launches, motor vessels and other small craft plying upon Lake Michigan, or by encountering on tributary waters, which have been given the proper penalties having been imposed by the Grand Haven official.

"In nearly every case it is safe to say that the complaints are violations of the law as regards the displaying of proper lights after sunset and before sunrise, the operators of the open boat, pleading an exclusive attention on the wheel, 'after sunset' instead of interpreting it as it should be, literally.

"In previous years, very little attention have been paid to infractions of the law by small craft, but according to the action taken so far this year it is evident that the government has determined that no discriminations between them and the larger boats shall be made.

"Collector Lillie is of the belief that ordinary small gasoline launches motor vessels, and other similar craft, come under the section of the pilot rules relating to 'open' boats and that such craft when navigating between sunset and sunrise, will at a slight elevation at the bow of the boat which will display a green light on the starboard or right side, a white light in front and a green light on the port or left side, it will meet the requirements of the law. A row boat should carry an ordinary lantern lighted.

"Persons wishing to procure information in regard to the requirements of the pilot rules should communicate with Captain George W. Pardee or Charles S. Ekhill, government inspectors of hulls and boilers at Grand Haven."

THE GIRL WITH A MILLION

By D. C. Murray

"I, on the same day," replied Mr. Zeno, "never different men tell twenty different stories and actually believe them. President Flynn parts with a million—I believe they build such a good deal."

"They build very fine," said Fleet, "and I know Mr. Flynn's parts with a million—I believe they build such a good deal."

"Why, what's your name?" asked Zeno.

"Fleet, sir—Thomas Fleet, at your service."

"Well, Fleet, I'm sorry I don't like the cut of your jib."

"I'm sorry, too, sir, but I can't help it."

"Why, what's the matter?" asked Angela.

"Nothing, miss, nothing. I don't like the cut of your jib, sir, that's all."

"Don't be offended," urged Angela.

"Not at him, miss, I know. He's quite a gentleman, and I'm only a poor lad. I have bankers and lady like you, if, by chance, I should happen to be in your company, but I know my place, miss, and I know the place for people like him. He has, no doubt, a good character, and I am an educated and intelligent lad, but I don't mind my place, miss."

"Do you mean to say," said Angela, standing over him with a troubled face, "that I'm undemocratic?"

"Your remember among Mr. Mackintosh, miss, I remember? Did you ever serve him and Angela together? There was a well, a gentleman, and in know their schools, and to warn him if he should be in danger?"

"Well, sir," said Fleet, "What's my share?"

"You are entirely devoted to Dubrovski?" said Zeno, with his cousinly smile. "You are as devoted as I am. But you are also devoted to the others, who know you better. You will be a little suspicious and careful when one and you will warn you if you please which I watch Dubrovski. You will report to me—full friends which our conversations I have with Dubrovski. Mr. Fleet, I will arrange the report together so that they shall be nice and accurate.

"They'll nail us at it," said Fleet, "anyhow. They're hound to nail us sooner or later."

"Ah!" exclaimed Zeno discreetly. "But must not let them nail us at it."

"Couldn't we split the thing?" demanded Fleet. "Couldn't I work on with the old one and you—

"Do hound in your hasty, dirty, muddy Fleet?" Mr. Zeno frowned. "Let us work together. Dubrovski is a very, very, very,

SURGEON'S MISTAKE

NOT VERY SERIOUS: HE ONLY CUT OFF THE WRONG LEG.

Impossible as Experimental Tinkering with the Tariff Might Also Prove to Be a Mistake the Wiser Plan Would Be Not to Cut Off Either Leg.

The New York Times makes bold to say that "if we remove the tariff we should import more goods, and we should also export more goods." Import more we certainly should if our tariff taxes were lowered, and export yes if we had no tariff at all. It is because our imports be the main consideration, why have any tariff?

But does it follow that our exports would increase in equal ratio? Well, that will, of course, depend on what we manufacture for export. Can we now sell Dreadnaughts manufactures, for, even though the American wage standard were to be cut down to the foreign level—a proposition, by the way, which opens up a vista of grave consequences which we may this contemplate without a shudder of fear and dread—our lower priced goods would not be allowed to invade the markets of manufacturing countries, the corresponding wage reductions would inevitably occur in such countries. The workers in European mills and factories must somehow live and so must we in this Kingdom, otherwise chaos comes again.

Do Dreadnaughts sound our exports to such increase under a lower tariff or no tariff, for the reason that by so doing we would appear to be making preparation or in readiness for the foreign competition to be found at home? We cannot remove our tariff, or we cannot remove our tariff, or we cannot and yet be our religious selves.

No, it does not follow that greater imports will greatly increase if we cut down the tariff to 1890 or 1897. We are discovering fully twenty times everything which we then expected.

Inclusion of the tariff with a view to maintaining competitive industries made of necessity break down the whole wage rate. Nobody, we believe, disputes that. The free traders and the tariff reformers will see that wages are too high and made to come down, but that lower rate of wage will compensate for the cut in wages. This is like inflation, and then pouring balsam into the sore, saying: "The pain may be gone, but the wound is still there, and it was not there before. The question then, then, is whether it is wise to make the cut, whether for the mere pleasure of taking experiments in the interest of wounds we should apply the knife.

The healthiest condition known to the history of foreign labor and production exists in the United States to-day. "I never made but one really serious mistake," said a great surgeon, "and I spent the rest of my consequences." "Oh, no," was the reply; "I merely cut off the wrong leg. In the present case the wiser practitioner would seem to be not to cut off either leg. Let nature take its course." The American body politic requires no tariff surgery of any kind.

Not Quite Killed.

Thirty years of almost exclusive attention to domestic trade has killed our instinct for commerce across the sea.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Not exactly. The instinct appears to be very much alive. Forty years ago, in 1866, our exports were $185,000,000. In 1906 they were $1,798,000,000, an increase of 900 per cent. In 1866 our total foreign trade was $1,783,000,000. Forty years later it was $2,916,000,000, not counting trade with Porto Rico and Hawaii, which will bring the total to nearly $3,200,000,000—an increase of over 80 per cent. Forty years ago our imports were $434,000,000, 40 years later they were $1,303,000,000. All this would seem to indicate a considerable attention to foreign trade, and with a fair degree of interest. It suggests that while taking good care of the domestic market and the internal trade our instinct for commerce across the seas has been far from killed. Our attention to internal trade has made us, after per capita and in gross, the richest among all the nations. Foreign trade is a side issue; a good thing to have, but in comparison, a poor consideration. "Foreign trade," said Andrew Carnegie, "is a long gain; domestic trade is the true thing."

Mr. Root and Canada.

It is understood that as a basis for complete free trade between the United States and Canada Secretary Root has proposed the adoption by the Dominion of the American tariff schedules in their entirety, as against other countries. Great Britain included. Nothing less can other than so early an official source the proposition would seem impracticable almost to the point of absurdity. The establishment of uniform tariff rates and their uniform enforcement would necessitate on Canada's part withdrawal from the British empire and political union with the United States. Such a merger would also involve the complete abandonment of Canada's industrial aspirations. Canada would spurn either of these proposals if considered separately, coupled together, as they would have to be, she would feel entitled to treat them with contempt. A little deeper study of the tariff question would serve to enlighten Secretary Root regarding many things that cannot be done.

Average Telephone Calls.

The leading telephone company of the United States has 5,000 offices and exchanges, operates 4,671,000 miles of wire, has nearly 90,000 employes and 1,800,000 subscribers. At the end of the year 1905 the average number of calls amounted to 11,000,000. The average number of calls per day per subscriber was a little over six.

Burden We Would All Assume.

Sick may be a burden, but few of us are willing to kick at a burden of that kind.

WAGES AND THE TARIFF.

Some Reckless Admissions Made by Democratic Leader.

In a speech in congress the other day Hon. John Sharp Williams confessed the coming of immigrants to this country, the swelling stream over some colonial days. He said they came to better their condition, that wage was a falling off in pay, that, but that the rule was a steady inflow. He gave no one reason the higher wages paid in this country and said:

"There never was a period from the time the Jacksonian Democrat on Friday took up to the adoption of the Chamberlain of the United States on Monday morning, when the wheel of misfortune, for the laboring man, and the unskilled labor in the field, never went about double what they were in Great Britain. No tariff rate, low tariff or high tariff, made no difference what the tariff on our statute book was, they came.

This is very reckless talk for a leader in congress. Can Mr. Williams explain why there was always the falling off in immigration when free trade was the rule in our country?

Without attempting or going back beyond the memories of middle-aged men, it is enough to say that in 1893, 1894 and 1895, skilled laborers wages fell 50 per cent; common laborers' wages fell 50 per cent, and thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of laborers, skilled and unskilled, were unable to find employment at any price. This may not have applied to Mississippi, but it did apply in the entire northeast, north and west.

It is just as plain that if the tariff were took down below a million of skilled laborers would be without work in a month and in two months millions would be cut down 40 per cent.—Salt Lake City Telegram.

JUST STAND PAT.

The Public Satisfied with the Present Tariff Policy.

The majority of the people of the country are well enough satisfied with our present tariff policy and do not demand or desire any change therein. As we are now, as we always have been, we are exporting three thousand millions of dollars in merchandise, six seven years and also importing more than any other country in the world, and we are doing so as long as we are able to get either laborers or anything to meet all the demands on our prosperity, that neither need nor can be had in only one, the work which is wanting and waiting to be done, there is little use of talking about revising the tariff. The present congressional calendar will have to be a very short one, and there will be for no Republican principle or policy. There is ample to stand on, if it is of policy is wrong the Democrats will find the Republican party and Republican policies universally and unanimously satisfied. If any mistake is given for Democratic success it will be the Republicans' own making, and will consist, however, in the attempt to make a change in a policy which has proved so satisfactory to the people, and which, if it errs in any direction, it errs in direction of repeated prosperity, and which, if it errs in any direction, it errs in direction of repeated prosperity, and which, if it errs in any direction, it errs in direction of repeated prosperity

THE STARS AND STRIPES.

One hundred and thirteen years ago a new banner was flying for liberty, found it but to fade. It is not likely that this country even dreamed that the young republic would live long, but that the flag it was about to spread would be known as the banner of freedom and liberty for the entire world. It was not the original intention to make the flag a thing of beauty. Congress had decided that there should be a flag, but could not agree as to the proper design. Then she requested the women of the country to make one and hand it to her. The small band which had been appointed to do the work had a long discussion as to the proper size and shape of the flag. The committee was composed of Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, a young widow, who was a cousin of George Ross, a member of congress from Pennsylvania, and Colonel Francis Hopkinson, a member of the committee appointed by congress to design a flag, and Robert Morris, who was also a member of congress from Pennsylvania. Mrs. Ross was a Quaker, and Colonel Hopkinson was a Episcopalian, and they had a long argument as to the proper size for the flag. Mrs. Ross said that the number of points in the stars should be left to the committee, but that the number and size of the stripes should be left to the women who made the flag. Colonel Hopkinson was in favor of a flag with 13 points in the stars and 13 stripes, but Mrs. Ross said that was too many points for the stars and too many stripes for the flag. The committee finally decided that there should be 13 points in the stars and 13 stripes in the flag, and that the stars should be arranged in a circle, so that no one could say that they were the stars of any one state and not of the others. The committee also decided that the stripes should be arranged so that no one could say that they were the stripes of any one state. The committee also decided that the color of the flag should be red, white and blue, because these colors were those of the mother country, and the young republic was proud of her ancestry. The committee also decided that the union should be blue, because that was the color of the heavens, and the stripes should be red and white, because red was the color of the British coat of arms, and white was the color of the British flag. The idea of the stars was taken from the coat of arms of the Washington family, and the stripes were taken from the British flag. The committee also decided that the number of points in the stars should be left to the women who made the flag. Mrs. Ross said that the number of points in the stars should be 13, because there were 13 states in the union, and that the number of points in the stars

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

From a well-informed and observing traveler from Michigan, Chase S. Osborn, comes this comment, in the course of a recent letter from South America. "I have always contended that a thrifty workingman can earn more, live better and save more in our country than in any other on earth, and I become more certain of this all the time." Mr Osborn further declares that these better conditions in the United States are not due to the fact that our wage is competitive, our country as has so often been suggested, as he has noted conditions in many owner countries and found the contrast as great in favor of the United States as when compared with the older and more congested countries of Europe.

MARINE NOTES.

There is lively competition between the Michigan Salt company and the Nessen Transportation company, on the Pentwater Ludington route. The salt company has just placed the steamer John Dickson on the run against the Nessen steamer Lizzie Walsh, and the two boats are being pushed to the limit to outstrip each other.

North Point lighthouse, a faithful guide for mariners into Milwaukee harbor for many nine years, will cease its vigilance with the end of this month. In the last river and harbor bill enacted by Congress it was voted to discontinue this light with the end of the present fiscal year and United States Engineer Hudson has notified the keeper to this effect. Lake Michigan captains are making a row about it.

The steamer sterling, recently purchased by the N. M. Trans. Co., was formerly the Vanderbilt. The Sterling was bought a year ago by a syndicate of Chicago gamblers, headed by Matt Fenton. After a month money had been spent in transforming the old freight steamer into a gambling ship, to run in opposition to the City of Traverse, the scheme fell through and the Sterling has since been lying idle at a dock.

Keeper Ingley has been officially notified by Commander Orchard, lighthouse inspector, that sometime after July 1st there will be installed on the north Charlevoix pier a bell fog signal, and that a semaphore will be appointed at this port. This may be accepted as a compromise between the fog whistle and no signal. Marine men of the freight sort have long been asking for a fog whistle, but recent litigant have opposed the proposition, very properly, on the ground that it would be a distinct damage to their interests.

The rock is an important function any to a vessel. This is attested by the fact that when the two ranks on the cutlery island Haven struck for more money the boat was unable to proceed on her regular run until the kitchen crew was adjusted. A settlement was made between the captain and his brave cooks after a two day tie up. The Grand Haven Tribune, describing the favorable outcome of this strike, says: In the evening all the lights were turned on, flags displayed and the whistles were operated to the best in carriages. They were received by Co. B. in Holter at the gang plank, who escorted to their the glad hand and in a few words welcomed them back to their hospitable pudlum.

Beginning with July every craft on the lakes and inland rivers must be provided with a revised copy of the latest pilot rules. They may be had free of charge from the steamboat inspectors in the respective districts. Ordinary small launches, motor boats and even rowboats come under the section of pilot rules relating to "open boats," and that if such craft, when navigating between sunset and sunrise, will carry a combination lamp, placed at the slight elevation at the bow of the boat which displays a green light on the starboard (right) side, a white light in front, and a red light on the port side, it will meet the requirements of the law. A row boat should carry an ordinary lantern lighted. It would, therefore, behove those concerned to display lights when required in the future, and thereby preclude the possibility of the "cutter" officers reporting any irregularities in this respect. Persons in doubt should communicate with the inspectors.

Remarkable Rescue

That truth is stranger than fiction, has once more been demonstrated in the little town of Fedora, Tenn., the residence of C. V. Tepper. He writes, "I was in bed, entirely disabled" with hemorrhages of the lungs and throat. Doctors failed to help me, and all hope had fled when I began taking Dr. Kings New Discovery. PERE MARQUETTE.

Change of Ownership Promises Improvements and More Energetic Management.

J. P. Morgan & Co. has announced the details of the settlement of affairs of the Pere Marquette Railroad company.

The adjustment centers chiefly about the preferred stock, which at present constituted, is not preferred as to assets. A large number of the preferred shareholders have agreed to subscribe to $5,000,000 five year 6 per cent debenture notes to the extent of 30 per cent on their holdings.

These notes are to provide for payment of the company's floating debt to a similar amount, which is at present outstanding in the form of receiver's certificate. In return they are to receive a new issue of preferred stock with a bonus of new stock amounting to fifteen per cent of their holdings. The new stock will be preferred as to assets and will be cumulative as to dividends of per cent 3½ years from next July.

The Pere Marquette has at present outstanding $16,000,000 in common stock and $12,000,000 in preferred. The terms of the settlement amount practically to an assessment of 50 per cent on the preferred shares. Prior to the payment of the assessment, every holder of 100 shares of preferred, on payment of $5,000 obtains $7,500 in notes, and 125 shares in new preferred stock.

It is said that the Pere Marquette stockholders have furthermore agreed to endorse the lease of the road by the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton company. This relieves the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton from paying the guaranteed dividends on the Pere Marquette common and preferred stock.

When the stockholders at their meeting vote in favor of this plan, the Pere Marquette will be taken from the hands of the receiver. It is reported that the Morgan interests will then make it a local Michigan company, to be run independently, with several Michigan capitalist elected to the board.

Boyne City: The largest sturgeon ever caught around these parts was caught this week near the Veneer plant in the Boyne river. A young lad named Fink had a spear and was wading in the water trying to spear fish, when he espied a monster fish in the water. He made a finger at it with a spear but could do nothing with it and finally spoared it four times. Not being able to land the big fish he secured the services of Will Hill at the Veneer plant and they captured the fish, which happened to be a sturgeon and when weighed tipped the scale at 75 pounds. It measured 5 feet 6 inches and had a head much resembling a pig. The head of the fish as large as a ten pound hog, was on exhibition at Herrin & Smith's hardware and was viewed by many as a great curiosity.

ABOUT OLD AGE PENSIONS.

There Are 3,086 Persons in This County Over 100 Years Old.

Germany has expended $13,000,000 for age pensions on one nothing of $125,000,000 for sickness and $135,000,000 for accidents. It is strange that this country has not advanced more attention in an advanced country like the United States which pays out more than $142,000,000 a year for civil and navy pensions and has spent $1,000,000,000 in all for war since 1861. According to the Census the census figures show that in 1900 there were 3,086 persons of 100 years of age and over. Among the 3,086 persons of 65 years and over, there were 1,044 married men and 271,226 married women, 47,826 widowers, 96,126 widows, 85 bachelors and 30,858 spinsters.

DAMAGE DONE BY WOLVES

Ranchmen Suffer Heavily From Depredations of Animals.

Vernon Hatley, of the forest reserve service at Washington, who has been making an investigation of the ravages of wolves on the ranches of the southwest, reports that in a certain part of New Mexico he learned from a moderate estimate of the losses killed by four wolves of which he got trace was a Spanish deer in a calf every three days, or approximately 100 head of cattle in each wolf. "Coyotes are as calves," says Mr. Hatley, "at the low rate of $10 a head each wolf would do this into from the ranchmen a case. This estimate of a year for the four wolves leaves out of consideration the five to ten hungry offspring of each pair, which begin to kill stock for themselves in the fall and continue to do so as long as they live."

Not Looking for Millions.

The head of a large concern engaged in the manufacture of various kinds of machinery, and especially that which is used in equipping plants, has a letter from a business receiving pendent which he gives very bright. It came in response to an estimate submitted as to the cost of an equipment for a new mill. The man had written to the house stating that he wanted to set up a new mill and asked how much it would cost to equip it with the necessary machinery. This was right in line with the business of the house and after a careful estimate a modest total was reached of $3,000, and the man was informed that it would require at least that amount to give it a trial to make it live. The response received by the firm was brief and to the point. "I had $3000, what in thunder would I want with a new mill?"

Taking a Wrong View.

How many take a wrong view of life, and waste their nervous system in endeavoring to accumulate wealth without thinking of the present happiness they are throwing away. It is no wealth we honor that makes a man happy. Many of the most enviable beings on earth have both, but it is a radiant, sunny spirit which knows how to bear little trials and enjoy the comforts, and thus extract happiness from every incident in life.—The Christian World.

To adjust glasses the way it should be done. Only an Optician can do it, and he needs the most ingenious appliances to help him. It's a great mistake for a person to choose his or her own glasses from a big pile of ready made ones. There is hardly one chance in a hundred that they will be a fit, and when they don't fit, a person might far better go without any.

I will examine your eyes for you free of charge, and if you need glasses I will guarantee a good fit.

—Rev. Fr. Paschal Fostater O. S. F., the past two years the Catholic superior at St. James, has been ordered to the Petoskey monastery to await assignment to another parish. His assistant, Rev. Fr. Norbert, has been appointed to succeed him, and a young priest will be appointed assistant.

—Prosecuting Attorney Clink is making the commendation of all good citizens of Charlevoix county, says the Boyne Citizen, by closing all disreputable road houses. This week one near East Jordan was put out of business and also one at Boyne Falls. The prosecutor says he will not stop until they are all wiped out of business in the county. Let the good work go on.

—Mr. Herman L. Swift and his Punkin Hunter boys will give an entertainment at the Charlevoix Theater next Tuesday evening. The program embraces a wide scope of interesting things to those who are interested in boys, and especially to those who appreciate the class of work that Mr. Swift is engaged in. The Punkin Hunter Boys deserve the aid and interest of all. Admission free to all who bring their pocket books.

—A. G. Allison, of Petoskey avenue, has a barred rock chicken. Two years old, which lays an egg a weekly that measures 8½ by 6½ in diameter double yolk.

—The steamer Hunter is now on her daily run to St. James, leaving there at 8:15 a. m. arriving St. James 11:30. Returning, leave St. James 1:30 p. m. arriving Cha levoix 4:30. This is one of the finest trips in the Michigan region. St. James has a good hotel, and there are two things on the island to interest the visitor.

—The orchestra of "The Inn" will give three concerts a week at the Bellaire Tool—Sunday, Tuesday and Friday afternoon. The Sunday concert will begin at 3 o'clock, while the concerts on Tuesday and Friday will begin at 2:30. The visitors are now in perfect working order, so that the water in the pool will be "free" now on in the very best condition.

—Another find is reported from the old wreck of the Sunnyside, down at the water wheel. Last week we referred to the discovery of a watch chain, the Tuesday John Wells, who was at work clearing out the timbers for the new wheel found a silver watch that belonged to the chain. The watch had been in the bottom of the wreck for forty years and had stopped running.

—The steamboiler city of Tremont came in Sunday and proceeded to Boyne City for timber. A night at the old boat wakened a memory. It was on her City of Tremont, then a fine passenger boat of the Sarnia line, that the editor of this paper came to the Grand Traverse region forty years ago. She was commanded by Capt. McHenry, who always wore a flag hat on the pilot house.

—This is what Tony Powers says in his paper, the Cadillac News: "Charlevoix Macatawa celebration was a whole was a most enjoyable success. The 4th is one of the most beautiful of all the year, and elaborate arrangements had been made by the Macatawa and business men of Charlevoix, for royally entertain their guests. They fully succeeded and the day will come be pleasantly remembered by all who went Macatawa day of 1907 to Charlevoix."

—Thirty Charlevoix Masons chartered the Steamer saturday night and went to Boyne City on a visit to their brethren. Fine hospitality and courtesy with which they were received and entertained will long remain a pleasant memory. A delegation from East Jordan went over on the Hunter making the visit doubly enjoyable. The Masonic ladies in Boyne City spread a most elaborate banquet at midnight. It was one of the pleasant events of its kind we have ever attended.

—The N. M. Trans. Co's freight steamer, the John H. Sterling, Capt. S. Small, arrived here on her first trip Monday morning. She will make a round trip a week between Chicago and Cheboygan, stopping at all way ports. There is much regret expressed by our people at an arrangement that gives us one less passenger boat than heretofore, but there is one compensating feature in the deal, the Sterling relieves the Missouri of much of the freight business thereby insuring better time for Capt. Finucan's boat.

—One of the biggest lumber outfits in the United States has made the statement that within the next decade or two this country will be driven to importing lumber from Japan, Manchuria and other eastern countries. He says that there is little timber now left in Wisconsin, this being owned by a half dozen men. The forests of the southern states will be exhausted in ten years, and the vast quantities of timber in the Pacific coast states will give out before long. It is undeniable that the great building material of the future will have to be of something else than wood.

—Frazier, the shoe man, has a new ad in this issue.

—Miss Maggie Green, who is a teacher in Whitewater, Wis., is home for the summer.

—A new law just passed by the legislature makes it a misdemeanor to sell gasoline in other than red cans or cans bearing a red label. Red is the generally accepted danger signal and the red label or can means that the contents unless properly handled is a dangerous explosive. Hereafter it is unnecessary to get the kerosene can mixed up with the one containing the highest and more explosive oil.

—Exchange: Potatoes are now being sent to Germany in place of cedar wood for the manufacture of lead pencils. The product is a little tougher than cedar, but the pencils are the same size as those now in use, and the cost is much less. According to recent statistics, the export from Germany to foreign countries equaled 15,000 tons, with the total number of of pencils at 2,000,000,000. The cedar used at present in the manufacture of lead pencils is expensive, and the quantity limited while, on the other hand, the cultivation of potatoes is advancing each year. For these reasons this invention may mark the beginning of a new era in the production of lead pencils.

A DISASTER

Three Charlevoix Lake Guitarists Anglers Burned Out in Camp.

Dr. A. See E. A. Lovejoy and Dr. Sweet in company formed a fishing party that went to the upper peninsula early last week on a tour of fishing expeditions. They received Thursday afternoon a telegram from their partner in purse, fishing and discomfiture.

They camped on a trout stream about ten miles from Seney. On the night particular morning that will go into local geography history, they had left camp for the hunts of the morning. Someone, Sweet and Lovejoy said, had provided a fire and proceeded on their way some distance when it was discovered that something had been left behind. What that, whatever it was, the article was we are unable to say, but it was there a box of fish hooks or a bottle of—mosquito lotion. This is a matter of little consequence.

Emory went back to camp after the forgotten supply, but soon found his companions with the startling announcement that the tent was burning up. Inasmuch as the tent contained most of their clothing, and their food—and other necessaries—it was a serious matter. Returning to the camp they found the tent and its contents totally ruined. No insurance. Certainly not, there were expensive material helpful to work rain and humidity where life's a short time before in and comfort required expensive tent and other articles to secure, seriously impairment had been "knocked" in the head, and a little, we were saved the clothes, blankets, etc. These were completely put out of circulation.

The party at once took to the boat, drifting down stream to Seney where they succeeded in securing necessary clothing, and broken in spirit, they returned to Charlevoix.

The Musical Event of the Season.

For genuine music of the tuneful, catchy order, Heywood & Lennon's new comic opera, "The Adorable Fritzer," at the Vaudette Wednesday evening, a party composed of several of the roads admitted they had been fooled to how to public opinion and also railroad legislation. They said that no further light would be made on the two cents lines already passed and that the roads would accept the inevitable.

Senator Wetmore is a growing man, and is bound to be heard from.

Heedless of his bright, clean uniform, L. M. Clark, a colored, Pullman car porter on train Rapids, jumped into Grand Traverse bay last Wednesday evening and rescued a twelve-year old girl, getting her just as she was sinking for the last time. The child was unconscious when brought ashore, but Clark managed to free her lungs of water and restore her by hard work. Just as she regained consciousness Clark's train started, and without waiting to learn the name of the child he jumped on board and went on his trip. The girl was taking on the church factory down and had climbed in. Another man was present through the whole proceeding, but did not move to assist Clark in any way.

A group of Beulah Home boys. Mr. Swift picked up this bunch in Chicago at one time.

To the Patrons of the Charlevoix Theater.

By posting quite a large giant antler I have secured the Irma Opera Co in their production "The Adorable Fritzer," a comic opera which has scored a great success the past two seasons. I will personally guarantee this attraction and any person not satisfied with the performance can have his money cheerfully refunded after the second act. This will be the feature show of the season, and I have been to considerable expense in securing an attraction of this kind. I hope the patrons that appreciate a first class performance will show same by turning out and giving me their support on this occasion. You should know that it all lays with you in regard to the class of shows I can have come to our city, the better patronage the better shows. This attraction comes to our town Monday July 8th.

Two Cents a Mile Now.

Passenger rates on all railroads of the United States will be reduced to 2 cents a mile. The lowering of the price and complete abolition of the old 3-cent rates will begin July 1.

This was the decision reached in Chicago after a long and heating discussion by the leading railway presidents of all the western and transcontinental railroads.

It was not a formal agreement but a cordially binding, for two large roads along a transcontinental business are said to have served an ultimatum to others that they would put the rate into effect immediately.

Following the meeting officials of several of the roads admitted they had been forced to bow to public opinion and also railroad legislation. They said that no further light would be made on the subject. We doubt if there can be found in Northern Michigan a man better equipped than he to sit in that body, and we cordially second the movement in his behalf.

Senator Wetmore is a growing man, and is bound to be heard from.

Senator Fred C. Wetmore.

The legislature at its recently ended session legislated Charlevoix county into another senatorial district, thus leaving from us that prince of good fellows, and able legislator Senator Fred C. Wetmore.

We had developed an ardent liking for this bright young Cadillac lawyer, who has in the Michigan senate invariably alone most of his bills. But in the loss of him, erstwhile, we are consoled by the fact that there are broader fields for his talents. Senator Dexter "There is no equal on Ulster." For Fred C. Wetmore. There is a congressional district of which Charlevoix and Wexford counties form a part, and—but we shall speak of that later.

Senator Wetmore's friends down in the bottom of the old senatorial district have indulged him to be a candidate

AN "EASY" REVISION

HOW TO LOWER THE TARIFF WITHOUT LEGISLATION.

The Concessions Sought by Germany Would Be Granted Practically Per mod Foreign Producers to Write American Tariff Rates to Suit Themselves.

That tariff revision downward is British contemplated in connection with the pending negotiations with Germany has for several months been a pleasant fact. The end and aim of the German clause has a chance to one's fancy and satisfaction particularly when it is seen to be the direct aim of Germany's competitors, a party with the American market at stake, and of men who are practical enough to know the effects of such concessions. It seems only the American market at stake

Petoskey is greatly excited by a burglary from a curio store extending over two years. Detectives have had to wait nightly, but failed to catch the burglar. Sunday morning the store was found to have been entered again a third time and was put on the trail. The bound tracked the thief through the alley and up into an adjoining building. The man came in to the crowd that had gathered and the hound jumped on him at once, refusing to notice any other person. A warrant was procured and search made for the plunder. The goods stolen aggregate over $1,000.

It would appear that all is not rosy for the extension of the Bay City, Gaylord & Alpena railroad to Alpena this season. It will be remembered that the condition made by Mr. White for the extension of the road was a bonus of $10,000 from that part of the line. Alpena county at a special election voted bonds for this purpose and it was thought the road would go through. Now it is said an injunction has been obtained to prevent any taxes being spread to provide for the bonds voted on the grounds that the bonds were "illegal, and that matters will have to be litigated before the courts. In the meantime the Alpena papers state that White has made no actual move looking to the building of the extension this summer and instead it is current rumor that he has sold or is about to sell the road from Bayne City to connect to the Michigan Central, and color is added to this by a report from Bay City that White was there looking up a by mill and chemical plant at that point from which to manufacture the lumber on their lands east of the divide.—Ex.

ONLY THE NATURAL EFFECT.

Little Wonder That Diner was Somewhat Off Mentally.

The withered man toilled hard from his table at the woman across the little vases of the silk fair table. Hence was heard about these dynamic explosions going on all over the city? "Be ashamed for!" I heard the one Saturday night, she said. "I couldn't help hearing it. 'Well' declared the brightened man, 'don't give it away, but I am the cause of all those explosions.' 'Do tell-a-a-a-a-a-a-a' ahing-and the woman in her compassion, 'did you hear that? Does he mean the bombs around with him, you think?' 'I want to go home!' 'I know that man,' remarked her companion quietly. 'No answer he has answers at least seven more now and then he'll start drinking this Lake Shore line and spring these dinners for two which make.'—N. Y. Press.

Sharp Mister Fox.

About a dozen farmers here in New Ulm, state turned one one Saturday lately, when a man had hired a team was known to have his talk in a bill. He came was finally found out, and after leading the crowd a chase of ten miles he doubled back and his trail was lost sight of. Arrived at the farmhouse, Flanders and dons beat around for two hours and then gave up. When they had departed the fox left the house by a kitchen window. He had entered the house way and concealed himself in a chimney. There was a fireplace but no fire, and no one would have thought of looking for him up there. He was seen off with not when he got out that he was taken for a black fox.

The Boy and the Rats.

In a large warehouse in Liverpool a boy named Richard Scott was employed in the remnants. There were such rats about the place and he was told that if he could catch one and make its tail all the others would leave. A rat was set and a rat was caught but while attempting to tail another it gave a scream the United Image. Those into a pile of straw and started a conflagration that burned four big buildings and inflicted a loss of half a million on them. There are some people here in this world for there are also some smart rats, and it is true as well as true that some rats. If the rat had caught the boy and scored his tail the others would have been right buildings burned.

High Aim for Hen's Brood.

"Two or three days ago," said a farmer near Lamar, "an idle begun to tell me that she heard little chick cack, and that it sounded as if they were on top of the house. I laughed at her and told her that I guessed she was going crazy for this morning she insisted that I get up on top of the house and look. I climbed up on the roof of the house and sure enough there were an old hen and five or five chicks an old rooster cock. She had built her nest in some dry leaves under a projection of the roof. The old hen's plans had been all right but she had failed to figure on getting back to earth.—Kansas City Times.

The Value of Water.

Medically, the internal use of water does more good than its external use. The man who drinks three a pint to a quart of clean pure water the first thing in the morning—getting out of bed will be in better health than the man who uses water only externally and never drinks water straight. The best way to do is to take a clean, water bath then bathe and outdoor every morning, not during the warm weather only but all the year. It will bring about more effectually than all the morphine or other drugs. It will cleanse the system better than any contents of any drug store. A bath tub factory is the natural lot to the medical college and the undertaker.

Foibles of Letter Writers.

The common thought seems to know how you make your letters. If they are dated at all or which of the time ways appeals to an individual's taste or laziness. There are some persons who do not take the trouble to date their letters at all, and the Chinaman is liberal enough to sell they are usually written. Who does not receive letters with signatures that mean the labels for illegibility, perhaps with no address, no date, and the signature that would puzzle an archaeologist and split a theologe into three. But the worst of it is so many people neglect to their illegible signature. It lends an air of distinction to the broken mission.

CHAPTER XVII.

Time was flown full after the Whitsuntide week, and Ormsby was back in London, engaging long canvas than of old in the interests of the international warfare with the world. It act mattered so little now that he fought fortunately. He was quite sure of success, and more satisfactorily and charming than ever, for he had some news to tell Bradley Smithson. The little matter hinged on Hilda, and kept her own secret.

Meanwhile, came striking opinions with a sincerity and a profusion of epithets. This changed for consternation to a delighted smile when Ormsby told him he had bring Hilda to meet him, and with both hands overpowering Ormsby's welcome. "My dear old friend!" cried Olbourke. "Not a word of explanation, I see, in the hour of our trouble, and had to resort to cross-road and take a back air. Hey?"

"Turn up south," said Maxwelyne. "You are a man to be proud of. Not a single power of benefiting your fellow creatures. You are like the bees."

Olbourke laughed friendly, and took stock of his friend with a sigh, for he saw that Maxwelyne was pale, and almost haggard.

"Cheer," he said. "It strikes me that you want food, or rather one hour's well, old fellow."

"Do you think so?" asked Maxwelyne.

"Offer you, I'm going to entertain you."

"Are you?" asked Maxwelyne.

"I am, emphatically, some anniversary and let's the anniversary of Sevastopol Yard."

"Well, I think I'm with you. Ormsby, a glass of ale having been a good deal with Dimmock of late." At any rate I am being exalted. My grange out and consume the rest of the day in mutual explanation."

"Sound business," said Olbourke, with friendly facetiousness. "Accompany across the way, eh?"

"I don't know," replied Maxwelyne. "It matters little, I suppose, but I think it is very unfair not to confer on a young person, friend of mine, Miss Fraser, in the same." "Do not possess a wall to the ale-house." "Well, I don't know," said Olbourke, "Maybe, as Jeffrey Write of Wych, Cousin Hodge." "Well, it be old. And leaves the assumption in your mind." "Well, I don't know." "Hey, I'm engaged a little extending benefits of yours." "Well, I don't know." "Hey, I'm in a whole boat of passion, floundering it and the whole." "Well, I don't know." "Hey, less than his usual approaches, there, and Maxwelyne was thinking of Fraser." "Ye-ness, I know." "Hey, and Fraser." "I'll not see you." "Well, I don't know." "Hey, for two years." "Well, I don't know." "Hey, I'm sorry." "I mean the life out." "This, seems Hodge to be a friend of fa." "Well, I don't know." "Hey, I'm sorry." "Well, I don't know." "Hey, I'm sorry." TAFT'S HIGH HOPES

PRESIDENTIAL PROSPECTS OF THE OHIO MAN.

He is Greatly Admired as Citizen's Jurist and Statesman, But Leading Practitioners Question Whether He is Sufficiently Sound in Their Economic Faith.

Events of an unusual character have conspired to produce into the arena of public discussion the aspirations of Hon. William H. Taft for nomination as the Republican candidate for president of the United States. Quite 14 months prior to the assembling of the national convention Mr. Taft comes out in the open as a seeker after this great distinction. With almost equal openness the declaration is made that he is "the administration candidate."

In a recent issue of the Morning Call of Paterson appears a significant letter from one of the foremost citizens of New Jersey, Col. William Barron, chairman of the executive committee of the American Protective Tariff League, as follows:

New York, April 29, 1907.—To the Editor of the Call: In last Saturday's Call, under the heading, "Taft Boom in the State" you printed an article that would lead the reader to suppose that Secretary Taft was the choice of the Republican party in New Jersey to succeed President Roosevelt.

Having had the privilege of representing the Sixth district at so many national conventions that I say for myself and on behalf of the many friends I have consulting that when the time comes to nominate the next president, who will undoubtedly be selected by the Republican party, the state of New Jersey will cast a solid phalanx for George Wm. Wickersham, not Mr. Taft.

If we are to continue to enjoy the prosperous times to which we are entitled so long as our country is administered with committed corps, the tariff must be let alone, and Mr. Taft must speak out on this great question as McKinley did and Vice President Fairbanks has before visiting our canaries can hope to make many friends for Mr. Taft in the great manufacturing state of New Jersey. Very truly yours,

WILLIAM BARRON.

When Col. Barron thus casts raises the question whether Judge Taft is a cool enough proceedhnlic to command the support of a great manufacturing state like New Jersey, it is an evidence that the time has arrived when the Taft candidacy must be taken seriously. Only a few days previous to the publication of the Barron letter Hon. Theodore E. Burton, representative in Congress from Ohio paid a visit to New Jersey. The object of this visit was clearly revealed in a speech before a New Jersey audience advocating to New Jersey's undivided support of the Taft candidacy. Mr. Col. Barron has a rather larger influence in New Jersey affairs than Congressman Burton can possibly have, and at the moment for plain speaking only quite evident, it seems fairly natural and proper that a protest should be filed against the assumption that New Jersey was engaged to be sold for an Ohio audient. Our Harbor questions whether so doubtful a proceedhnlit as Judge Taft can command the solid support of the New Jersey delegation in next year's Republican national convention. Many appointments have similar doubts as to the delegations from other states. It is believed that even in Ohio Mr. Taft's own state, there are many such misgivings.

This opposition to the Taft candidacy is based upon the feeling of it will weaken the man himself. Far from it. Secretary Taft is warmly admired and greatly admired for his robustly athletic as forter and statesman. He is indeed a most lovable sort of a man, albeit a strong fighter and a hard hitter. He fights in the open and what he says you can depend on. But is he a antecedent?

Taft's strenuous advocacy of free trade in Philippine products coming with the products of American agriculture stamps him as a devoted friend of the semi-serfdom and half-savage Filipino, but it does not make him out a protectionist.

Mr. Taft's persistence in the matter of purchasing in foreign markets supplies and supplies for the construction of the Panama canal was tendency actuated by a desire to enforce strict economy in the canal expenditures, but it was a mistaken economy—the economy of those who urge that the right thing to do is to buy everything in the cheapest market, and that a protective tariff that gives the home market to home production and labor is morally wrong. The congress took issue with Secretary Taft's economic views and ordered him to expend American money in American mills and factories.

Early in the campaign of 1906 Mr. Taft made a speech in Maine in which he pronounced for immediate revision downward of the Dingley tariff. Doubtless he honestly believed it to be true when he said that Republican sentiment demanded tariff revision without delay. But he was mistaken in that belief mistaken in supposing that the sentiment of the Boston brood of tariff clippers was the sentiment of the whole country. He was speaking in Maine, and Maine was then and now is practically a unit against any disturbance of the tariff. To gratuitously but in his individual opinion that tariff revision was the presents need of the hour was under the circumstances, at questionable propriety. It was not what a good protectionist would have done.

That Col. Barron in his letter to the Call has voiced the sentiment view of protectionists we think is beyond question. His rank in the world of industry finance and business is perhaps with his official rank in command the American Protective Tariff League and his many years of conspicuous identification with Republican politics in New Jersey combine to give his declaration more than ordinary significance. It is well that Secretary Taft's cards and friends over at of his presidential aspirations should be not by an equally early and frank avowal that if he is to stand well with protectionists he must declare himself a protectionist in terms of unmistakable certainty. The next president of the Republican party for president of the United States is going to be a protectionist. Unless the statements among the line of conversations and relaxations all point that way. A colonial back to sane and consistent protectionism is certain to occur, and it will be done in 1908.

WHOLE IDEA IS WRONG.

State Department Eyes in Effort to Revise Tariff.

When even Democratic newspapers impeach treasonous across the Rubicon, which separates the respective powers and functions of the legislative and executive branches of our government, the situation takes on a serious aspect. The new York American has no love for the protective tariff system but it gravely questions whether that system can or ought to be changed by an edict of the secretary of state without the consentment of congress. In a well considered and able written editorial in the American of May 2 the conclusion is reached that

This suspend of dealing with a matter of national importance is serious and dangerous. It threatens disturbance to our whole foreign trade.

This presupposes the truth of the reports that in the new dicker with Germany the rights and interests of the hungry tariff law have been subverted to an extent that will revolutionize customs methods of appraisement and collection. Unfortunately the supposition turns out to be correct. Our gifted state department has for the time being taken over the authority to revise the tariff schedules downward.

A THREATENING TROPICAL CYCLONE.

A Serious Question.

Referring to the proposed transfer of the tariff making prerogative from the United States congress to the cabinet and an unprecedented exercise of fortunate, the Bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association remarks: "If the reader will consider the tendencies made to Germany with the bonanza made by the correspondent of the American Economist he will see that our government has actually yielded to the German demand that on the true value of German exports to this country, but the value placed upon them by the exporters is to be made to our customs officials in assessing duties. When did congress give to the president the authority to set aside and absolutely nullify the clear provisions of our tariff schedules?"

The practical repeal of the customs administrative provisions of the Dingley law is accomplished if the reported concessions are carried out. Congress has explicitly laid down certain rules for the ascertainment of the values of imports. If the state department set aside these rules so that German exporters and the United States appraising officials may determine such values as are the power and authority of congress in effect usurped? It is some time possible that this question will be brought up in congress.

Have Kept Things Steady.

"This is no time for stand-patters." The foregoing is one of the recent declarations of George F. Hummer, the Democratic candidate for congress in the Fifth district. This sarcastic reference to Republicans who do not favor repeal of the Dingley bill or any drastic tariff changes, is based on a misunderstanding of facts. These years have been the best this country has ever known. That it owe to be been for the position held by the so-called "stand-patters" the changes and experiments proposed six or eight years ago would have been entered upon. There are few Americans who are not aware that these demands for changes were resisted and prevented. Those who now are asking for changes in duties and conditions are those who did their best to prevent present policies and present conditions.—Houghton (Mich.) Gazette.

Thought Cows Chewed Gum.

Nat was a little city boy on his first visit to the country. While in the country he saw the cows chewing their cuds. Not understanding it, he said: "Uncle, do you have to buy gum for all those cows?"

EVERY FARMER PROTECTED.

Should Dread Competition of Foreign Labor Products.

The editor of an Indian territory paper asked one how the tariff protects the farmer. He is very probably honest in his question though he is setting charity to somewhat of a strain when he declares "that a farmer, can be a Republican is one of the curiosities of the political situation."

Thus a farmer who votes 24 secondance with his own sacrificial class interests can be satisfying but a Republican would be will more exclusive Democrats. Of farmers, who are democrats and etc., only an, but we venture the assertion that their political creed is not based upon a careful study of their own interests. They are democrats for other reasons.

It is argued that the prices of nearly all the necessities he buys are protected at the average rate of 60 per cent, while the prices of the commodities he produces are made in competition with the world.

There is argument that way are not facts. But in our opinion they are most egregiously mistaken. If the farmers who are directly protected by the tariff against Mexican cattle, or who are directly protected against Canadian wheat, should suddenly find the laws let down, those farmers at least would soon see where they are protected, but this is only a very small degree of the protection which the farmer receives.

The greatest degree of protection is that which he receives indirectly. The tariff provides him with a market for his products at home by putting, again into the pockets of workingmen and by enabling the vast and varied commercial enterprises of the country to flourish. It is plain that to say that Liverpool fixes the price of the farmer's wheat is a very superficial and must not be forgotten that the farmer more than any other producer is the victim of the speculative market, with which the tariff has nothing whatsoever to do, and which feels the direct and substantial influence, which is felt indirectly, of the tariff. Perishable crops, the price which the farmer receives for his product is determined mainly by supply and demand. The supply may be limited by poor crops and the demand may be increased by prosperous times. Conversely the supply may be abundant and the demand may be in times of commercial depression.

As a producer of hard times nothing has ever been so successfully tried in this country as a substantial reduction in the tariff. When the factories are idle and commercial industries languish the farmer finds his most profitable and extensive market cut off. The answer how which the agricultural interests could sustain would be the unanswerable argument at all approaching free trade.

In protecting industries which produce his products the farmer takes protection protects every farmer in the land. The farmer's real competitor is not the grower of wheat in Canada or Siberia or Argentina. The real competitor of cattle and hogs is Mexico or South America. It is the farmer's market across the sea, whose products are excluded by tariffs that keep American factories running and furnish American workingmen and allied consumers with the means of buying what the farmer has to sell.—Kansas City Journal.

The One Thing Certain.

If we can be browbeaten by Germany, which is conceded, and probably we can be intimidated by France, what is to prevent six or seven other foreign countries from following this clear lead of their German and French neighbors? And what becomes of our sacred schedules? If their elasticity can be stretched at will.—Wall Street Journal.

The answer is obvious. The schedules are knocked out of commission. When the foreign exporter is permitted to consign goods to the American market at his own price, the American producer can never be certain what he can realize for his product, or whether he has any tariff protection at all. The only certain thing is that the domestic wage payer and wage earner is going to get the worst of it.

The Dry Important Fact.

The fact of more importance than statistical or discussions with tariff discussions and industrial subjects, so far as this country is concerned, is that 90 per cent of all the goods made in American mills and factories and produced on American farms is sold direct to home consumers. It is the splendid home market which deserves first and most consideration in all discussions in any way related to it. Only five per cent of the products of our country is sold to consumers elsewhere. Full realization of this fact will prevent repetition of some absurd statements which have been made and seem even now to be current among men who have in recent years been accounted—Houghton (Mich.) Gazette.

Congress Not Consulted.

So far as it goes, it is full-fledged reciprocity. Germany admits agricultural products and certain chemicals and machinery at the low duty maximum rates; in return the president agrees to raise his revenue hand against the three-quarter Dingley schedules and let in at cut rates certain products of the German "bon" or "ersatz" Germany.—N. Y. Evening World.

It is a fallacy much more common than any which has ever been submitted to congress for its approval, for it proposes to admit at cut prices not certain products, but all products of low priced German labor. No wonder congress was not consulted. Congress would have turned it down instantly.

Didn't Work.

"I wonder why he was remarked one of the two men who had just finished dinner to speed to the waiter, "that they always have pretty cashiers at these restaurants?" But the pretty cashier, though she blushed and smiled, did not fail to detect the Canadian quarter he threw down in payment of his check.

INCREASING LENGTH OF LIFE.

What Medical Science Has Done for the Human Race.

Reviewing the progress of medicine during the nineteenth century, Dr. John S. Billings, United States army, has shown that deaths of women from childbirth decreased during that period from 10 to 20 in 1,000 to 5 in 1,000 and that from all causes the deaths in New York city fell from 34 in 1,000 to 19 in 1,000 in two decades. He reveals the fact that 100 years ago yellow fever was epidemic in New York and Philadelphia for two years. For 20 years the disease has been almost unknown throughout the whole country. Also that in 1810 the majority of persons who died were pitted with smallpox—the survivors of a much greater number who now have on their faces pockmarks and the limbs of a case of small pox. Also that in the Napoleonic and revolutionary wars more died from disease than from wounds while now hospital gangrene is unknown. Statistics show that in Chicago during the last 35 years the average age at death has increased from 12 to 22 years.

No one disputes these facts or attributes them to any cause other than medical science—the measures employed partly in curing disease, but more especially in preventing its introduction or its spread when once introduced.

JOKE THAT TWO COULD PLAY.

Farmer Evened Up Accounts with Young Wanderer with Wit.

Young Stevens was on his way south to spend the week end with his parents and left to a considerable period. The journey was to be was traveling incognito as a small citizen. As a boy he was accustomed to go and down the railroad came upon a farmer who was plowing and asked in the south if he knew that the lake of twenty-mile was on the south boundary of the farm. The farmer turned and said: "Not by a—sight. Think he was accounted somewhere 'bout 17 miles west. If you know that lake, why don't you go there?" "Well, I guess I've seen enough of it for one day," was the young Stevens lying his head off.—Judge's Library.

The Difference.

"Yes, I have heard of him. Owen everybody gets drunk and some wound up behind the streets. He's a worthless rye and has a fingerless for selling electric beginning that was to beach this one? If you have and me off. Once there was a young man who was a worthless rye and has a dead brar sold—" "Oh, my! You are thinking of John D. Rockefeller." "No, John G. Drives his customers into bankruptcy, runs over people with his horseless carriages, and makes—" "Oh, I know all about John G. Drives his customers into bankruptcy, runs over people with his horseless carriages, and makes—" "Ah, I see—I mean I should make such a mistake—well, I know man-about-town." Puck.

The Camera Fiend's Wanderlust.

As we gaze with wonder into the heavens and the astral values of his life to-morrow, therefore the sides of the magazine Amateur Photographer, which is devoted to one theme the fervor of the enthusiasts. Pose the high shelf down among the camera. The amateur photographer is a wanderer across the green fields looking for novel scenes and objects. He has the value of our wandering has naught to do with the back on the city with his kin. The primitive instinct for chase, the ancestral wanderlust, is in this has arisen as and driven to cities, to factories.—Puck.

Costs to Keep Umbrellas.

"That old umbrella joke about one's having to keep one and buy an umbrella for two days" remarked the careful man. "I received my umbrella back from the repair man with a bill for $2.50 for mending it and taking it to a new ferrule. The repairing alone cost me $1.00. For that it four years now and in that time it has been positioned twice as that it stands me in nearly double the original cost. Let then I suppose that to the price I have to pay for my vanity in being able to keep one umbrella for so long."

Mind.

Alfred Woodruff, a six-year-old lad in the Ki Rosa public schools, was asked by "teacher" to write an essay on mind, and here is what his mind produced: "You must mind your mother or you will get a thrashin. Then you will go Sunday school and be good. Some mothers lick you for coming off. Some mothers lick you for going to town. Some mothers lick you for going a swimming. If you will mind you will never get licked."—Kansas City Journal.

A High Regard.

"I suppose you take a certain admiration and reverence for our government." said the sarcastic citizen. "Undoubtedly," answered Mr. Dustin Blax. "Our government has trained some of the most efficient men that we capitalists have in our employ."—Pittsburgh Sun.

Her Choice in Life.

Little Clara, aged five, announced in an emphatic manner that she never was going to get married. Her mother asked for her reasons, and quickly questioned: "Because I'm going to be a waiter."

New York's Humanitarianism.

New York city has seven surgical hospitals, hospitals and organizations for relief of sick and suffering the number other city in the world.

TALES OF HORROR

FROM THE NORTH CAROLINA HILL COUNTRY.

Diseased Mind of Fratricide Wove for Himself a Fertid Punishment—Sitting for Hours with Silent Ghost.

A man named Stanton of Cherokee county in the mountains of North Carolina is five years ago in some disorder legal affairs has been interrupted and disturbed by the publication of the law. It was known soon to the locality of which he had died and from his grey mind wove for himself a fitting punishment. The story has not survived as a tale of horror, but it takes a back seat when Stanton first told it to his friends. Among the people of the county from the annual reports of the Insurance Commissioner. Stanton was a Swede but that Stanton had become land little by little until at last was well and about as old as Lochinvar. Believed in the Lodge, character of the Stanton family was of the strictest honest. His employments was offensive and no one ever saw him drink, nightly among the silent plodding of the hair and the departure were so regular that on a time certain and unmistakable happening and part of the family was regular in and out. Stanton died recently after having lived himself with his family. Immediate bared lead to be collected in a test through moonshine. Stanton, "the Modesty Man," said that local newspapers recall his story.

It was another moonshiner, Uriah many miles from Stanton and he moved by any practice of family of Swedish Finns who had the moonshine and fat, and about to a mountainous pass and. The moonshiner was seen traveling had passed as a small citizen. As a boy he was accustomed to go and down the railroad came upon a farmer who was plowing and asked in the south if he knew that the lake of twenty-mile was on the south boundary of the farm. The farmer turned and said: "Not by a—sight. Think he was accounted somewhere 'bout 17 miles west. If you know that lake, why don't you go there?" "Well, I guess I've seen enough of it for one day," was the young Stevens lying his head off.—Judge's Library.

Where Fielding Is Buried.

The "Island of the Blessed" is the two hundredth anniversary of Henry Fielding's death, and the following sent the curious of Lisbon, Portugal, where the novelist died and is buried, to the trouble of finding the place. Fielding's "Voyage to Lisbon" is the only book that ever made me laugh. Longer Portuguese graves may be found outside." Currently he proved. In the "Grave to be Found." The "Island of the Blessed" is the name given to the cemetery of Lisbon, Portugal, where the novelist died and is buried.

Travel of a Pennsylvania Teacher.

Miss Walter, one of ex-Sheriff Miss Walter of Center county, who has Penn, graduated from the Bellefonte high school, just completed her first term of school in Ferguson township. Her salary was $45 a month. She walked to and from her home in Bellefonte, a distance of two miles from her home, and boarded herself. Her expenses were offset and are about $10 a month. She is highly esteemed by the district officers of the county and is a strong candidate for the next term. Her salary was increased to $50 a month. You note only the fact that she

The Grade Examination.

Editor of Sentinel:

I am a little late with the report of the Eighth Grade examination but if you care to publish it, would be glad to have you do so.

The result of the grade examination has been looked forward to for some time and a good many of our young people have been wondering why they did not better their fate some time ago.

I wish to state that the task of correcting one hundred twenty five sets of answers to the lists of questions that were used in the eighth grade examination this year was no small one and coming as it did right in the midst of a very busy season for the examiners, it is but natural that the report should be somewhat delayed.

We wish, before commenting on the result of the examination, to state to the public that the grade examination is no simple affair but that it is a searching test, embodying a thorough and practical application of the practices taught in the first eight grades of the graded schools of the state and there is no doubt in the mind of the writer but that the boy or girl who earned an average of 80 per cent either on this test will be able to take up the high school course and do the work well.

While we are sorry that we could not issue diplomas to all who wrote the examination, we are glad to note that the number passing this year was greater than that of last. We found many good papers written by students to whom we could not issue diplomas on account of their being weak in some one or two particular branches and we hope that instead of being discouraged, those who have not passed will make a more determined effort to complete the work well next year.

This is what we might call a "Hurry Up" age and we are expecting and are getting great things from our teaching force. I wish to call attention to one or two things which a study of the result of the examination will show.

A comparison of standings will show that those of the applicants who attend the rural schools were better able to handle the more difficult problems than were the students in our village schools.

A comparison of ages will show that those from the rural schools will average older than the students of our village schools.

This with other similar comparisons which I will not take time to mention leads me to believe that we may sometimes expect too much of a boy or girl who is twelve or thirteen years old and we also may expect too much of our teachers. Mind development is a process that we can aid to some extent but in my judgment, ought not to hurry until the danger line is reached. The physical trainer may show a boy not the proper motions to make in order to throw a weight a distance of 40 feet, but if the boy's muscle is not sufficiently developed, the weight will fall short. So in mind, the teacher may make a very clear explanation of a principle, but if the student's mind is not sufficiently developed to grasp it, the explanation will go for naught.

In such cases, we sometimes say that the teaching is but good and we sometimes say that the pupil is dull when in truth we are wrong in saying either thing and the trouble lies in the fact that the mind of the pupil not sufficiently developed and the same principle with the same explanation would be perfectly clear to him a year later.

I will not make further comment but will say that to me it seems that many boys and girls and teachers as well have been discouraged because of the condition that I have mentioned.

Eighth grade diplomas were issued to the following pupils.

Mosie Cohen, Lola D. Sherman, Fabian LaLonde, Arachel Lorraine, Lucile Crawford, Gladys Hudkins, Eugene Carter, Teresa Connaughan, Margaret Gibson, Jennie Waterman, Reggie Johnston, Marcia Herns, Alice Madill, Chas. Zinks, Sophia Gaggione, Esther Monroe, Andie DeLaney, Angus Sheppard, Ruth Murner, Lenore Allers, Harold B. McCann, Marjorie Merrill, Carrie Johnston, Anna Nassen, Irwin Murphy, Kenneth Inman, Lawrence Inman, Mary Kaydon, Mary Dow, Mona Hilton, May Gallagher, Glenn Sherk, Gleer Mapes, Ruth Colden.

Long Live The King!

is the popular cry throughout European countries; while in America, the cry of the present day is "Long live Dr. King's New Discovery, King of Throat and Lung Remedies" of which Mrs. Julia Ryder Paine, Truro, Mass., says: "It never fails to give immediate relief and to quickly cure a cough or cold." Mrs. Paine's opinion is shared by a majority of the inhabitants of this country. New Discovery cures weak lungs and sore throats after all other remedies have failed; and for coughs and colds it is the only sure cure. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist. 50c and $1.00. NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

It has been announced that the resort and play of "Hiawatha" at Wayagaming near Petoskey, will be opened to the public on July 15.

The Michigan Maple Syrup Co. of Kalkaska, has received from the National Grocer Co. of Chicago, an order for $1,000 worth of syrup. The order calls for 2,000 cases, ten barrels and 75 gallon cans. This company also has the contract for furnishing all the principal jobbing house of Michigan. The capacity of the plant is about 50 cases per day, and it is now running full force.

Traverse City Eagle: The Kelley Lumber & Shingle Co. of East Bay have just about completed picking up the logs in the vicinity of Acme and along that shore and will now begin operations at North Fox Island. The logs will be towed from there the same as they have from nearer by and will be quite a feat as there are a good many logs to come from the island in this way. John Hennie, who was charge of the lumbering for the company, will have supervision of this work.

Petoskey News: W. W. Johnson, of the firm of Johnson & Crowl, met death almost instantly this morning about 10 o'clock, at the Bay View crossing, by being thrown from his automobile on the track in front of the Harbor springs train. Mr. Johnson was speeding his machine along the Bay View road and reached the crossing just ahead of the train. The flagman signalled for him to stop, but he was deaf to, and scaling his wheel and making a dash to pass diagonally across the tracks, hoping to outrun the train. His machine is a high runabout and when it struck the rails it bounded so he was unable to keep his seat and was thrown out, the train passing over him, cutting off both legs below the knees. His head struck on a rail and was bruised on the back side. He lived a minute or two. The automobile sped across the track into the park and was unhurt.

This is the way he did it. Dere was two, one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight nine, ten, eleven, an blowed.

Government Trains Housekeepers.

Housekeeping somehow has been given official recognition in the Hawaiian government. In the establishment of domestic training schools. The curriculum includes the practical economics and cleanliness of dwellings, hygiene, family work, cutting, fitting, making and repairing of ordinary garments, cooking, and in the rural districts, gardening, dairy work and the care of poultry. In addition there are lectures on Hygiene, domestic economy, care of children and nursing of the sick. There are both elementary schools and those for advanced pupils. The three teach housekeeping, laundry, embroidery, flower making and so on.

Before Breakfast.

Shall we walk before breakfast, Americans? Shall this strong, virile, "go-for-breakfast" Forget it. Dr. Lahmann says: "We are to take a drought and stimulations from yesterday's food not from today's. I have walking every hundred miles without drink fast. In fact all the walking I have done in the last forty years has been without breakfast—for I never take it." George Sand used to walk in the daytime and write at night. Heine was used to say that a tremulous stimulation was the best preparation for his fairy literary work. Daniel Webster and George Washington were great walkers.

—F. P. Gelken and wife, of Petoskey were here over Sunday.

—The tug Elliot, of St. James, hauled out at Washburn's yard for repairs.

—Hubert Bridge, of Fremont, Neb., is the guest of his brother, A. E. Bridge, of Dixon avenue.

—H. M. Patterson of Chicago, may become a summer visitor of Charlevoix. He is looking up a cottage.

—Miss Minnie Goldman, of St. Louis is here for the summer at the home of her mother, Mrs. Levinson.

—From Friday July 19 to 22, is the date when J. Leahy the optician will again be at the Hotel Bartlett, glasses guaranteed to fit.

—Supervising Inspector General Uhler, of the steamboat inspection service, was in town the latter part of the week, as a Manitou passenger.

—East Jordan Enterprise: Mrs. John Thomas this week presented the Enterprise a most beautiful bouquet of roses and other fragrant flowers from her flower garden.

—Miss Elizabeth Putnam, daughter of Hev. H. A. Putnam, of this city, has been tendered the position of music teacher in the Saginaw high school, and has accepted.

—A. T. Brooking, assistant U. S. Engineer, was here last week and made a survey of the harbor. Mr. Brooking reports a minimum depth of nineteen feet from Lake Michigan to Pine Lake.

—Some one tells us that bill means of Boyne Falls, is posing as a candidate for member of the State circuit national convention. Good. It was about time to hear something from that direction.

—It is reported that the Northern Michigan Transportation Co. contemplates buying or building another passenger boat. The Illinois is charter ed but for three months, and may come back to us in the fall.

—Prof. H. J. Cox, in charge of the U. S. Weather Bureau at Chicago, which includes all of Lake Michigan arrived here today on his annual inspection trip. On Friday he goes to St. James to inspect that station.

—Capt. Uberroth, who was connected with this station of the revenue cutter service as lieutenant on the cutter Morrill under Capt. Davis, has been appointed to the command of the cutter Tuscarora, succeeding Capt. Thomas D. Walker, who will retire from active service shortly. Capt. Uberroth is a comparatively young man in the service and has had a wide experience on the lakes. Capt. Walker will be 64 years old in August. He will retire on half pay and intends to spend the remainder of his life quietly with his son in New York city. He has had a distinguished career on the waters of the United States. In the Civil war he served in the bays and was in the thickest of the fight during nearly the entire War of the Rebellion.

The fire alarm bell was successfully raised to the water tower tank yesterday, and Mr. Martindale is now engaged in adjusting the necessary automatic electric finger.

—About all the common council did Monday night was to accept the Fort Huron road rolles. The machine is in charge of Isaac T. Ward, and has done excellent work on the streets.

—The Wexford county man who refused bite for 5,000 bushels of potatoes he was holding to hit the top of the market with finally marketed them at 20c. He waited not wisely but too biased being Kalkaska Leader.

—The state is sending to the tourist officers of the various counties copies of a newly enacted compulsory education law which has been slightly changed by the recent legislature. The age limit is now fixed at seven to sixteen years, although children of five years may be sent. Hereafter it will be necessary for the commissioner to notify the sheriff and he in turn will notify the truant officer being specified directly by the commissioner. By the new law the county officer has authority to act in city and villages where no regularly appointed officer has been named. The salary has been boosted from $200 to $300 per day, and actual expenses. The law takes immediate effect and it will be necessary for all city and village truant officers to file a bond of $500.

The plans for the new Leelanau county poor house, which is to be located at Maple City, have been approved by the committee and in about two weeks the plans will be ready for the contractors to make their bids from. The building is to be of brick and will have 21 rooms on the first and second floors and arrangements will be made for future rooms on the third floor.

Williamsburg cor. Traverse City Record. An effort is to be made some time in the not too distant future to get a new industry for this village. The enterprise will be a creamery. Now cream is shipped from here to Charlevoix and at a profit. That being the case it is the opinion of those interested that a still greater profit could be enjoyed if there were no freight charges to be taken out of the receipts. More and more of the farmers about here are keeping dairy cows. A creamery is now established, the only uncertain factor in the case being the time.

—Sheriff Brown, of Lelanau county was in town Saturday.

—Tom Chalmpin, of Portland, Oregon, is here for a few weeks visit with relatives.

—Prosecuting Attorney Clark and Sheriff McWalk went to Beaver Island Tuesday on official business.

—Dr. J. A. Carlstedt, of Chicago, arrived Saturday, and proceeded to the Jordan river for a season of trout fishing.

—The Misses Anna and Mildred Dahlman arrived from Dunkirk, New York, Tuesday, and will spend the summer here.

—John O'Neill, who has been laid up two months with a broken leg, is rapidly gaining, and expects to be about town this week.

—The Sun Bros. Circus is billed here for July 31st. This is not the biggest show on earth, but it has the reputation of being one of the best and cleanest on the road.

—Don't suffer from headache or poorly fitted glasses when you can find a remedy by consulting J. Leahy the optician at Hotel Bartlett July 19 to 22 as he comes prepared to fit any eyes that can be fitted.

—The M. E. Ladies will hold a sale of first class, home made, baked goods in the building on Bridge St. recently occupied by Mrs. Atchinson, Saturday afternoon, July 20. A supply of ready made aprons will also be for sale.

—The U. S. lighthouse tender Dahlia arrived in port Saturday and remained over Sunday. Capt. Tawse, who has commanded the Dahlia the past three years, resigned about a month ago and returned to salt water. Capt. Olsen who has been first mate of the Dahlia for many years, is now in command.

—The remains of the late William Stevens arrived here Sunday morning in charge of Eugene Backus, an employe of the Stevens Bedford Lumber Co., at Boyne City, N. C. The casket was placed in the vault awaiting the arrival of the family, who are detained by the illness of one of the children. It is expected that funeral services will be held here later. Mr. Stevens was 41 but eight days.

—About seventy five members of the Boyne City board of trade, accompanied by a delegation from Boyne Falls, came down on the steamer Cummings yesterday afternoon and took supper at the Eaton. They were taken about town by our board of trade officials. They also took in the Jordan on the trip. The excellent Boyne City band accompanied the party, and gave us some fine music on the street.

—A new wrinkle put out by some of the big seed houses this year has been what is called a "seeded string." This is nothing more or less than a tissue paper filled with strings of different garden plants. In place of planting seeds by guess out of the hand one can just lay a string of lettuce or radishes in the furrow and cover in less time than it takes to tell. The row can be kept straight in this manner and cultivation made easier, it is said.

—A rare treat is offered to the people of Charlevoix in the concerts to be given in this city the 27th and the 28th inst. by the Fisk Jubilee Quartette of Nashville, Tenn. This is acknowledged to be the best colored quartette in America. They are cultivated musicians and furnish an entertainment of a high order. This quartette has been singing together for a time sufficiently long for their voices to know each other. The members have been assembled with a view to quality and range of voice, as well as adaptability to the peculiar kind of music which, in the main, they sing. Fisk makes a specialty of collecting and preserving Negro folk songs as they are more widely know, Plantation Melodies. This quartette has a thorough knowledge of these melodies, and its repertoire is very large. While by far, the larger part of their program is composed of these Plantation Melodies, still there may be found some selections of a classical nature. Each member of the quartette has received instruction in voice culture from Miss Jennie A. Robinson, who has done so much for the music at Fisk, as the head of the Department. A very interesting feature of the concert program is the Dialect Readings, of Mr. J. A. Myers. The readings are taken from the works of Paul Laurence Dunbar, and Mr. Myers has the reputation of being the very best of all Mr. Dunbar's interpreters.

FISH CARS

Tons of Finny Captives Are Transported Alive Daily to Principal Markets of the Country.

Now fish have rare—great moving aquariums. Alive and swimming, they travel to the big cities in aqua-car comfort and by millions.

While special accommodations for the travels of men, and of cattle, horses, hogs and poultry have been contrived, it has not been suspected that the fish of the inland lakes and rivers would expect to travel alive. These were, of course, spread on refrigerator cars for fish that were not alive to take them to market chilled with ice. Now cars are daily sent to the big cities, carrying fancy New York fish full of fish just as lively as before they left their native waters.

The summer home of these cars are from Lake Erie to New York, later they will visit Wisconsin points, during the "open season" of fall and winter, they will go to Maine and tons of live fish from Illinois rivers go a car load a day.

This is largely to supply the Hebrew trade, and the Hebrews meaning the trade of orthodox Jews and other who per prefer live fish and those that neither eaters with scales. At first live fish were shipped in cases, but Chicago brains devised the fish car, and this year most of the live fish travel in live new accommodations.

Each "fish car" is equipped with an aerating apparatus which pumps oxygen into the water of the big tanks, for without this the finny travelers could not live long. The normal amount of aeration would not be enough. Carloads amount to a dozen or more pounds of fish, which relates that the water in the tanks swarms with the travelers. An attendant travels with each car to see that the wandering excursion gets oxygen regularly.

At one haul from the Illinois River 250,000 pounds of carp were caught. Now these carp are in demand, and the Illinois River is the only place in the country where they are caught in large. New York and Chicago fish wholesalers, of whom there are dozens in the United States, are active bidders for the catch.

The shipments of live fish for this year run into big totals, but the total fish catch of all waters of the United States is approximately 1,000,000,000 pounds each year, of which no one dealer will handle over 6 per cent. "Kosher fishing" is in fact the small item in the great fishing industry, that industry on this continent employs 150,000 men, and consumptively supports more than 1,000,000 people. However, the rapid disintegration of orthodox Jews in the United States has greatly increased the demand, particularly in New York City, for live fish. The increase of these people has rapidly changed the character of New York's population, for some of the immigrants have stayed there. The Jew and the "kosher fish" indicate a rattle of coin in a city where the orthodox Jew in New York is compared with Chicago.

The supply of live fish for Chicago is chiefly secured off the lake front, where a minimum of the commercial fishing industry of the great lakes is carried on. Perch are caught in great numbers, but even 100,000 pounds of perch in a day, a record made last year, is but a trifle compared with the great lakes "catch" of a year.

Lake Erie alone supplies annually fully 75,000,000 pounds of fish, and the total this year will be increased notwithstanding the theories of scientists that the fishing would diminish the supply. The Canadian lakes and other waters furnish annually 200,000,000 pounds of fish.

The annual total of American and Canadian fish marketed is therefore 1,000,000,000 pounds. It is worth of note that, because the big city is so vast, so open to all men and therefore from so many sources, a record decrease in a United States or Great Power held that the country never will be burdened with a fish monopoly, no matter how many other "trusts" and combines" may come into being.

The Boyne City Journal: Co. has purchased three large Edison phonographs and one hundred fifty records for their camps.

Not Eligible.

Attorney General Bird, in response to numerous requests has written an opinion in which he holds that members of the legislature may not act as delegates in the coming state constitutional convention.

He shows that not only are the duties of the two positions incompatible, but that under the decisions of the courts of Michigan and other states there is a direct constitutional inhibition thwarting the purpose of members of the legislature to secure their election.

It is likely that the secretary of state will refuse to certify the names of members of the legislature as candidates for nomination. This will be distressing because a large number of members had their election in view when they framed the law providing for the convention.

This rules out our friend Senator Wetmore, of Cadillac.

The Next County Fair.

At a joint meeting of the Executive and Speed Committee of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society held at East Jordan, July 11, the following race program was decided upon for the twenty third annual Fair which will be held at East Jordan, Sept. 24, 25 and 26, 1907.

Monday and Tuesday 2:30 Pace.

2:30 Class Trot or Pace	$100.00
2:25 Class Trotting or Pacing	100.00
Running Horse	50.00

Wednesday 2:30 Class.

2:30 Class Trot or Pace	$100.00
2:20 Class Trotting or Pacing	100.00
Running Horse	50.00

It was decided to enlarge the Grand Stand and also to take action on several matter looking to the comfort and entertainment of the public.

For the Constitutional Convention.

When the SENTINEL endorsed the candidacy of Senator Wetmore for the constitutional convention we had not learned that Charlevoix county had a candidate, but the situation is not changed in this respect for there are three delegates to be elected from this senatorial district. We are still for Wetmore for one of the three. But—

The primary petitions for L. E. Knowles, of Boyne City, are in circulation, and more than the required number of names are already signed. We cordially endorse the candidacy of Mr. Knowles. He is a young man of more than ordinary legal attainments and level headed judgment, and of unimpeachable personal character

The lawyers will revere the constitution anyway, because lawyers get jurisdictional in the convention without doubt. Mr. Knowles has more this support in the courts as a business and industrious attorney, and we know of no member of the Charlevoix county bar who is more worthy to represent this part of the district.

One of the largest recent timber land deals was closed July 1. It consisted of the purchase of 22,000 acres of timber at the head of the Nelson river at a consideration of about $1,000,000 by William H. White, of Boyne City and associates from Wheeler & Cook, of Portland, Oregon, who bought it less than three years ago from J. E. Hoch. The tract lies not more than twenty miles from Portland on the tributaries of Nelson known as Wilson and Trask rivers. As the new owners have timber and intend to operate for some years in Michigan it is likely that the timber is bought for investment purposes.

Traverse City Record: A number of the property owners on Washington street between the railroad and Barlow street are very favorably disposed to substitute pavement instead of macadam or tar macadam as originally petitioned for. A petition is now being circulated and has a large number of signers among the larger property owners to pave with the bituulithic pavement as much lesser than any other kind. The cost of the bituulithic pavement of course, is more than either macadam or tar macadam but its durability is unquestioned. State street which has been laid two years is in prime condition, and shows no signs of wear whatever. In fact, the street today is in better condition than it was when it was laid and is giving splendid satisfaction.

B. W. MILLER,

THE GIRL WITH A MILLION

By D. C. Murray

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

"It will do instead," he mutered. "What of the girl? You would pass a fine to have her. She knows everything. If it be indictable conspiracy, she is implicated."

He mutered his plans and more to a dozen "understanding." There was a certain amount of reluctance from some of the men, and it was plain that the chief in the London was not without some misgivings as to the wisdom of the enterprise.

"My dear Mackenzie, night thieves is not an occupation so far as I know, and I don't like it, but I'm with you, and I'm sure the others will do their duty."

Mr. Mackenzie, with Hector, a man as formidable as a bull mastiff, and Mr. Sparrow, a little, active, wiry man, who looked like a terrier, and with a dozen others, left the London. The rest, either on the spot or within call, were to be summoned by an "understanding" to the rendezvous.

BIGGEST QUESTION

IS THAT OF EMPLOYMENT AND WAGE EARNING.

A Political Party Takes Upon Itself Grave Responsibility When It Encourages Foreign Competition.

The question of employment and wages is the chief issue involved in the new departure of the administration in the matter of granting special tariff concessions to foreign countries which raise their tariff rates against American exports as a club whereby to compel a reduction of the American tariff. It is the one big question, big as compared with other questions combined. It is a question as big as to seriously upset all political parts that makes a mistake in the treatment of it. That party will go down to swift defeat whose policy relates the national income of importing our domestic trade infinitely in attempting to enlarge our foreign trade relations.

Ninety-five per cent. of our manufacturing trade is in our own country and between the people of our own country. Eighty-five millions of people—10,000,000 voters among them—are totally concerned in this 95 per cent. of trade.

Little liberties with the 95 per cent. of domestic trade and trying experiments for the benefit of the being the five per cent. of foreign trade have so often proved disastrous to the political party concerned in them that what not to do" would seem perfectly obvious to this time.

Long before election day in 1888 it was found the practical effects of the new policy of surrender to foreign trade threats will have become visible in the new policy will result in increase the influx of competitive commodities as it will not. If it does not we shall have simply handed the foreign manufacturers a club whereby we can at will compel them to come down again to where they were before in return for not tariff concessions on our part.

But if the new policy of tariff surrender shall work out as the foreign will expect it to work, it largely to increased importations of competitive goods come into our market and diminished equivalent quantities of domestic goods producing therein, diminishing the opportunities of employment of capital and labor in our industries and the domestic wages which they pay.

The answer to this question is suggested in a letter addressed to the president of the United States by a prominent American manufacturer and a large employer of American labor. Under date of May 6, 1897, Mr. Hugh Chisholm, of Philadelphia, wrote President Roosevelt, stating that the proposed commercial agreement between the United States and the Germany empire be not consummated. In this letter Mr. Chisholm brings to the high interest of all questions, Armed employment and wages, as follows:

"It is a serious question, much in my mind, and question which the present administration has ever had to deal with.

Where the Danger Lies.

The danger lies in making a hodge-podge of special tariff concessions, one with country. If tariff concessions, other through lower valuations by the United States appraisers or by a lower tariff, are to be made at all, they should be granted to every country which grants the United States the "most favored nation" clause, and against every country that seeks to discriminate against the United States this country is abundantly able to protect itself. Our exports are largely of foodstuffs, and these are necessities which other nations need. If they want them let them make such tariff laws as will admit them. If they don't there's no need of ill feeling over the matter. Foodstuffs are staples, and their market is wide.—Zanesville Courier.

If She Had Her Choice.

Both senators and every representative Massachusetts has in congress know that congress is not going to enter free raw material for Massachusetts wooleens. Roger Q. Mills promised Massachusetts that in 1890, and that very year Massachusetts sent more Democrats than Republicans to the fifty-second congress. If Massachusetts had her choice it is quite likely that she would "sacrifice the Wilson tariff, for the Dingley. Certainly she would do so with free coal and free iron ore added.—Washington Post.

Before the Telegraph.

When the Indian mutiny broke out in 1857, it is related that the order to revolt was carried in the form of an unlearned cake, or chupatti. Swift running camels have always been used in the east to carry dispatches, while Lesson fires still remain a vehicle for conveying intelligence.

Folly of Impatience.

Chinese proverb: A little impatience ruins very great undertakings.

CHANCE TO SETTLE QUESTION.

Free Trade Platform This Year Would Shed Light on 1900

After 22 years of unemployed promises under the Dingley law, which emphasizes in its schedules the policy of protection, a platform which should declare protection not only unlawful, but a crime would "make night to intoxicating reading," and gave us a text for a stirring campaign.

And then the result might afford an answer to a question which has long engaged the politicians. What influence secured the Democratic triumph in 1892? Who killed Cock Robin that year? I," said the free trader; "I did it with my little delivered against protection." "Nonsense," said the ardent Cleveland-ite. Mr. Cleveland did it with the force of his personality. He was the platform." The Home stead strike," said the disgusted Republicans. "But for that Hon. Harrison would have had a walkover." And so the contention has continued to this day, and still continues.

Now, if it was the tariff plank in the Democratic platform which did the work then, who got sad history to repeat itself? Why not next year again? Challenge protection to another battle to lose death? The protectionists would ask nothing better. They would look to take up such a challenge and then we should all enjoy the campaign longer. The tariff would make a lovely issue, and especially in the light of what happened to the Democratic party after it carried the country in 1892 on a free trade platform.—Washington Star.

THE ORIGINAL BRAIN STORM.

Hard to Wreck.

Now that the tariff disturbers have had time to sit down and think it over, they come to agree that this country is to be congratulated upon the existence of conditions which prevented the recent flurry in Wall street from traveling far outside of the strictly speculative belt. Melville E. Ingalls, chairman of the board of directors of the Chesapeake, Ohio & St. Louis railroad, is quoted as saying that "the country is not a nervous woman, but one which is constantly on the jump." It is quite unnecessary to achieve, bustling activity is less often forced of real progress.

A Household Necessity.

No household is complete without a good grandfather, especially if there is a baby to be rubbed and an all of grandfather's "stuff." What medicine Tom Masson in Bellmaster.

Source for the purposes a grandfather with a field of morals, a jovial disposition and about a million dollars let him roam at large whenever he will.

It does not matter much whether he is a grandfather on your wife's side or on mines. If he is on your wife's side you will secretly think him if he is on your side, she will. But you will both let him do anything you need him.

Never permit grandpa to be out of the nursery when baby is in it. Then, when everything is broken, so can be blamed on the "stuff." Let him be new one.

Fathers and grandpas always are well together. They are both the same age. It is well to bear this in mind. Anything they can do for both of them. And leave them both in charge of grandpa. When they get back carefully so gone the inventors and begin all over again.

It is not necessary to provide more than one grandpa, no matter how many children you have. Two grandpas in one house often lead to an inger house.

When you go out with your wife always leave grandpa in charge of the baby. It is not necessary to tell him to mind. He will, anyway, as a matter of course.

When our baby outgrows grandpa (never happens in childhood), remember that grandpa must be summed and that he is amply able to pay for it.

Third Son of Grant.

Jesse Grant, the third son of the great general, leads a simple and unpretentious life. He is not in any business. Some mines in the west and a few other affairs occupy some of his time. Verson Smith, a friend, said he never misses a baseball game when it is warm.

Accounting for It.

"It's hard enough for you to come home intoxicated," said Mrs. Lowsham, "but why so late?"

"Well, you shee, m' dear, my frien's foolishly insist on my home by mashing gar boy."—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE BEST PHYSIC

SLEEP IS INDEED A SWEET RESTORER.

This Is All That Most Victims of Nervous Breakdown Need to Recover Lost Health and Vigor.

One of the features of modern times is the prevalence of what we term nervousness, or nervous breakdown, save the Lenoxa Enquirer. These bodies apply to a condition of physical and mental ill-health which is the direct result of the age in which we live and the pace at which we are living. Massage and electricity and novel "treatments" and "cures" are called upon to repair what we have brought upon ourselves by our immediate ways of life, by worry and excitement.

There are hundreds of women of the upper and middle classes just now bewailing their nervous and crying out that headaches and insomnia and depression are spoiling their lives. Life is a nonentity age and half the world of men and women are burning the candle at both ends, but in the middle as well. The strenuous life is among a necessity to the man or woman who is sensitive, weakly, nervous or physically ill. It is not wanting in get on, we attempt to do far more than we are fundamentally fit for and nervous breakdown is the inevitable result.

Lack of repose is a prime factor in the causation of "nerves," the cure can only be the acquisition of balance and equanimity and contentment that is necessary for the proper exercise of nervous ill health. We rush hard, expend our energy, we have no time to rest, and nobody listens to the advisers and dissuasions of the sensible kind.

Home life, quiet domesticity, are becoming "old fashioned" and "dull" pleasures, "homely joys" and the "family circle" are relegated to old fashioned terms. Is it any wonder that nervous breakdown and nervous ills are the rule in the forenoon?

The remedy lies mainly with the women—an inflexible rule on a great deal, our example more to woodwind the unnecessary and excitement that accounts of this age.

We must preach the gospel of rest. Hard work nowadays means nervousness sooner or later, and the constant agitation, the constant hurry, the constant changing periods of quiet and complete rest, if the world is to retain their health. It is the more important that the home of mother be such as will restore the balance and lessen the tension of the nervous system of children.

Thoughtlessness in the home, the train of social engagements and well intentions "to distract" following upon a strenuous working day, gives no opportunity for repose. To be quite well, to escape the virtue of repose is worth cultivating in this age of nervous tension, the woman who is constantly on the jump, sooner or later breaks down, and out of her reach, diffuse an atmosphere of disquiet and vulgar unrest. Repose is the key to success, but necessarily means to achieve, bustling activity is less often forced of real progress.

CRITICAL MOMENT.

When John Wanted the Ring It Was in His Sock.

John Jenkinson wasn't not have exchanged situations with the prince who later the crown of Wales or the throne of a bottle hand.

Poland Willow had separated "you" in a video at self and gentle as the sight of music in a drawing-room of the murmuring wall of a screaming house from between waters nearly lost. Jenkinson the "shadow of Poland."

"Polly! Willow," he continued tumultuously, as his left hand had sunk disappointed from sight with a rated sock, "looking mutton toward the back of the sofa on which then sat, and the fingers of his right hand searched to be feeling for something in his vest pocket. "you have made me the happiest man in the world."

The bashful, reluctant glance of her liquid dark eyes now met his. Her waves blush this emotionally the longer face of the lovely girl rippled more profoundly than Wales could have done.

"And you will receive me promptly, then, darling?" he continued, "in an hour or two I shall be ready to return home to provide myself with—with—with a ring."

Jenkinson paused in some apparent excitement, and his finger and thumb nervously pulled his vest pocket without sounding to find anything.

"Ring!" he continued, "I'm a fool—Polly, it was a ring! Ha! Perhaps it is in some other pocket."

Rising to his feet he threw a trembling hand into his trousers pockets.

"There was a hole in that pocket," he said. "Polly, can you come around with concern his plastic face smoothed the light of a dissipated smile, was a pleasant grave one?—It will turn up. Good-morning! I'll find it and bring it to you."

"Yes," exclaimed Polly, in a tumultuous voice, "I know it is a hole in that ring. If you would do me a favor I shall never forget until the day of my death, if you would be so good as to mend it."

Taking Them Into Prison.

About 20 years ago Henry Clay Dean, the eccentric Methodist preacher, was arrested for selling a lottery ticket in Iowa. It was a custom at which I was defending a friend, and I was called upon to make a bridge division of Kilwaukie the other day to a Chicago Fish Stall seller. "Yes," said the man, "I was there and I went for them. The cook their cases, and after looking at them all I picked out the least thing for them to do. I made them take a long walk in the rain to pick grass and take two years each.

"The men failed at the idea of plucking grass. He said that the penitentiaries wanted a bad set of men for bad loses all the time." I said know. Her Money Raising Scheme.

"Now, dear," said the well-shaved man to his wife, "I am going to have a little talk with you about money. Mr. Jones's friend and his wife are coming to dine with us this evening, and I want to make a good impression on the gentleman."

"I wonder," said she, "if I could get a little table way off yonder and tried my luck."

"That's what you can do," he assented; "you may off yonder and tried my luck." Then he paused and drew from his pocket two crisp new bills, and gave them to her. "Now, dear, I'm all your cards are red diamonds, only that's one. Don't do that. You heard me, above all, please. If I should happen to win a pile of money, don't reach out and grab a handful and run off laughing about it. Don't do that. Will you? That isn't fair. It isn't fair to all."

"I'll try not to," she promised, "but you know, dear, that is the only way I can get any money out of you. Maybe you let me have it before company. And then, after a moment of thought, "you borrow it back the minute they leave."

Wax Models of Ships.

Paraffin wax models of all proposed new battleships are used by the admiralty for tests before the keels of the ships are laid down, the addition of ships being tried in a great tank. The models are from 12 to 21 feet long, the tank being 400 feet long and 20 feet wide. The models are made of wax because it is a material which does not absorb water or change its weight, whereas wood or the paraffin an be melted up and used again.

Discovery Endangered World.

In the time of Louis XV. in France a chemist named Dupin made an exhibit on a canal at Versailles of a chemical named Dupin. Dupin was the inventor of fresh serfdom. Louis decided that the invention should be made public, and the inventor died soon after, carrying the secret with him to the grave.

BANSHEE OR DEATH WRAITH.

This Is One of the Oldest and Most Respectable Ghosts.

One of the oldest and most respectable types of ghost is the banshee, which may be regarded as a near relative of the "death watch," inasmuch as it gives warning of impending death by uttering lamentable wails, says Lippincott's. Some families take great pride in the possession of such "spooks," a good example of which is described by Mrs. Lewey of 7 Castle terrace, London, who writes: "The night when my mother lay dying was one of great pain. At about nine o'clock there came a fearful wail of a woman's voice as if swaying to and fro past the windows. I ran to the window, but no human being could be there, as the room was two flights up and no flower near. She died at 10.30 p. m. My father and family sat at dinner on the evening of February 4, 1885, when the same fearful cry or wail filled our house. At eight o'clock next morning my youngest brother died quite suddenly. The same thing happened on my father's death in 1887, likewise on the death of my sister in 1888 and on the death of another brother in 1890." This banshee seems to have been rather out of place in London, such wailing ghosts (which are not seen and cannot properly be properly termed apparitions) being especially domestic and Irish, and they have always been associated with dilapidated castles and ancient or otherwise high-descended gentry.

LAST DAYS OF GREAT POETS.

Bliss Perry Writes of the Passing of Thomas Hardy and others.

On the day when he last entered the Atlantic office, in January, Mr. Aldrich seemed, for the first time, to show a very old man. The hand he spoke of it as he went out. Up till then it had seemed to me that his hand sincerely seemed to touch the sweet, manly figure. The time that time had written around his clear brow and firm mouth conveyed no hint of senility. His hair was curled, if gray, like velvet, slightly heavy in its gravity, sweeter curve, retained a delicious youthful crispness as it curled and broke over collar, into flashing raillery. He had just completed his poem for the Longfellow centenary, his first, seven years ago, years of silence, and when it was produced it was found to be not only retaining its—he blushed with shyness like a boy. He had passed threescore and ten, and the shadow, intimated yet and quite unbreathed, was drawing very near.—Bliss Perry, in Atlantic.

Some Famous "Dunces."

Nathaniel Hawthorne was the dunce of his class. Walter Scott was called his professor that he was a dunce. Napoleon and Wellington were dull boys at school, and when Oliver Wendell Holmes was a boy his father told him he was much sense. Chalmers, the leader of the Disruption, was expelled from his school as an incorrigible dunce. Chatterton was thought to be a fool, and Leigh Hunt was considered beyond all hope. Sir Newton Bacon was pronounced by his William Jones, and Robert Morrison, who compiled the immortal Chinese Bible and translated it into all, was called an extremely dull boy.—Sunday Magazine.

Prizes for Tanned Faces.

With the object of encouraging the pupils of the Farnham grammar school to spend their summer holidays in the open air as much as possible, the Rev. R. Priestley, the headmaster, offered a prize to the boy who returned to school with the brownest face. On the point reasoning for the common term it were picked out as being the most tanned, and it was announced that Dr. Judge had awarded the prize to Foster, the captain of the school. It is understood that Foster declines to divulge to the other boys the secret of his preparation, if any.—London Globe.

Hard to Imagine.

Two hundred millions of atoms of matter could be put in a row on an inch, and it would take a hundred thousand million to equal the size of a grain of matter, said Sir Oliver Lodge in the course of a lecture at Birmingham University.

Can't Miss It

So many ailments are purely nervous that you can hardly miss it if you try Dr. Miles' Nervine. It restores nervous energy—and through its invigorating influence upon the nervous system, the organs are strengthened. The heart action is better; digestion improved, the sluggish condition overcome, and healthy activity re-established.

"My Miles' Nervine is worth its weight in gold to me," writes Mrs. Anna E. Tallman, "I had a most complete nervous prostration, I could not sleep, and the first thing that met my eyes was a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I took it, it strengthened me, I slept well and got up in the morning feeling like a new person. I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Cure for my heart, and I am now well. I can't say too much in praise of your remedies, they relieved from three sensitive and nervous so much suffering."

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails he will refund your money.

The Wrath of Nurses.

Commenting the Indian miscellaneous affairs those in South Africa, David Marshall Lord Roberts said that for the days two or three months of the sheer or Indian life a single rose of singular and surprising, and at Lucknow the death rendered seem very similar. In fact, it would hardly be possible to describe what the monotonous and sick surroundings, the broken campaigns from the unexpectedness begin. Gradually, however, the strain of the sick and the first thing that met our eyes was a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine. It strengthened me, I slept well and got up in the morning feeling like a new person. I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Cure for my heart, and I am now well. FLITTINBY'S REFORM

CLEANS UP THE ACCUMULATIONS OF YEARS.

Reaches the Mature Age When He Throws Away Dead Matter and Is Ready to Begin Life Again.

"I am beginning to throw away things," said Mr. Flittinby, going through her papers and things and throwing things away.

"I find among them newspaper clippings about things that I would never have thought of again but for this reminder, and some things I have forgotten so completely that even the sight of the clippings does not recall to me why I cut them out and saved them; so important, really was many of the things about which we bother ourselves or which at one time we found of interest.

"There are letters from men long since dead, and old bills that recall forgotten people of our time that now seem strange to us, we are so much in the present. And why keep these dead matters? The men and women are dead now or moved away and the events which seemed so near and so dear to us, and if they were they have long since been outlawed by the lapse of time. Throw them away.

"Here are old birthday cards, with pretty, with sentiments, with loving greetings, intoxicating roses, pleasantness, though they so remind us of the years that have gone since first they came to us. And why should we preserve them? We can remember we can cherish those who sent them, without them to remind us, and they would only be thrown with the old papers in the drawer. To the basket, gently with them.

"And here, as I live, are some old valentines! Well well! This does make us young again. Not done dear, that was long ago. Why should we keep them longer? To the basket, gently. We have the valentine not self now.

"There are so many things that we put away to save, to treasure, to seem to stretch intermitably before us when we are young, and we are going to keep these things always. And it takes us, happily, a long, long time to get to where we can see the beginning of the end. Youth envelops us with a buoyancy and aromatic that makes life seem a joy ride. It is on horseback, and in middle age, indeed, we take little account of the years, but then comes a time when we begin to realize that two and two cause four and no more.

"Now I have arrived at that time of life when I begin to know. Don't be impatient, I pray you, if I am taking a powerful view. Per from it.

"Life power seemed to me so full of joy as now and I'm good for a good long stretch of it, yet, with means been and underpinnings broken, nothing conferred to every thing, and nothing like brought over of things, not occupied too much to detail, has stored up accumulation of long gathering trunk seems superfluous and useless, and so I'm true going through it and throwing things away.

"This lot that I've been going through is not the poor stuff that has accumulated in the cubby holes in my desk, but I've got trunks and bundles of stuff stuff stowed away, and I must get it out, a box or bundle at a time and go through it, and throw it away. For of what use will it ever be to anybody? What becomes of this sort of stuff, anyway, when people are old mean, why should I? I'm not this stuff one now myself, and not leave it to remember things up for some body else to throw away?

"There may be some things, to be sure, that I want to save, things that other people will want to keep, and those things I will save, but as to the bulk of this stuff, why, it's just much blindering useless baggage, and the I'll throw away, and with the decks cleared start life anew."

Not a Provident Millionaire.

A funeral carriage passed over Williamsburg bridge the other day with 52 open coffins filled with flowers preceding the hearse, and 52 carriages with mourners followed after. By the time the first carriage reached the Brooklyn side the last carriage in line was just going up the bridge approach from Delaney street, Manhattan, a mile away.

"That must be a millionaire's funeral" remarked a pressmaster to a pettiemen who stood with him looking down on the apparently endless procession of carriages.

"Not on your life" replied the pettiemen. "The dead chap is an Italian from the Mulberry Bend section, and it is an even bet that his widow won't have $100 to her name after she pays the $50 for that parade. But that does beat the record on flowers. We had 27 carriage loads over the bridge once, but never anything like that."—Brooklyn Eagle.

"MARIA THINGUMAJIG."

Foreign Names Bothered Americans in the Olden Days.

Intermarriage with people in these days of travel, more common than they used to be, but they were not permitted to our ancestors at a comfortable, and were least seen if seen, in some of the old seafaring towns. Old-time sea captains made friends in many lands, and were occasionally distinguished on board by some adventurous Grandee, Angel, and Earl Bitesman of the ballad, far compelled to see." Then such, who married so far as Hobbs, did one return, she remained there as the wife of a polyglotous Russian nobleman.

Mr. Pepys's fellow-townsmen were naturally interested to hear all about the beauty on his return, says the Youth's Companion, but there was one important phase of information they never obtained, the bride's married name.

It was an unpromising one that Pepys obtained, delivered even to utterance it. He always spoke of his sweetheart as her and who married a foreigner, his mother called her "Maria Thingumajig." Pepys and presumably she felt into the way of saying simply—and not an ill manner—Maria Thingumajig.

Another old sea captain had married a charming girl who accompanying him to Prussia, both of whom married Prussian. Friends in a land adjoining wrote to congratulate him on his good fortune in having a wife who was not good, and the two friends, Mr. Hans Von Von Boom, were what characterized at the barrow he made with their names.

They had become Miss Cassette and Mrs. Bottlebee, but he never bothered them cheerfully to strangers as Mrs. Lee Bottles and Mrs. Carrots. They gently remonstrated against such a perversion of their names, but in vain. He could never achieve nothing better until a compromise was reached, to accordance with which he ceased to try to pronounce them at all.

Therefore when an intelligible but more necessary to be pronounced darter Mrs. Nancy H. Von Von Boom, he was stopped in adding animate "and of sweet." The mother, full of her name in French, which will go on arabic, she spices the language.

Seven Ages of the Chinese.

A French officer, Louis De Chaudlle, tells of his discovery in a Hong-Kong bookstore of a manuscript containing the seven ages of man. The author was a poet and lived in the reign of Yuan Ti.

At ten years old, says the writer, whose name has long been forgotten, "the boy has a heart and a brain as soft as the tender shoots of a young bamboo. At 20 he is like a green pine tree, he is just beginning to rise in warm rays of common sense.

"Thirty years seem like life, shaped into a footlike. He is strong and lusty, full of bodily and mental vigor. This is the prime age of life. It is the big for him to marry.

At 40 years the prudent man was grown to be a standard and wears a great honor. At 50 years it would be indifferent to confine to him at this early age any functions calling for intellectual intelligence or energy.

When he reaches 60 years, however, although he has grown wise and mature, he is able to hold any ministerial or state office, to call administrative city or a province or perform any official.

At 70 years he is old. Handicaps and all active bodily activities are beyond him. He gives his prudents and clients advice. That is all he is to do.

"At 70 he is just a dry straw. He has only one care—to husband the breath of life that is left in him to preserve it, even to artificial means. At some most auspicious moment of his state and the performance of his duties."

Named Pills as Weapons.

An extraordinary deal, which at the time created an immense sensation, has one in which the decision was arrived at not be swords or cannon but by means of a deadly yellow pills Pop Mall Gazette. The men, who in handle necessary to say, has taken up over a lady had left the arrangements of details to their seconds, and until they faced each other they did not know to what method they were to settle their differences.

One of the seconds was a doctor, and he had made up for the occasion four boxes pills, all identical in size and shape. "In one of these," he said, "I have placed a sufficient quantity of prussic acid to cause the almost instantaneous death of anyone who swallows it.

"We will decide by the toss of a coin, which of you is to have first choice, and you will alternately draw and swallow a pill until the poison does its effect." Two of the pills were then taken as the toss had decided not without effect by either side.

"This time," said the doctor, speaking of the two pillboxes remaining, "you must both swallow the pill at the same moment." The choice was again made, and in a few seconds one of the men lay dead on the grass.

Married Man's Umbrella.

A clergyman has posted the following in the Leeds (Eng.) church notice: "As the gentleman who took my married man's umbrella (26 in.) with the intention of exchanging it for a better, is requested to return the same to the church institute on the afternoon of April 16 can have no possible use for it, he can come into possession of his own again by applying to the secretary."

Better Than Billboards.

Billboards, as they are known in the United States are abandoned, prohibited in Paris, but in place of such objectionable unsightly objects public advertising is confined to a system of neat pillars or columns on the edge of the sidewalk at the corners of intersections.

WRECKED BY TORNADO

NEBRASKA TOWN LAID WASTE BY STORM'S FURY.

Home Shattered, Church Blown to Atoms, and Uprooted Trees and Wreckage Fill Streets—Several Horse-Jerkers Scurry from Castle.

Long Pine, Neb., awoke to a scene of desolation Sunday morning as a result of a terrific tornado that visited it late the previous night. All the stores in town were shattered and in some instances their contents blown into the street. The Methodist church was formed into the foundation by a high wind that decided to adjourn in its favor at the minutes. The Presbyterian church was left in an uncertain condition, the house a mass of wreckage, the roof in one end lodged in a cottonwood, Bonebrake's. The Congregational church lost its steeple, and the Catholic church lost some under support. Nearly all the smaller trees in town were uprooted and twisted into a mass of wreckage. Every antique tree, which was the pride of the village, was uprooted. Nearly all the shade trees in town were twisted off. Not a single house escaped without some damage. Every outhouse was blown down, and in some instances carried a second, instead of. Thomas Quigley was found in the middle of the road with the head was taken in and Mr. Wright was found in the road. Mrs. Wright and daughter, Miss Pearl, were found in the road. Mrs. Wright's face was badly cut and she was unconscious. Her daughter was not injured. Mr. Wright was

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

Not all Ohio men are office seekers. One man down there is interested in an entirely different direction, and they regard him as a little queer. His queerness consists in his wish to have hickory trees and walnut trees growing by the roadsides all over the state. For several years he has been tramping over the country roads of Ohio planting hickory nuts and walnuts wherever there were open spaces for trees. Midnight should invite that man to make a trip over her country roads. One or two such persistent distributors of future timber and walnut trees would be worth more to Michigan than some entire broods of alleged advanced thinkers.

Men who will pledge themselves in advance to burden the new state constitution with fantastic reforms and socialist requirements should not be made members of the constitutional convention. Candidates for membership in that body need not have the slightest hesitation in making prompt and decisive replies to questions that come to them as to their attitude in such directions. The question as to whether or not the union is made of green cheese can be submitted to the people as an independent proposition if anybody desires it submitted. And no one sense other propositions in which there is more or less interest, that the candidacy of men should not be favored who will endeavor to engraft them in the main body of the revised constitution.

What a time democrat should be, as brought out through the New York World's fourteen questions, what is a democrat! has been described by one who is either very much of an idiotic or has a memory that goes far back of present conditions. Here is one quality referred to: A true democrat, who is a democrat from principle, despises every appeal to class hatred and class prejudice as a menace to republican institutions. Sympathies with anarchists are firmly set against socialism and predatory poverty as against predatory wealth. To array classes against classes, employers against employes, poor against rich, labor against capital, is a denial of the whole theory of democracy upon which Jefferson founded the democratic party. With the foregoing in mind as to what the democratic party was in the days of its pride and dignity, and then recalling what it is today, the reason for its demoralization and weakness can well be understood.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Clayton L. Bailey of Mancelona, one of the leading attorneys of Antrim county, has announced himself as a candidate for delegate to the constitutional convention and his position is being circulated in Traverse City.

Cheboygan Tribune: At a recent meeting of the Inland Trade Association it was decided to extend four premiums from Mackinac Island to Cheboygan, to continue them on through the Inland Route to Otter, a boat leaving each end of the route every day. This will have ten fast class boats built this year so as to be able to have them ready for the opening of the resort season next year. It is the intention of the company to place upon this route much finer boats than have so far been on the route. With Hannah's new boat the city of Cheboygan and the Topinabee on the route and these two new boats, this famous route will be traveled and advertised more than any boat line in the resort section and will be a great benefit to all the resorts and towns on the route, Cheboygan coming in for its share.

Petoskey News: The appearance of a big, with a large lighter in tow in the harbor recently and then rising up at the breakwater has caused considerable comment as to their mission here. It has been found that the government has decided that the present breakwater is not just what it ought to be, so appropriations have been made for extensive improvements. The latest order calls for the construction of an addition to the north end of the present structure one hundred feet long and of the same size and dimensions as the completed parts. In addition to this improvement the efficiency of the breakwater as a protection to small boats will be greatly increased by filling in the gaps between the south end of the completed section and the shore like near the gas plant. These gaps will merely be filled to with large stone such as are now in on the south end. The contract for this work has been let to Burk, Smith & Nelson, a well known firm of contractors from Muskegon, the same company that built the extension last year.

Secretary Bruce Odell has issued a call for the first annual meeting of the Michigan Hardwood Manufacturer's association to be held Outlines July 31 and August 1. The association was organized one year ago and has 100 members. William H. White of Boyne City is president, W. W. Mitchell of Cadillac and H. Harson of Grayling, vice presidents, H. H. Diggins of Cadillac, Treasurer. On account of Mr. Diggins' prolonged illness, Secretary Odell, who is his general manager, will act as the office for another year and the association will select as secretary a man who will devote his entire time with a salary accordingly. The headquarters will continue here. The important items of business to be transacted will be the election of officers and the adoption of rules for the measurement and inspection of northern hardwoods.

Long Live The King!

is the popular cry throughout European countries, while in America, the cry of the present day is "Long live Dr. King's New Discovery, King of Throat and Lung Remedies" of which Mrs. Julia Ryder Palmer, Tyson, Mass., says: "It never fails to give immediate relief and to quickly cure a cough or cold." Mrs. Palmer's opinion I shared by a majority of the inhabitants of this country. is not necessarily one of perfect form and features. Many a plain woman who could never serve as an artist's model, possesses those rare qualities that all the world admires; healthy, clear eyes, clean smooth skin and that lightsomeness of step and action that accompanies good health. A physical weakness is never attractive, but it can be cured. Electric Bitters restore weak women, give strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, beautiful complexion. Guaranteed at F. G. UNCLE SAM AS UNDERTAKER.

Buried a Man Who Was Murdered on Site of New Post Office.

It is not often that the United States government plays the role of undertaker, but it did so a few days ago in Macon, Ga., says the Baltimore Sun-Dean. Two laborers employed on the new post office under contract, toiling in that city got into a fight last week and one of them was fatally shot. The premises on which the tragedy occurred being government property, the municipal authorities declined to remove the body and prepare it for burial, on the theory that it might prove embarrassing sometime in the future to complicate local affairs with those distinctly federal. The omission in his quandary was grabbed to the treasury department, stated the situation and asked for instructions. He was directed to remove the remains, inter them and send the bill to the department. He followed instructions, and the other day rendered the bill, which amounted to $114 among the specified items "for one of five dollars "for carriage for the widow." Accompanying the bill was a letter narrating in detail the circumstances of the case and containing the following somewhat startling paragraph: "I am instructed number for burial of a man who was murdered in the building under my charge in accordance with your instructions and authority in telegram dated 19th inst." One not familiar with the circumstances might feel justified in assuming that the murder was perpetrated under the directions of the treasury, but the officials adamantly affirm that they were not accessories before the fact and that Dixie was no conspiracy to assassinate one of its employes.

IN FAR OFF MARS.

People of Planet Hoarding Every Drop of Water.

While the people on the planet of Mars are supposed to be vastly superior in every way to the inhabitants of this earth, according to Prof. Lester F. Ward, of Brown university, they have only about 1,000,000 more years to live, while the people of this world are only beginning their allotted space of 24,000,000 years.

There will kill the Martians, the professor says, and even now it is dry time perpetually up there. Most of the waters that once covered everything have vanished in the same way that this planet is all the while losing hydrogen, one of the two components of water. This process has proceeded so far on Mars that most of the liquid refreshment of its inhabitants, assuming it has such, is confined to narrow circles about the two poles. It is made available for the uses of the Martians only by means of an intricate network of canals.

"On Mars we can, as it were, see with our own eyes a race of vast antiquity and supreme wisdom, clinging desperately to the orb that bore it, half gasping for breath, and hoarding every drop of its precious water, but doomed in the relatively near future to face the lingering death of a dying world."

This gloomy picture, Prof. Ward says, is in store for the people of this earth, but there is no need of worry at the present time, as it is 24,000,000 years distant.

THE LIMIT OF PATIENCE.

Owner of One Telephone in Flat Building Protests.

"Of course," said the cheerful woman, "I believe in loving my neighbor as myself, but I find it harder since we have had a telephone put in our flat. We live in an old-fashioned flat house and ours is the only telephone on the premises. I do not know how the proprietors learned that we have one, for I am not acquainted with anybody in the building, but it was not to more than a week when the woman across the hall came over to ask if she could use it. Of course I let her do the said, and naturally I had no choice but to let her use it. She paid five cents, but under the rules of the telephone company private wires can't come than that per message. How ever, I did not wish to be small, so I let it pass. She evidently carried the good news throughout the building, for there has been a continuous performance ever since. A few days ago somebody rang me up and asked for Mrs Hinck, who lives on the top floor. I was the only person at home at the time, so I had to climb three flights of stairs and tell Mrs. Hinck to come down. What's that? Vertigo? My own—dizzy, I know; but whose virtue?

PLACATED MR. DAN SAMSON.

Colored Minister's "Retraction" a Triumph of Ingenuity.

In Mississippi there was a colored preacher noted in those parts for the extreme frankness and candor of his exhortations to his wicked brethren to reform. On one occasion, relates Representative John Sharp Williams, the divine was holding forth on the sin of theft. Among other things he said: "I see forty or ten chicken thieves including Dan Samson." This bald statement of fact rather aroused the resentment of the aforesaid Samson, and he threatened the minister with personal violence. The latter's friends persuaded the divine to withdraw the accusation if Samson would promise not to offer the minister any hurt. The question seemed about to be adjusted, it being settled that the clergyman should, on the following Sunday, publicly retract his statement as to the paternity of Mr. Samson. Therefore, rising in the pulpit on the day appointed, the minister said: "I guess dat a remark of mine to de effect of last Sunday, has been de cause of offence, so I desdoo retract it. What I should have said was dis: I see forty or ten chicken thieves, including Dan Samson."—Harper's Weekly.

THE CONGREGATION.

There is a tiny church near the foot of one of the Western Grandfathers which has a congregation numbering, in the best of weather, not more than 20 people. On stormy days the number is much less, as members have to travel considerable distances. A tourist happened to come across this church early one Sunday morning. He listened for a bit, but heard no sound. So went to the door of the church and looked in. The beadle was the only occupant. To the tourist he over." he asked. "Do ye, sir, will ye mind," replied the old man. "Then, where is the congregation?" asked the tourist. The beadle slowly pointed through the open door to a man wending his way down a hill and said, "That's him."

Cut Rate Contributors.

In a certain parish of Greater New York the rector, while admonishing his flock on Sunday last that the collection basket receipts were steadily growing less, took occasion to declare that "certain parishioners contribute to their means, but others give in keeping with their measures." He added that in measure such establishes of false pretense reminded him of the story told of the Pilgrim fathers upon their arrival at Plymouth Rock. First they fell upon their knees, then they fell upon the aborigines."

Ruskin on Manual Labor.

We are living in these days endeavoring to separate intellect and manual labor, we want one man to be always thinking and another to be always working, and we call one a gentleman, and the other an operative, whereas the workman ought often to be thinking and the thinker often to be working. Pall both should be gentlemen in the best sense. As it is, we make man unmanly, but one envying, the other despising his brother; and the mass of society is made up of morbid thinkers and miserable workers!

Two Ways of "Settling."

A pupil in a school near Chatham asked New York city, the other day, the word solar. "A spine is a long, limber bone; your head sets on one end, and you see on the other."

—The steamer H. J. Gordon left Sunday for Erie, towing the lumber tanks schooner Stimson Mitchell to that port. The tow is a result of a shortage of sailors on the Mitchell.

—Antrim street paving is about three-quarters done, and the work has been excellently done. Antrim street is forging to the front, and is already one of the prettiest streets in the city.

—The tug Margaret McComb, of St. James, is here all this week for repairs. The Colley fishing tug Clarence Mae Hume, is also here and hauled out at Shaughnessy's yard for an overhauling.

—The Fisk Male quartet will give a concert at the Congregational church Saturday night, and again at the Charlevoix Theater Monday night. This is one of the best musical attractions on the road.

—The "Petoskey News says of Sullivan's circus: "The show is remarkably free from of cold-deck tactics, no fake games or gamblers in its train everything about the aggregation is as clean as a whistle.

—There will be an Old Settlers Reunion for all those who were here on or before '56 at Eastport, on August 1st. This is to be the first meeting and if it proves successful, will be continued for years to come.

—L. D. Coulter, of the Ferry Co., has been rifling through Antrim county inspecting the pea crops, and he reports that the fields look better than for several years. A satisfactory crop now seems certain. The sugar beet people are elated over crop prospects. A sugar factory official gives it as his opinion that there will be double the tonnage this year that there was last, with less acreage. Other crops promise fairly well, and the apple orchards are bearing a heavy burden of fruit.

—Masters Leslie and Percy Crane are in Chicago, visiting friends.

—Guy Brown and wife, of Central Lake, were in town last Thursday.

—Sheriff McWain and Prosecuting Attorney Cilek went to St. James to-day on official business.

—The M. E. ladies will have a lemonade and cake sale next door to Bert Masters, on Saturday of this week.

—Mrs. O. E. Willner and daughter Ulla, are spending all this week at Northport with old friends and neighbors.

—Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Cram left Tuesday for the State of Washington. Maurice Cram is already there. They expect to make that State their future home.

—Mrs. Cecil Swallow, daughter of Mrs. Frank Gaetz, of this place, died last week in St. Louis. The remains were brought here, and the funeral occurred Saturday morning from the Catholic church.

—Postmaster Meech reports that the stamp sales thus far have greatly exceeded those of the same period last year, which indicated a general forward movement of both resort and business interests.

—The big car ferry Manistique came in from Manistique season Sunday with 300 excursionists and a band. The crowd in addition to local excursionists, filled the town. A band accompanied the crowd.

—Judge Shepard, of the Emmet circuit, sitting for Judge Mayne at Hillsdale, on Monday sentenced Stookey to the Ionia hospital for criminal insane. Stookey is the man who tried to kill Judge Mayne last spring.

—Rev. Dr. Hysing, former Congregational pastor, but now pastor at St. Johns, is here to spend his two months vacation. When asked whether or not he would preach in his old pulpit when here, the humble Scotch cleric replied "I dinna ken." No former resident is more cordially welcomed in Charlevoix than Dr. Hysing.

—A German named Lamel, employed in the Oriental rug store Theater block, vamoosed Monday with $15 in cash and goods to the value of $70. Lamel was employed as cook and handy man about the place. Last year he was employed by the Lynn Hunter Co. in its exhibition car Wilbur's dock. The sheriff is trying to locate the man.

—Petoskey News: The Sun Bros. circus brought quite a large crowd of people here on Tuesday, and the greater part of those who were present at the performances in the afternoon and evening were well pleased to see it. In fact some of the acts presented in the little aggregation were very clever and new for this part of the country.

—C. L. Dayton Prosecuting Attorney of Lelanau county, accompanied by editor Nelson, of the Leelanau Enterprise, was in town Tuesday. Mr. Dayton is a candidate for the constitutional convention and has a strong following, not only in his own county but in Grand Traverse and Antrim. Mr Dayton considers that Lelanau county has a right to ask for recognition.

—The city has installed a pump at the swimming pool, by which water is taken from Pine lake, for the pool. The regular city water supply is overworked on the north side, and the demand is greater than the capacity of the mains to supply.—hence the Pine lake pump. All of which vindicates the SENTINEL's criticism when the mains were laid—that many of the mains were too small for future demands.

—There will be an Old Settlers Reunion for all those who were here on or before '56 at Eastport, on August 1st. This is to be the first meeting and if it proves successful, will be continued for years to come.

—Petoskey News: The tug Clarence Mae Hume, is also here and hauled out at Shaughnessy's yard for an overhauling.

—The "Petoskey News says of Sullivan's circus: "The show is remarkably free from of cold-deck tactics, no fake games or gamblers in its train everything about the aggregation is as clean as a whistle.

—Announcements have been made by the Pere Marquette officials that their summer excursions will be run about the middle of August. The one from Toledo will arrive on Aug. 13 and the one from Chicago on Aug. 15, both of them for ten days. From the present calculations there will be at least three trainloads on the one from Toledo, while the number to come from Chicago has not yet been estimated.

An Unpleasant Necessity.

Many years ago we solemnly resolved that we would thereafter pay no attention to the unjust attacks and slurs of the Democratic contrier. We shall not break that resolution now.

Any advertiser, or any other person interested, can, on any publication day, call at the SENTINEL office and inspect our issue, or count it if they choose.

The SENTINEL has not made a statement of its circulation to any newspaper directory in twenty years. The publisher desires to round out a long journalistic career in Charlevoix peacefully and honorably. He has nearly reached the forty year milestone. The end is not far distant. He has an ambition to reach the half-century mark. In the line of duty, political controversy cannot be escaped, but personal business controversy, especially with the CONTRIER, could be.

We rest content in the judgment of the people always, as to merit. We do not possess a megaphone, and will not descend to the use of a tin horn to sing the praises of the SENTINEL.

We shall pay no further attention to the CONTRIER, on this or any other question.

The Water Tower Lights.

The four arc lamps on the water tower are a thing of beauty and a joy forever, as far as they go, but there is an opportunity for the city and the U. S. lighthouse department, acting conjointly to enlarge their usefulness.

Superintendent Odonoss the giant at midnight on the street light circuit, which includes the tower (tower lights) do excellent service in lighting both sides of the river at the mouth and serve as a fine beacon for the sailors.

But the board of public works should get in touch with the lighthouse inspector to the end that his department may be expected of keeping them going all night during the season of—navigation. These lights are, approximately, 40 feet above the level of lake Michigan. On a clear dark night, they are visible, probably, ten miles out, but there is another phase of benefit that perhaps has not been thought of. Sailors will tell you that the average fog raises but about too feet above the water. Therefore, on a foggy night, the lights would be an unfailing beacon to navigators.

We are told that the government has approached the city on the subject of placing the fog bell on the water tower. The two taken together would be a great prize.

Shingle Mill Burned.

The shingle mill of Burgess & Cooper, at Clyde Bay, Pine Lake, was totally destroyed by fire about ten o'clock Thursday night last week, together with considerable shingle material.

The loss is about $5,000, with no insurance. As the available timber for the mill was nearly exhausted, the mill will not be rebuilt, of the same capacity before. A smaller plant will be built to clean up the remnant of the timber.

—There will be a "Bloomer Party" at Weechelmi hall, Boyne, Friday, July 26th, 7.30 p. m. This is a take off on the monkey and pajama parties by New York's 400, and there is much speculation as to what it will be. The announcement states that bloomers will be furnished to all who attend, and that pajamas and bathing suits will "don't go." Also that the property of the party is vouched for by the W. C. T. U. the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A." The admission is 10c and the proceeds will be given church. The Bloomer Party is being gotten up by the recreators.

AN EAST JORDAN BOOM.

Our Sister City at the Head of the Arm Now Sure to Forge to the Front.

Following the clinching of the Michigan Central-Ward railroad deal comes the announcement that the East Jordan people have landed an iron furnace and chemical plant. The deal if certainty was placed upon the project last Thursday, and the mill will be located in East Jordan in Charlevoix. Speaking of the railroad deal the Detroit Journal says:

"More important than the mere purchase by the Michigan Central of the Traverse City and Lake Michigan Central railroad of 42 miles are the developments probable in consequence of the Michigan Central taking the road into its system. It is most likely that the white pine forests through which the Ward estate is a landowner, and hardwoods will be purchased from the Ward estate by a syndicate of wealthy Bay City lumber operators as a price of Lumbermen approaches now saw mills put in, and first the pine and then the hardwood felled, sawed into lumber and sent to market on a wholesale scale."

"It is said that the Bay City lumbermen have been ready for a long time to take the timber, either on a syndicate, or in parcels to individuals, but would not touch it unless the Michigan Central would take the small railroad and guarantee the new spurs and siding and equipment necessary to the large scale handling of the product.

"The Ward timber lands in Crawford, Antrim and Charlevoix counties, but chiefly in Charlevoix county, total about acres and include large tracts of rock maple, straight, tall trees without a branch, the famous Birch gap white pine. It is estimated that there are 200,000,000 feet of white pine and lumber in trees, and from 1000,000 to 2,000,000 feet of hard woods.

"If the Bay City lumbermen get at this timber once again and for the last time will Michigan have a genuine lumber camp, with its gangs of tree choppers in gaudy flannel coats and trousers, ready to break once in awhile for the nearest town for a wild old spree as a relief from the weeks of monotony in the woods.

"The Detroit & Charlevoix railroad was characteristically a Hazel Ward proposition. He wouldn't tie up with either the Michigan Central or Pere Marquette. He laid the lines on either side of his lands and built the Detroit & Charlevoix from South Arm to Frederick on the Michigan Central, and the Traverse City road from Frederick on the Pere Marquette. The Ward lands have not cut the timber rapidly, although they have a large sawmill and a settlement at Ireland, a town of their own in the woods, but if the Bay City people get at it they will make things hum.

"The Michigan Central pays $500,000 for the six miles of railroad considered a very cheap price when the days of traffic in lumber and lumber products that attach are considered. The Michigan Central agrees to construct branches and switches wherever necessary through the woods and the Ward agree to ship a minimum of 200,000,000 feet of lumber annually.

"The Michigan Central will build six miles of new track to turn the line from Frederick to Grayling, where there are railroad shops and yards, and will make Grayling the main connecting point.

"One ground for belief that the timber will be sold is that the entire estate must be divided among the heirs before the end of 1910. The Ward estate trustees are Willis C. Ward of Pontiac, George K. Ward of New York, Frank W. Ward of Bay City."

Of course Charlevoix has an interest in the deal, as it means an other railroad here. The purpose of the Michigan Central is to fill in the lots side gap between their transfer dock at South Arm and Charlevoix.

To that end, the Michigan Central people last fall authorized the Charlevoix board of commerce to secure the right of way, which has been done.

There is no doubt but that the M. C. will be running trains to Charlevoix next summer.

Murder at Boyne Falls.

Boyne Falls was the scene of a horrible murder early last Sunday morning.

A man named Trunch was brutally beaten to death by tramps and thrown into a pool of water. When found the head was almost submerged by water and only the space of life remained. He died soon after being found.

On Saturday night he came in from Lake Michigan, where he had been working, and while drinking about the saloon had a hard fight with two men. Later he went out and the supposition is that he was followed by these men and killed, and they have been arrested and are held to answer to the charge of murder.

The dead man had both eyes blackened and other parts of his face that bears up under the coroner's jury. The dead man had both eyes blackened and other parts of his face that bears up under the coroner's jury.

Albert Trunch was formerly a resident of Boyne City where he conducted a shoe shop, but as business was slow, he closed the shop and went to work in the woods. He was German, about 35 years old and leaves a wife with three children in poor circumstances. He was a peddler before, but these who knew him best say he was a quiet, inoffensive man.

Textbox Pere Marquette Railroad Accident.

One of the most horrible railroad disasters in the history of the state occurred last Saturday morning between Saleem and Plymouth.

A head-on collision between an excursion train and a freight utterly demolished both. The death list now numbers 8, and fifty 100 injured. The death list will doubtless increase.

The accident was due to the engineer and conductor of the freight waiting their orders wrong. The position of the train and the engine plays to the railroad shops, on an excursion to Detroit.

Homestead Abandonment.

A "SHARP" BARGAIN

RECKONING OF THE NEW DICKER WITH GERMANY.

Considering That by Larger Undervaluation Privileges We Open the Door to Increased Competition, the Bargain Does Not Seem so Very Fine for Us After All.

As $6,641,000 a year is to $208,165 a year—that is what we are told the United States has gained in its tariff dicker with Germany. More specifically it is stated the claim is that the reduction in German ta'iff on American exports will amount to $6,641,000, while the reduction in our tariff on German exports will amount to only $208,165.

If this be the truth the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, then Germany has been completely overreached, swindled, bamboozled, confidenced, hambooz'ed, thunderclapped. The Shylock traders the world has ever known have been made to look like suckers. The gifted state department has outgeneraled Germany very much as the natives of Timbuctoo might be outmaneuvered. We have hand Germany a lemon. We have sold to Germany for $6,641,000 a gold brick which assays $208.165.

It is this the truth the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, as the gifted state department endeavors to show in its optimistic analysis of the new tariff treaty of the new German agreement? No. It is not the truth, for only a small part of the truth, as we shall abundantly prove.

Germany did not put up her maximum tariff tariff for the native advantage of saving $208,165 in tariff duties from the United States, because of so-called abuse of the Dingley law. It was not to aid in choice of her artistic creations, vermouth, still and sparkling wines, paintings and statuary that Germany doubled and tripled her tariff on our foodstuffs and manufactures. The whole trade in the articles named in getting these amounts to substantially less than $7,000,000 a year. Certainly it was not for this petty trade that Germany punished herself with a maximum tariff and with which to frighten the United States into a cowardly surrender.

Where then does Germany expect to get even? Somewhere, one must be sure. The answer is, in the matter of law and procedure in American customs administration, whereby German exporters receive an boon to their own agents in the United States are practically permitted to undervalue their exports anywhere from ten to 50 per cent. That is, German agents will "get even" with the German exporter. Let me write my own values and I care not who writes your tariff schedules. And he is right.

In much as the German export may be allowed to undervalue its $170,000,000 of nearly competitive goods which come to this country, by so much will our tariff be reduced. The net result of reduction in value would reduce the dutiable value of the imports from $170,000,000 to $150,000,000, or 20 per cent of reduction in value.

Not $208,165 as the state department estimate would have it, but $17,000,000 a year is what Germany has got out of us.

Seventeen millions a year is a thing to fight for in tariff payments, it is a big sum for the United States Industries to lose in exchange that the increased volume of German exports would yield on the increase at our price requirements a much greater sum of Gain to Germany compared with which that $208,165 is made to look like a mere "mite."

What it represents to American producers is undersold in their own market and American wage earners robbed of employment as the result of increased importations—this to an other story, which remains to be written when the results of our government's bamboozling go down to farmers and have become visible.

Germany did not put up her maximum tariff tariff for the native advantage of saving $208,165 in tariff duties from the United States, because of so-called abuse of the Dingley law. It was not to aid in choice of her artistic creations, vermouth, still and sparkling wines, paintings and statuary that Germany doubled and tripled her tariff on our foodstuffs and manufactures. LEADS DOUBLE LIFE.

MAN IS OCULIST BY DAY AND BURGLAR BY NIGHT.

Confesses Having Committed Eight Robberies and Has Rooms Fitted Mysteriously—Police Have Replaced Stolen Curtains.

Having led a double life for more than a year, ranging by night and preaching in an honest trade by day, Dr. Blackwell Holbrook of West Bloomfield—a graduate of an eastern medical college and a practicing oculist—was laid in jail in the West Chester jail on the charge of being connected and across to be tried, perhaps, and as he has made a clean breast of his misdeeds, he has Prosecutor Hill and his detectives who succeeded in drawing the mask from the man who was devoted to ask for a light sentence. On the other hand, he will escape before any quarter expires adapt his strange double life, and allow himself to be sent to the state prison. It is said that Holbrook will be shamefully treated by his former associates, as a struggling young practitioner in Detroit, he has been a member of the Detroit Turnverein. If so, he has lost his hold of some of the best fellows in the city, and they will be delighted to side the church.

Why L. F. Knowles of Boyne City Should Be Elected a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention.

The selection of delegates to the State Constitutional Convention, is one that involves great responsibility upon the electors of the state, as well as great responsibility upon the delegates when chosen, upon the electors that they exercise the best judgment in selecting men for delegates, and upon the delegates in the performance of their duties when elected.

The Convention should represent, as near as may be, not only the several interests of the state, but should be composed of men representing, what may be termed, the conservative element of society, and of wide experience in public affairs. Another element of our citizenship should be represented. That element of young progressive citizenship which is active in the state and nation in our business professional and political life, and the highest type of which are represented by such of these as have equipped themselves for the various occupations by a thorough, educational training. These men represent the aggressive business and political activities, and if we would frame and adopt an improved constitution, representing the new thoughts and the new activities of the state, we will get through the representation in this Convention, of this element.

Charlevoix county offers, as a candidate for delegate from the 25th senatorial district, such a man in the person of L. F. Knowles of Boyne City. A graduate from a Literary course, supplemented by a professional course from the State University, and trained by eight years of active business and professional life since finishing his college course. More than ordinarily successful in both, clean, competent, honorable and an energetic and painstaking worker, with an active and brilliant mind, thoroughly familiar with professional, business and social affairs, an ardent republican in principle, but unhampered by any past political affiliations. The friends of Mr. Knowles urge his nomination as a delegate because he is just, strong, able and energetic, competent, and because he represents this element of the inhabitants of the state from which emanates new thought, fresh energy and good citizenship.

A Red Letter Amusement Event

Hong Kong, The merry chimes, the infinite acrobat, the elephants, camels and the multitudinous features of a full fledged, good all around, tented show is coming to town on July 31st. On this occasion, the Greater Sun Bros. World's Progressive shows, will unfold their tents at the show grounds. This popular amusement institution is now on its 16th annual tour and is breaking all records in giving its patrons satisfaction with the performances presented. This season the galaxy of entertainers are all new comers, and include William O'Dale the international equestric exposition, who has excited the admiration of audiences in both continents. The La Pasque Troupe of Acrobats, the Graceful Grob Acrobatic Troupe, the Juggling Lauderios, marvelous club experts, Great Outlands, homeless marvel in mid-air, Miss Vinnie O'Donte, accomplished right wire performer, the Boyle Brothers, a duo of physical culture exponents, William Trask, dare devil up side down equilibrist, the Sister Orions, inaptitude par excellence, Miss Minnie Ashburne and a troupe of blue-ribboned cake walking and high stepping horses.

Then comes the curtainless of elephant actors, educated ponies, canine performers, the acrobatic and tight rope walking mules and other wonderously trained domestic and wild animals, all invariably received with many ecstatics of "oh's" and "ah's" by the children spectators.

The Sun Brothers Show is noted for its generosity in reserving the best of order about their establishment, this together with their beautiful equipment of everything and the high standard of the exhibits presented, makes it at once the ideal show of the period and the favorite of the ladies and children everywhere.

On the show grounds, which by the way will be located and while are admirably adapted for show purposes, will be erected a magnificent pavilion for the presentation of numerous novel operatic, free exhibitions. These will be given free to the public at 11:30 a. m.

"Long Live The King."

is the popular cry throughout European countries, while in America, the cry of the present day is "Long live Dr. King's New Discovery, King of Throat and Lung Remedies" of which Mrs. Julia Ryder Paine, Truro, Mass, says "It never fails to give immediate relief and to quickly cure a cough or cold." Mrs. Paine's opinion is shared by a majority of the inhabitants of this country. New Discovery cures weak lungs and sore throats after all other remedies have failed; and for coughs and colds it's the only sure cure. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Capt. H. McCauley has been confined to the house with an attack of "La Grippe."

James McKann has purchased a nice oak register from the National Cash Register Co.

Barge John Schroeder took on part of a load here and went to East Jordan to finish up.

Th Noonan Seed Co. of Cheboygan have a force of men here this week going through the pea crop.

We are pleased to learn that Sister Clementine who has been ill for the past two weeks is improving very rapidly.

The continuous Vaudeville interspersed with the sale of the cure for all the medicine were the attractions at the hall last week.

Mr. James Cames and wife, of Chicago, are visiting at the home of Mrs Cames parents, James H. O'Donnell. Mr. Cames is captain of No. one fire department in the above city.

M. J. McCann always has a smile on his face, but a few days ago it was broader than usual. On inquiring the cause, we were informed that the "Stork" had visited his home and left there a fine baby girl. Mother and child getting along nicely.

Not within the memory of the oldest inhabitant has the grasshoppers been known to be so numerous as they are at the present time on the Island, and the different crops are in danger of being destroyed by the inroads of the pest. Frank Roody claims that they destroyed one whole days cutting of hay on him in one night.

Hon. E. J. Dowdell of St. Louis Mo, is the guest of James Dowley for a few week. Mr. Dowdell informs us that the "Movie Club" of which he is chairman with headquarters at St. Louis will hold their annual convention on the island again this year. The convention will take place as the delegates from the different cities arrive. In the mean time Mr. Dowdell will survey the Committee on revision of the Constitution, and by-laws. W. J. Gallagher had the honor to be chosen treasurer of this Club last year.

NORWOOD NEWS.

William M. Clemens of New York City, arrived from St. Paul, Wednesday.

Fred and Jessie Meech of Charlevoix, were here for a short time on Monday last.

Geo. H. Van Pelt is back from Boston and has taken possession of the town once more.

Mrs. Laura Lewis and Mrs. Hilah Pearl of Central Lake, came over Wednesday to attend the lawn social.

Mrs. Bertha Conkrite of Detroit, sister of Mrs. Harry Pearl arrived Sunday, and will stay for a few days.

Miss Marieta and Leona Valentine left Friday for Manistique. Miss Leona Valentine will be gone about two weeks.

U. S. Government surveyors were here Monday taking levels, showing where the beach of lake Michigan was many thousand years ago. The ridge just east of the church is about 40 feet above present level, and was without doubt at one time the beach of the lake. They will take in more level between here and Traverse City.

Rev. A. A. Aylesworth formerly pastor of the M. E. church at Norwood, and now preaching at Manton, Mich., stopped over at Norwood Friday night on his way to attend the camp meeting at Bay View. Mrs Aylesworth and youngest child was with him, also Dr. Huntley and wife of Manton. They were making the trip in an automobile.

Mr and Mrs. William Clemens, left for New York City Sunday. Mr. Clemens is a cousin of Mark Twain. He belongs to the U. S. Detective force and will leave for Paris soon after reaching New York. Mr. Clemens is also a newspaper man having been on one of the Cleveland papers, and is a writer of short stories, "The House of a Hundred Doors," "The Gilded Lady," and others.

The lawn social given by the L. A. S. in Harry Pearl's yard last Wednesday evening was a success financially and socially. It was a very fine evening and about 150 were present. Mrs. Lute Crossen entertained the company with very fine vocal music. She does not sing any more on the stage, but has lost none of her ability as a singer, and the highest compliment I can give her is that she reaches the high notes without screeching. Her voice is clear as a bell and she reaches F. in alt with ease, and can go higher if necessary. Mr. and Mrs. Clemens left for New York City Sunday.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Plant perfected last week will give to East Jordan three new industries, with an investment of over half a million dollars and employing over 400 men. Frank E. Bord of Buffalo and Charles B. Shaffer of Marquette, who were associated in the ownership of the iron furnaces at Boyne City, which were sold to Berry Bros., of Detroit, will build a charcoal iron furnace there of the same capacity as the Boyne City plant. W. S. Shaw and W. S. Matthews, chemical men, will erect a wood alcohol plant which will be the second largest in the United States. The two plants will be located on the water front and adjoining each other. The charcoal produced by the iron works. The East Jordan Lumber company will erect a new mill which will take the raw timber shipped in from the woods and cut it into lengths for the use of the charcoal plant. The plant of the iron works will have a capacity of 50 tons of pig iron daily and the chemical plant will have 14 retorts. Big docks will be built for the landing of ore shipped by boats. All of the buildings will be erected as rapidly as possible. The surveys are now being made. Another industry will be a lath mill which will employ 12 men. There must be 400 new houses erected in the village to provide homes for the laborers who will be brought there.

—The country dog and pony show August 3rd.

—Editor William Campbell, of the Northport Leader, was here Monday lapping over the town.

—Mines Laura Bridge, of Fremont, Neb, and Hazel Bridge, of Norfolk, Neb., are guests of their uncle, A. F. Bridge.

—Our Old Kentucky Home, with band, orchestra and pickaninnies, will be with us Friday evening, August 2, at the Charlevoix Theater.

—Pagan's Vaudette is getting good crowds. A bi-weekly change of program is announced, and the moving pictures are very popular with the people. The twenty minute 5 cent show is both amusing and instructive.

—Mrs James McCreery, who has been spending the summer here with her mother, Mrs. Sarah Carpenter, left last night for her home in Greenville, S. C., in response to a telegram announcing the serious illness of her husband.

—Our Old Kentucky Home, a story of the Kentucky Hills, brimful of pleasing surprises, at the Charlevoix Theater, Friday, August 2. "Our Old Kentucky Home" brings pleasure to the keenously jaded. to lovers of sweet songs of the southland.

—Circuit Court Stenographer James E. Henderson returned July 25 from a trip to Scotland, this being the first vacation he has had in 20 years, at this time also crossing the Atlantic ocean to visit his mother and other relatives. Mr. Henderson resides in Cadillac.

—L. G. Smith, of Muskegon, with a crew of men and a wrecking outfit, is here and has resumed operations in the raising of the Lucinda Hall wrecker, lying off Oyster Bay. Last fall Mr. Smith lost a crew and considerable material in working on the job. He is confident of getting the big ship, however.

—Everybody and everybody's children know of the Gentry dog and pony show—the only great show of its kind in America. They have been in Charlevoix and our people are not slow in availing themselves of the fund of lessons, and for the young people is a veritable carnival of enjoyment. Gentry will be here August 2.

—Warren Moore, general manager of "Old Kentucky Home", makes the following guarantee. Any person attending the new 2 act comedy drama, "Old Kentucky Home", and not being satisfied after seeing two acts can have their money refunded at the box office. If the show don't please you step to the office, say so, and get your money back.

—On Saturday, James M. Saunders sold his city lot, bought the Linda Vista boarding hall on Newman street, it is of 50 foot frontage on Newman street, and is a most beautiful resort location. Mr. and Mrs. Saunders will continue to conduct the dining hall, which is generously patronized by outsiders from the Charlevoix Summer Home grounds, and other outlying summer homes.

—The U. S. lighthouse tender Sumac was in port for a short time Saturday.

—Mr. Hudson O Smith, of Gaines, joined his wife here Monday, and is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Smith.

—Probably the finest home plant in Charlevoix is the flowering fuchsia in the window of the Ferguson House. It stands fully six feet from the soil, and is a mass of fully blossomed petals—a marvel of beauty and symetry.

—Water for the town and Flowers, the plumber, next week. Mr. Flowers desires to call the attention of the public to his enlarged stock of sanitary and plumbers supplies, and his excellent facilities for installing them.

—There will be an ice cream social at Epworth church on the evening of August 8th, till 10 o'clock. Everybody invited. It is just far enough for an hour's drive to the lakeside as well as to possess and prospective enjoyers of this landscape not to mar the beauty of the place by any material remainder of the fact that men must eat in order to live.

A First Class Show.

The Famous Gentry Show enjoys the distinction of being a first class exhibition in every sense of the word. From the special train that transports the property, animals and employes to the smallest detail, every thing about the Gentry Show is first class. The performance and parade are all new for this year and it is promised that the entertainment furnished by the animal actors is more interesting than ever before. This is the seventh year of the Gentry Show, and during that time the performance has continually been perfected until this year's program contains all that is best in the amusement line.

The management of the Gentry Shows makes strong appeal to take care of the children and the little folks are perfectly sure to attend the Gentry Show unaccompanied by parents as the show has a corps of others who's expected duty is look out for the little folks and to see to their comfort in every manner. The performances will be given rain or shine as the canvas is thoroughly waterproof and the show is given in the entirety at every place of exhibition. The date in this city is Friday August 2nd.

Summary of the New Road Law.

Commissioner Earle in the Hastings Banner has the following to say of the new road law.

"I will give you a summary of what the legislature did, and if they had not done another thing but pass the good road laws that they have, they would have merited praise instead of censure.

"Repealed the wide tire rebate law. It is supposed that at this stage of enlightenment everybody knows better than to buy a narrow tired wagon anyway, and only a few were stingy enough to want a rebate, but the law was passed just to guard against that few.

"Amended the township bond law so that a township can now bond for roads and bridges if sixty per cent of the voters, voting vote aye to do.

"Amend the law pertaining to commissioners duties so that now the township highway commissioner can do any job if it meets the approval of the township board, without asking for bids or making any contracts, that does not cost more than $200.

"Amended county road law so that it is now constitutional, and so the back townships can build roads, provided the county road commissioners do not build, and can collect county aid as well as state aid, also amended it so that the county board of supervisors can say how many road commissioners there shall be, what they shall be paid, and what roads they shall build.

"Repealed good road district laws, which allow less than the whole county to work under the county road law, that is, any combination of townships, villages and cities can join in building good roads in such district, under the county road law. Levying a tax on all the property for the purpose of building the leading roads of gravel or stone.

"Cash road tax law, which does away with road districts in a township and does away with pathmasters and the plank road with plank. All taxes will be collected in cash by the township treasurer. Two road taxes, one to be over one half of one per cent, one road repair tax, which fund must be expended on the roads benefiting the property taxed; the second a highway improvement tax, which

MAYNE ON DIVORCES.

The Judge Has Sensible Ideas About This Phase of Court Decrees.

Judge Frederick W. Mayne has made it a rule for the past year in granting a decree for divorce upon the Traverse City docket, to continue for a certain period the remarrying of the divorced persons, the respondent, or one who is in the wrong, being restricted for a longer period than the injured party.

"The object of restricting divorced persons from remarrying within a given time is this," said the judge to a Daily Eagle reporter. "Many divorces are commenced by a sort of collusion, in individuals, between the parties, the innocent party making a case and obtaining a decree, which frees both parties, each of whom may remarry.

"In order that the guilty party may not profit by a decree, I have made it a rule to restrict the remarrying of divorced persons for a period of from six days to a year. This is done in order that a husband may not murder his wife, or a wife her husband, for the sake of being freed in order to remarry immediately.

"Many excuses are presented to me by divorced parties, asking me to modify the ruling. Recently a man came to me and said he wished to remarry immediately, as he was without a housekeeper and could not get along without his services."

INCORPORATED

The Charlevoix Rustic Co. Adds to its Capital and Will Enlarge.

Articles of incorporation for the Charlevoix Rustic Co., were received last Friday, and that unique and progressive industry takes its third greater industrial dignity and more capital.

It is the same industry and Dunore Co. founded by the renowned "Horse man" John A. Lyon. In under the one name and style, Mr Lyon had already made the enterprise a remunerative industry, but, tailored to meet the production, the organization is so extent that was available, but demand increased so far beyond supply, that more capital is now necessary. Hence the incorporation and increased capital.

The officers of the new corporation are President, John A. Lyon; vice president, Thos Vattow; secretary and treasurer, F. E. Torrell, traveling representative, John G. A. Turnbull.

Mr. Turnbull travels from the rocky mountains to the Atlantic and they are coming in that order up into the thousands of dollars. He says the demand the plant will be turned to its capacity, and Mr. Torrell tells us it is the concern confidently expects to employ 100 hands within eighteen months. The demand is already being gradually increased.

The Rustic Co. occupies a field of industrial endeavor that appeals to the inherent love of nature with which most people are endowed. Its products are "rustic" yet attractive and beautiful. The crooked, knotted cedar limb seat, the birch bark tepee, the fork and twig perch baskets, the sweet grass articles, and the Dunore and one unique and useful creations that are the fruit of Johnny Lyon's fertile brain.

The field is wide and the demand steady and stable for these goods, and the promising feature of it is that new fields and new creations are continually being evolved. At present the company is turning down orders owing to its inability to manufacture up to the limit. This will be overcome as rapidly as possible. Mr. Turnbull is in the field, Johnny is at the block, and men are in the woods and swamps securing raw material for transformation into marketable goods.

All concerned in this enterprise are determined to push it to the utmost limit.

Northport Leader. The date of the Indian Championship this year is August 17 and including the 18. The plans are for meetings, sports and definite announcement will be made later. They will be some different than last year—the most of the speakers will be Indians except some special services on Sunday by white men. The matter is in charge of Rev. Mr. Maynard and Freeville Bible Ferguson.

OUR CUBAN LETTER

Miss Jillings Writes the Sentinel Interestingly from the Gem Island.

Havana, Cuba, July 20th, 1907.

My dear companion of Havana: will better forget. We have now been in the city over four weeks and the sensations of that eventful evening remain a vivid picture in my memory. It was St. John's eve, when the Cubans celebrate by the feast of bonfires" and as I think of it now I do not believe I ever saw a more beautiful night than the way Havana looked that evening. At first the great wavering light of Morro Castle was the only one which could be distinguished and then as we came nearer a fairy city of myriads of twinkling lights suddenly appeared as if by magic. All along the harbor and far up into the city these lights were so many and so sparkling that I can think they must be twelve miles then as we approached closer they became more steady and we could see the strange combination of immense bonfires burning high into the air like houses on fire. We next passed the great walls of Morro and the low pink and white Cabaña and soon lanterns began to come out, so soon in fact that almost before we knew it we had been welcomed by our friends and were driving through the quaint streets of one of the most beautiful old cities in the world. I received only a very confused idea of that city that night it being very late, but I remember well that the ideas I had formed unfortunately were in no way adequate to the reality. Viewing the city by day its aspect is quite different from that of night when it is a world of light, gayety and beauty, at day a great busy city. I think that one reason perhaps for this difference is that the better class of Cubans never leave their homes until evening. I was very much surprised to find Havana such a foreign city it has been said that when you have visited in you have visited Spain. The buildings are of white stone colored with tints of pink, lilac and purple which in the tropical light gives a wonderfully pleasing effect. They are fashioned after a peculiar line of architecture, all having flat inclined roofs on which we are allowed to sit in the cool of the evening. Taking a walk down into the city a very noticeable feature is the narrowness of the streets, which are similar to really canyons, the car lately touching the little stone walk on one side, which are about half as wide as an ordinary sidewalk, and with just enough room on the other for a carriage to pass. The principal shopping street are Obispo, San Ingnacio and O'Reilly, the latter being named after an Irish gentleman, and all of which have wooden sidewalks. Although the outdoor are the true bars which are placed before every door and window, and as you pass you see the people lounging there at ease, picture coffee, Havana is also a most Bibotic city, one of good drive here is from a certain point thoroughfare you can see the old gray cathedral with its mossy green bell where the Liners of Columbus tolled for mass a long year. Then there is the Punea, the very oldest fort, where it is said Queen Isabella sailed this island while her husband was perhaps far away discovering the Mississippi, also the Tombs and Pillorge such with its mark of age and all of which are very interesting to visit. A most wonderful sight is to drive down on the Malecon, Sunday or Thursday evening where the band gives a concert in a tiny Greek temple and all the wealthy people come to walk and drive. There are many beautiful country roads leading out of Havana and it is a great pleasure on a cool evening to drive on one when you can see the Cuban landscape in all of its exquisiteness. On one side of the road high hills of that verdant greenness peculiar to the tropics with often a tiny ranchos where a quiet river flows through jungle like banks, the home of the chameleon, on the other side, low rich country where the palms stand their contours on the clear blue of the sky and where even the trees peate leaf out. The Cuban people as a class are very strange and they have some customs which seem queer to us. For instance a girl of the better class is not allowed to go anywhere alone accompanied by her relatives and consequently has no independence and is quite ignorant. They never think of going out and taking some good healthy pleasure but simply amuse themselves by waiting up and down outside the gate. When a stranger comes up they do two lots

CHAPTER XXII.—(Continued.)

The boy, who is five eighths of Hawkes, has entered his school with a fearful hatred of masters and trained in a free and easy fashion, and he knows what he wants of most of that latter his size all girls, and rules accordingly. He knows he is worth half Hawkes himself in money, and he knows what he can do with it. There is private blood in his veins, and he is proud of it, and he despises the dusty people around him who are not gentlemen, except when the spirit gets up in them and they are gentlemen.

"Dagnall" and Zeph were an odd foreign player, and he had taken a fancy to him for a week past. "The good Prince and I make a rude letter on you, Tom, if you will wait. We will wait. That is two little people."

"Come in this way," said the boy's ideal, turn to a side door and up a back stair to "Mr. Zeno?" he cried, and thumped out from behind the door with a bang.

The two crowed and scuttled with a startled laugh and a quick look, and then drawn back and again, with the fingers twinkling. The boy had taken frightened at somebody, and O'Rourke is a boy impelled adored the age to the star-bed and dragged his little friend after him, like tightening on his lower parlors and around there and he was an ever-ready sergeant on O'Rourke. The parlors drop and his school-fellow and O'Rourke stare as he was, he had never been a coward in his life.

He planted at Pious, and saw that "Dagnall" was a little pale, and "Zeph" looks well with a few quite pleasantly in terror, and he knew that he was the cause of his health. "Mr. Zeno, Professor O'Rourke, as his school-mate, Tom Hawkes."

Mr. Zeno, Professor O'Rourke, as his fellow-student, Tom Hawkes." He sat down and took the little man's hand, and looked into him into the parlours for the Prince. "Tom Hawkes, Professor O'Rourke, Professor Dagnall." He sat down and took the little man's hand, and looked into him into the parlours for Mr. Zeno? Mr. Zeno is a man, and

Press Correspondent New York State Grange.

ULYSSES E. DODGE.

Master at the First Grange Organized in New York State.

We take pleasure in presenting herewith a portrait of U. E. Dodge, of Ithaca, N. Y., who nearly forty years ago assisted in the organization of the first Grange established in New York State. He was a member of the committee appointed by the Pomona Grange of Tompkins county, with power to act, to organize a Grange in any town in the county desiring it, and was one of the lecturers at the first Grange meeting held in the town of Ithaca, which was the 12th Grange organized in the county, and from the Ithaca Journal of Dec. 3, 1873, we learn that he was one of the speakers at the Grange Pomona held in the town of Dryden, Dec. 2, 1873. He was also one of the lecturers at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ulysses, Dec. 9, 1873, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Newfield, Dec. 16, 1873, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ithaca, Dec. 23, 1873, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Enfield, Jan. 6, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Dryden, Jan. 13, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ulysses, Jan. 20, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Newfield, Jan. 27, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ithaca, Feb. 3, 1874. He was also one of the lecturers at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Dryden, Feb. 10, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ulysses, Feb. 17, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Newfield, Feb. 24, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ithaca, March 3, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Dryden, March 10, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ulysses, March 17, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Newfield, March 24, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ithaca, March 31, 1874. He was also one of the lecturers at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Dryden, April 7, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ulysses, April 14, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Newfield, April 21, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ithaca, April 28, 1874. He was also one of the lecturers at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Dryden, May 5, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ulysses, May 12, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Newfield, May 19, 1874, and at the Pomona Grange held in the town of Ithaca, May 26, 1874. NIP A CUBAN REVOLT.

AMERICANS MAKE SHORT WORK OF INCIPIENT REBELLION.

Parties Find American Sentiment Cheering Once Pulse and Think They Intend to Stay—Twelve Men Drown in River.

Dispatches have just leaked out of a projected uprising in Havana, Cuba, which possibly gave Gen. Funston some anxious hours. At the palace conference between a number of wealthy men the chief of police, Colonel Ruiz, and the officers of the Havana garrison, it was agreed that the time for the revolution, and larger control from the mainland, had been started and preparations made for the fighting. The Spanish officers declared on account of the Maceo affair, which was now fanned into a flame, they could not count on the support of the Spanish troops in the event of a revolution, and that the Cuban troops would be with the insurgents. The conference broke up without any definite action being taken.

Meanwhile the Cuban leaders had been in communication with the Cuban colony in Tampa, Fla., and had received assurances that the moment the revolution started the Cuban colony would come to the island in force and join the insurgents. The Cuban colony in Tampa is said to be very wealthy and to have a large number of men who have served in the Cuban army. The Cuban leaders had also been in communication with the Cuban colony in Mexico, and had received assurances that the moment the revolution started the Cuban colony would come to the island in force and join the insurgents. THE ELECTRIC SHORE ROAD.

The Project Taking on New Life, and Now Looks Like Business.

From The Traverse City Record.

If the people of Traverse City and vicinity desire to make an investment in a reliable and substantial street railway and interurban project, the opportunity is now forthcoming.

At the meeting of the board of directors of the board of trade, yesterday, M. S. Sanders, chairman of the transportation committee, submitted a report which is given herewith in full. The report explains itself and will be read with interest. The Carter Construction Company of Chicago, proposes to build a street railway and interurban from here to Elk Rapids immediately and on to Petoskey next year or even soon thereafter. The proposition is to construct a street railway in the city and interurban to Elk Rapids this fall, and if proper encouragement is given, they will be ready to put in unknown money to build the line immediately.

As an evidence of faith in Traverse City and vicinity as an improvement of this kind, they ask that bonds be taken by local parties which would be first mortgage bonds bearing 5 per cent interest with the interest guaranteed. These funds will be deposited in the Traverse City State bank until the railroad is in operation, thereby affording absolute security to those who invest. The report of the transportation committee was received and filed by the board of directors yesterday, and work will be commenced immediately upon the prospectus.

The council will be asked for a franchise which will give Traverse city first class street car service and afford connection by rapid transit to Elk Rapids. The proposition is to run street cars at frequent intervals in the city and connect with the Elk Rapids line, over which cars will be run each way every hour. This is an important project and the press has been asked by the board of trade to give publicity to the enterprise."

The substance of the report of the transportation committee to the Traverse City board of trade is as follows:

"Immediately after the granting of the franchise, charters will be obtained for the Street Railway Co., in this city, and the Interurban and Freight Railway to operate from Traverse City to Petoskey.

The proposition before us is roughly outlined, is as follows: The Carter Construction Co. proposed to construct and put in immediate operation upon the streets of Traverse City a street car system operating approximately eight miles of track.

This road to be of a heavy section of rail, with the most up to date equipment.

This local road will contribute the bulk of a future system of interurban railway, which will develop as fast as the demands of our district and the wealth of our country permit.

Simultaneous with the building of the city line, it is proposed to build a freight and interurban line from here to Elk Rapids.

It is not deemed advisable to plan more than this, before winter. The further development in the spring will be governed by the conditions then surrounding us.

The Carter Construction Co. work entirely with their own capital, and in an organization promoted and sustained by capitalists, to furnish a working organization through which to invest their money.

The Carter Construction Co., like all other organizations, would not feel justified in tying up in a community nearly one million dollars this fall, and two or three million later, unless there was sufficient local interest taken in the proposition so that it would not be regarded as entirely a foreign corporation.

Whether this railroad is built now or not at all, by these people, depends entirely upon their receiving sufficient local support to make them feel safe and know the local interest is large enough to prevent any unjust discrimination against them.

In exchange for the local financial interest, they propose to give the people of Grand Traverse region a first mortgage 5 per cent bond upon the railroad.

This means that whatever money we contribute is invested in our district and that we hold a first mortgage on this investment.

A prospectus will be issued stating the proposition in detail, explaining the bonds and the terms under which they will carry on the work; and this prospectus will be distributed to the people of our community.

I am assured by these gentlemen that as soon as a sufficient amount of these bonds have been subscribed to make it a safe proposition for them as above stated, work will be immediately started.

I am authorized by the Hannah & Lay interests, whom I represent, to state that they will head the subscription list for the bonds with a liberal amount, which amount I will be at liberty to make public simultaneous with the issuing of the prospectus."

town houses and then the Cuba soldiers will go home to stay—if there until the storm is over. They also have an instinctive dread of moonlight and last evening a moderately bright night at 10:00 we were surprised to see a woman step off a car and immediately raise her white parasol. It is a difficult place to be religious in as the people pay very little attention to it, the men going to church only three times in their lives at their christening, marriage and death. In a few words they are simple grown up children and I do not think capable of, following themselves. Havana has a population of nearly two millions of which sixty per cent are blacks. The Medical Department of the United states army have done much to make it the healthy and delightful place that it now is and because of this it is fast becoming a most popular resort not only for winter but likewise for summer.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Judge McHale is home in Petoskey from a trip around the world. He is a circuit court judge in the northern part of the Philippine islands.

Cheboygan Tribune: M. J. Lyle of the New Central Hotel, who has recently returned from a business trip to the north, purchased the McGulpin lighthouse property while away. This lighthouse has been dismantled recently by the government and put out of commission, the property being put up for auction, where Mr. Lyle secured the title. This property is situated about two miles west of Mackinaw City on a high bluff overlooking lake Michigan. The lighthouse was built in 1868 by the government but is still in first class condition "sayin its age." It is built of red brick and presents a very pretty appearance, making an almost ideal place for a summer residence.

The Limit of Life.

The most eminent medical scientists are unanimous in the conclusion that the generally accepted limitation of human life is many years below the attainment justifiable with the advanced knowledge of which the race is now possessed. The critical period, that determines its duration, seems to be between 50 and 60; the proper care of the body during this decade cannot be too strongly urged; carelessness then being fatal to longevity. Nature's best helper after 50 is Electric Bitters, the scientific tonic medicine that revitalizes every organ of the body. Guaranteed by P. G. Hines & Co. Druggist. 50c.

FROM KEY WEST

Rector G. T. Stout Writes Interestingly From His New Home

Key West, Fla., July 29, 1907.

Dear Sentinel's Service:

Inclosed I send you a description of the fast Cuban R. R. being built across the ocean and keys, which may be of interest to you.

I can hardly realize that your summer has practically only begun, while here we have been having the southern summer since March and before that a good average northern summer. The heat in Key West is nearly as great as in other parts of the South, or in the North during the "hot spells." Week after week the temperature ranges from 85 degrees to 95 degrees, occasionally 90 degrees. It has not been over that this year. And generally we have a breeze from the water that enables one to be very comfortable in the shade. The direct rays of the sun are intense and yet heat prostrations are very rare. Men, white and black that are accustomed to it, work out all day and seem to experience no ill effects.

We have a very cosmopolitan population, about one-third Cubans one third negroes and one third white. This for general classification. In reality we have a great variety of shades. The negroes are mostly from the Bahama Islands and quite different from the real Southern negro in many ways. The Cubans work in the cigar factories and the Whites hold the job. There is a great deal of wealth on the island inherited from the days where the principal occupation of the inhabitants was "wrecking." There are also traditions of pirates infesting these Keys and not over scrupulous as to what became of the crews of wrecked vessels. Some of these pirates are said to have refitted when Uncle Sam's gun boats gotten their trail too closely and became citizens of some of these Keys. Anyhow, vast quantities of valuable merchandise that cost the poor sewers nothing was sold at an immense profit. The currents and swift tides around these reefs and shoals make navigation a hazardous thing until the government with numerous light houses and buoys gave greater safety and also discouraged the habit that some people had of placing false beacons and so luring innocent mariners into their doom.

It is said that some of the people seeing their means of living about to receive a set back petitioned the government not to erect more light houses of such frequent intervals because it interfered with their business. Certainly a very cheerfulness practical way of looking at this game of death. Yet even now with all precautions there are enough wrecks on the reefs to keep wrecking schooners on the alert. Some of these are designed to not very valuable cargo with insurance plays queer pranks with the eyes and judgment of the Captain. We find the people most kind. Our church relations are of the most pleasant character. St. Paul church property covers about half a block and Rectory has delightful surroundings. Besides St. Paul we have another parish for the white people and two churches for the colored people. Attached to one of these is a school for negro and Cuban children.

Nature has done all she could to make this key a Sanitarium. Sea breezes from every quarter keep the air pure and life giving. We see the Cuban question at close range and very few people show here have any idea that our troops can ever be withdrawn from Cuba. While there are some intelligent and able men among them, the large part of the population is of mixed blood, ignorant, excitable, superficial in thought and habit of life, too ably balanced mentally and morally to consider any question on its merits and as incapable of self government as a lot of spoiled children. "Cuba Libra" is a high sounding phrase without any substantial foundation. The vast business interests of Americans and Europeans in Cuba will demand a stable government. Mch. Sheet has gone north and is visiting friends at Newburgh and Washburn in the Hudson River, after which he is to Traverse City during August and September. I am delighted with my vacation, quite long enough to add a world of brain tissue to retooling. Continually there is an overlasting amazement about the ignorance that today has your remote corner slightly misinformed.

There are here number in Northern Michigan, in the summer months, more or less, to lay West would make an ideal combination. Our last storm as we could of hailstones large as an orange in the south it was not half had in the storm out in the Indian are from the Gulf stream, dates and windows wide open. It did not seem as if it could be cold anywhere. Remember me kindly to to friends who though separated by many leagues from us are yet warmly thought of and remembered.

Yours Sincerely,

CHARLES T. STOUT.

"A Fool Law."

From the Traverse City Record.

The Washington correspondent of the Grand Rapids Press writing on the change in the Michigan game law, now applying the season fifteen days earlier and closing it on August 31 instead of September 1, states that the experts in Washington have the charge a "fool law" and the letter men up in this territory are inclined to agree with the experts in Washington.

By opening the season earlier, the law takes right in the middle of the spawning season when they are mostly caught and easy meanwhile so final. In addition to this, in this region, the weather is sometimes very cool, disagreeable in April the season for high and fishing is no pleasure in fishing. But what is more important, by taking full darling their spawning period, the streams are more rapidly depleted.

As for closing the season on the bright of August, there is not a decent piece of fish fully in the new law the men who frequent the streams with a pole and line. Where the idea was in changing the season is not known and probably never will be, but it was somebody's whim and must through.

There was plenty of real work, work that would have done some good, that could have been done on the game laws, but the legislature in its wisdom didn't see fit to do it.

As this is an special on the game laws of Northern Michigan, we will say nothing about the territory, fish-spawn and polgamy in extending the opening bidding of the game law. This is as bad as the fish law if not worse.

Council Proceedings.

At the last Monday's council meeting the special assessment roll of the Bloom street sewer was approved.

A. S. Dougherty was granted permission to build a cement walk front ing his Bridge street property.

It was ordered that 16 feet alley be opened between the Central school lots and the property owned by Elmer Johnson.

The Boston cost subscriptions for the Aug. 14th primary appointed as follows: 1st ward, W. E. Hampton, 2. Meriham, Hollie Lewis, A. J. Hunter, 21 ward, Chas. Gulbier, 3. Cameron; John Cook, W. R. Woodley.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

East Jordan Enterprise: Richard Gidley, father of Jas. Gidley of this place, died at his home on the West side, Wednesday morning, July 24, after many months of suffering from paralysis of the throat. Mr. Gidley was born at Egg Harbor, Door County, Wis., England, April 15, 1837, being 70 years, 3 months and 10 days old at the time of his death. He came to America when but ten years old, and grew to manhood in Canada. In 1874 he came to the United States, settling first in Nebraska, where he remained a little over 22 years, and then came Michigan, locating at Eastport, where he engaged in the lumber business, from Eastport he came to East Jordan in 1902.

Disastrous Fire at Walloon Lake

At 3 o'clock Monday morning a fire started in the rear of William H Bateson's store of Gaulbee at Walloon Lake, that morning, which proved to be the most disastrous catastrophe of its kind ever known in the history of that beautiful resort near the Petoskey Vista. Starting in the rear of the pretentious building and spreading like the monstrous monstrilidae from all the western prairies it consumed and absolutely destroyed everything afloat in forty grasp. First the structure had started upon its flaming career, Gaulbee's large department store caught and, like a clothes bag, it was in a blaze. Flames took advantage of the scattered earth a thing of ashes. Then turned the fiendish demon of fire and leap to the depot three rights out, which was in the rear of Bateson's. Simultaneous with the terrible flames of the depot the inflammatory store belonging to Fred Shepard became a victim of the ever consuming flames, it turning to the very ground. Not satisfied with the portentous destruction of that splendid edifice the flames swept across the road, consuming in its fiery wrath, the several buildings owned and occupied by T. L. Belding, among which were a restaurant, a boat house and a temporal home. Thus in but a few brief hours the red billows of fire exhausted as their victims the entire business district of Walloon Lake, leaving nothing but smoking ill smelling ashes as a remembrance of their fatal, unbridled start.

Death of W. J. McGeagh.

William John McGeagh, one of the earliest pioneers of this section, died at his home in this city, Saturday, of paralysis, aged 79 years.

Mr. McGeagh had been in poor health the past year or more, but his death was entirely unexpected. He was out on his farm in Norwood township on Thursday, and, as was his custom, and retired on a couch for an afternoon nap. His daughter heard a groan, and upon going to the room, found him on the floor unconscious. Consciousness did not return and he died Saturday evening.

Deceased located in Norwood township in 1866, and cleared up a farm, which has ranked as one of the best in that township. For many years he owned and operated a custom saw and grist mill, on "McGeagh's creek," adjoining his farm. He leaves a wife, two sons and two daughters—James, of Charlevoix, Wm A of Hillsdale, Mrs. Fred Glover and Mrs. Sherman Morse, of Charlevoix.

William J. McGeagh was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, on March 1st, 1828. He was the son of James and Elizabeth McMillan McGeagh of Aberdeenshire, Scotland. He remained under the paternal roof until the age of 21 years, he entered upon an apprenticeship to learn milling, he soon became skilled in the trade and realized in its return to market his own was in the world, without difficulty.

During the civil war he traveled all through the Southern states as a Government contractor, repairing railroads.

After the war he came to Northern Michigan, after his arrival he secured a homestead in section 18, Norwood township, Charlevoix County, and remained in the county in the County of Charlevoix, where he still remains in the family. On Oct. 1st, 1868 occurred the marriage of Mr. McGeagh and Miss Esther E. Bailey at Pickering Ont.

—Mrs. Harriman Bedford returned home from North Dakota Saturday.

—"The Moonshiner's Daughter" is the title of a successful melodrama which has been meeting with great favor the last five years and which will be seen at the Charlevoix Theatre next Monday night Aug. 12. There is a pretty love story slowly woven throughout the play depicting the adventures of the Moonshiners in a most realistic and thrilling manner. Interpreted by the famous Hatfield Tyler feud of Kentucky and Tennessee are shown in a vividly true manner. A cast of no little skill and the fight that follows between the Moonshiners and Revenue Men is another feature. A number of clever specialties are introduced many of them direct from the leading vaudeville theatres of the country.

THE GIRL WITH A MILLION

By D. C. Murray

"Dear me! I'm very sorry, I'm sure," said Mrs. Jolly, in her blandest tones, for she had not the slightest idea that her husband had gone into the business at all, and had imagined he was just the man to make a good thing out of it. "Very sorry indeed! I hope it isn't anything very serious."

"It's not, I hope, Mrs. Jolly, it's not, I hope," said Dodgeleg, quietly. "Only a little business, you know."

"It is the softest, most delicious cup of coffee I ever drank," said Mrs. Jolly, sipping the fragrant beverage, and thinking, as she spoke, how well and good-looking Dodgeleg looked, and how well and good he was to her.

"Yes," said he, in his turn, "it is very good coffee, I think, and very refreshing. I'm glad you like it."

"Yes," said Mrs. Jolly, with a little sigh, "I do like it very much indeed. It reminds me of—of—of—

IS DANGER AHEAD

SIGNS POINT TO NEED OF CAUTION AND CONSERVATISM.

Crop Shortages in Wheat, Corn and Cotton, Coupled with Increased Imports of Foreign Goods Might Easily Precipitate Conditions Productive of Financial Disturbance.

At a time when the editorial columns of Republican newspapers are filled with appeals for immediate and radical tariff revision downward, and when an association of American manufacturers pauses by an over-whelming vote conditioning calling for immediate tariff revision and recommending, instead, a qualifying to read to the Iron Mouse Capital of about 1900 a sober, sensible review of the industrial and commercial conditions which prevail at this time, to gather with a look ahead at conditions and consequences toward which the trend of the times was plainly tending. The Capital note danger ahead for American labor and industry, even though the Dingley tariff should be let alone for a considerable long of time. It sees in our rapidly increasing imports of competitive goods now coming in at the rate of $600,000,000 a year proof that the Dingley duty has become ineffective in securing cost the field of origins for home goods which is leading upon our shores. The evidences which the Capital produces in support of its contention that, whatever we do with our tariff, we could not to revise it sufficiently to be dismantled by foreign

Highest discrimination in freight rates, whereby imports are carried much cheaper, relatively to interior points in the United States at lower rates than domestic goods are required to pay from factories to consuming points within our own country, are mentioned by the Capital as contributing to the tariff's undermining of the Dingley law which would seem to a small fraction of the tariffs which American producers have hitherto supposed the Dingley duty exists in a small fraction of the tariffs which American producers have hitherto supposed the Dingley duty exists in a small fraction of the tariffs which American producers have hitherto supposed the Dingley duty exists in a small fraction of Such are the conditions which the Capital brings into notice as threatening at each end of the supremacy of American trade goods in the home and market. Not even a nearly trade balance of half a billion dollars will serve as an offset to the threatening conditions already vented. With a large office of competitive imports, coupled with the raw materials and partly manufactured articles which our tariff has done at all or else a very light tariff, it would take and the Capital has a single year failure to turn the tables, cause heavy shipments of gold, and convince the country with plain "All roads are half fulfilling trade balances, wages wiped out by regular fixed charges such as interest and dividends on foreign investments in the United States, foreign freight carriers, foreign consumption, to probably $200,000,000, $100,000,000 or so of the country left about such a year for our tourists, and perhaps an other $100,000,000 sent abroad each year to steady relatives or prospective American wage earners. All these items foot up a sum which must even to wipe out our half-billion trade balance.

Such are the facts and conditions and the outlook which prompt the Capital to sound its note of warning against rash and ill-advised interference with the present tariff system through a downward revision of schedules. The solution suggested is a tariff commission, preferably composed in such an expectation as this on the part of intelligent Republican newspapers like the New Mexican Capital there is some hope that the cause for tariff disturbance and all the shortcomings complained must be checked by other measures than. It will and do to use due, either the conditions actual or the possible consequences impending all. In clamoring for a non-partisan tariff commission the association is wagering its breath and feel has given its time. There is not the remotest possibility that the plan will be carried into effect. First, because impartiality is a tariff commission plan is impossible. It doesn't exist, and cannot exist. Second, because congress does not want and will not have a tariff commission. If made a party question by the Republicans the Democrats would be against it. If made a party question by the Democrats the Republicans would vote it down. In view of all the conditions present and prospective, it would seem that if ever there was a time when level-headed newspapers and supposedly level-headed bodies of business men should not decline in favor of tariff reduction, that time is now.

SEEMS ERA OF MAKESHIFTS.

After That with Germany, One is Promised with France.

According to an apparently official dispatch from Washington it has been decided not to send to France a commission of tariff experts.

"This decision was reached after considerations of the material difference that exists between the tariff situation as to France and as to Germany. In the case of France a complete reciprocity treaty has been drafted, but failed of approval in the senate. The purpose of the tariff consultation sent to Germany and to the provinces what already had been done for France namely arrange a basis for a treaty. In the view of the state department the French senate has long shown that coached by cinnamon, so far as a tariff agreement is concerned. As the affirmative process of and of these agreements rests with the senate, it is not permitted to the officials now any light could be thrown on the attitude of that body in sending a tariff commission to Paris."

So the real purpose of the commission sent to Germany was to arrange a basis for reciprocity with France if the present nullification of an act of congress is only intended as a temporary makeshift, and worse to yet to come, provided our gifted state department can force it through congress. As it promises to be a long time before this can be accomplished it is to be inferred that the makeshift will have quite extended duration. The same being true as to any possible reciprocity treaty with France a similar makeshift will have to be resorted to that country—a similar nullification of law in favor of French moderations. They will come other numerous makeshifts in favor of other countries. No doubt owing to a failure to have gone a lot of fun with the American tariff system before his course of office expires.

WOULD LIKE TO HAND HIM A LEMON.

A Lesson in Wool.

Recent press dispatches from Helena, Mont., state:

The largest individual wool clip grown in the American continent was shipped from Billings, this state, to Boston wool firm. The clip weighed a million and a half pounds, and 41 cars were required to carry it. The owner refused an offer of 24 cents a pound for the wool.

It is safe to say that the sheep owner of Billings, Mont., who handed this little package of wool is a moneyed man.

It is safe to assert that he is not in favor of revising the tariff downward.

If he told in the above business a few years ago, when the Wilson-Gorman tariff was falling in its work on the American farmer, he probably regretted what a time he had selling his wool for enough to cover the cost of shearing.

Ten years ago this man would not have refused 24 cents a pound for wool in the hope of getting more. He would have thought the buyer who offered him 24 cents, or anything like it, was crazy as a bum—and he would have been.

But it is different now. If there is anybody in this country who has made money since the Dingley law went into effect, it is the wool grower. He can afford to stick up his nose at 24 cents a pound, for he can do better.

It is all right to talk "world-wide competition" to the man who wants protection removed from every living thing but his own, but the wool grower is not that man. He is prospering and willing that others should prosper. The Fosses and Douglasses must learn a lesson from him if they were so minded.—Des Moines Capital.

Sense and Nonsense.

Said Gen. William F. Draper, in a letter quoted at the meeting of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers:

"I know that if the tariff is reduced in some lines it will either stop business or cause wage reductions."

On the same occasion Mr. J. L. Tattersall, a writer from England, assured his hearers that England doesn't desire the United States to change its tariff, "for this would make her a serious commercial rival."

The difference between these two expressions consists in the fact that one of the gentlemen was talking of what he absolutely knew when he said that in some lines tariff reduction would affect adversely their corporate wage reductions, and the other gentleman was "talking through his hat." Ten years of the Dingley tariff have cost British industrial rivalry a billion dollars in lost sales of British goods.

Yet England, the island be sorry to have such a tariff is moved! Tell that to the marines!

Dr. Lofquist's Drugless Treatment

SURE CURE FOR THE SICK.

Dr. O. J. Lofquist, of Grand Rapids, arrived in Charlevoix last week for a summer vacation, and can be seen at the Clinton house, from 9 to 11:30 a. m., week days.

He is at the head of the Lofquist & Blue Institute of Natural Healing. He is possessor of the drugless system called Chiropractic, and is known for the wonderful cures he has made all over the state. He has cured people when given up to die by the most noted physicians. Dr. Lofquist's Drugless System is the only known system which removes the cause of sickness and gives nature a chance to do its work, which is a guarantee of good health. If your ailments are not incurable they can be removed in a few treatments and thereby prevent a gradual creeping on to chronic disease.

It is wort while to investigate and talk to the Dr. and get acquainted with his wonderful method since it you do not want to take the treatment, which is miraculous in effect on all. It is the quickest, most effective and painless system on earth.

If you have any of the following ailments do not delay to see Dr. Lofquist, who is competent to remove the cause which is a guarantee for restoring health.

Abscess	Indigestion

TREATY IS DESIRED.

FRANCE MAKES EXTENSION SO THAT AGREEMENT MAY COME

Important Obstacle to Tariff Negotiations with United States Is Now Removed—Much Wine This Country Is Permitted Land for Duty.

When this item characterized as the one obstacle in the way of consummation of negotiations between France and the United States it appeared to the tariff law been removed. France having decided that United States should be the favored nation Aug. 1 to 31 of the year, the duties on the goods, wines and the minimum duty on coffee from Brazil there ceased to take effect. France makes it clear that she considers this concession to be equivalent to the United States conceding her the minimum duty on coffee, which the United States can choose but poorly as she did in months, and good will on the part and on the part of the United States that the negotiations open the prospect of being concluded in short order. Tuesday ambassador at Washington, who went home to see the negotiations were proceed without Ambassador Jusserand, who has been here for months, because he thought it wise to be on hand in France when the negotiations were being conducted. Ambassador Jusserand will be back in Washington in a few days, to take up the negotiations with the Taft administration.

FIRE COSTS MEMPHIS $600,000

Cold Storage Plant and Big Grocery Houses Are Destroyed.

In an early morning fire in Memphis, Saturday, the cold storage plant of the Memphis Cold Storage Company burned down, while adjacent to it the wholesale grocery houses of Anderson-Tully company and Joseph Hawkes, a Memphis jobber, and two others were seriously damaged. The loss aggregates $600,000, the following buildings were destroyed: The Home Fruit Company, Memphis Paper Company and the Memphis Cracker Company. The insurance will probably amount to enough to construct all the buildings of the fire.

GINES FIGHT FOUR ROUNDS.

Young Women Pummel Each Other Until Police Interference.

Miss Lulu Crawford, a well-known belle, resides in Delaware, Ohio, and Miss Gussie Adams, a newspaper, fought a four-round contest in a back room of the office starting in the presence of a number of prominent men and women. The fight lasted for two minutes and both women had been at "work" for a long time, and decided to settle their quarrel by Marquis of Queensbury rules. Both are of athletic build, and have devoted much time to physical culture and gymnastics. Efforts were made to the friends of the girls just before they entered the ring to have them stopped, but it was too late. Miss Gussie Adams got the best of the fight, and gave Miss Crawford a black eye and other injuries. The fight was brought near the city limits in a twenty mile horse race and all conveyed the being used for racing in the states. It was in fact just the fight, but police interference was feared, as a farmer was seen approaching carrying a shotgun. The police, however, a warrant was about town, called the fight off and dispersed all concerned. The women showed considerable disinclination during the fight to be separated, and it was the first blood and served a clean knockdown in the third round. Miss Lulu Crawford is the South wears furs and plantation workers and quarrelsome for its short handed sport. From the Hyde Journal.

We and our fathers have passed through the trials and vicissitudes of elections during seventy years of Statehood. The fundamental training of our political system have been our respect for the authority and laws of our Government and our duties enjoined in the spirit of true liberty and the manhood right to make new or alter the Constitution of our Government as occasion and necessity compel us

Heretofore our elections have been filled with the filthiest jealousy and animosity, the result of party strife, a spirit which in an elective form of government like ours should be discouraged, and the persons to wield ore and qualifications of the men and not his party should be considered.

We now approach an election which is of more vital importance to us as citizens than any since our admission as a state several years ago. It is an election where the candidate should represent the highest intelligence, virtue and morality of the district which he represents, a successful business man, that his pressure may carry with it a feeling of strength and security that will enhance the public credit. And lastly, a man whose duty-acts are guided by an exalted idea of justice and honesty-knowing that we may know there is no class hatred there, even though his party affiliations may not be the same, and that we may be confident that the integrity and integrity of our State and sovereign government will not be sacrificed for selfish or political advancement.

Charlevoix County has such a man, and presents as a candidate for delegate to the Constitutional Convention, Mr. L. F. Knowles. A man who in every way represents the above qualifications; a man who has been an active republican but who has never been an office seeker; who is a man whom we have the utmost confidence, where honesty, integrity and virtue is unquestionable, who is a successful business man as well as a practitioner of law. A man whose ambition and capacity for work is institutes and exceeds only by his honesty and integrity of purpose. We propose his name with the utmost confidence, that with his election there will be nothing but what will preserve the public credit, improve the public morality and conserve those landmarks which are essential to our form of government.

The Idiots of Life.

The most eminent medical scientists are unanimous in the conclusion that the generally accepted limitation of 3 score and ten is many years below the attainment possible with the advanced knowledge of which the race is now possessed. The critical period, that determines its duration, seems to be between 50 and 60 years, as per care of the body during this decade means to the strongest argument, conversation then being fatal to longevity. DR. LOFQUIST.

From Grand Rapids Who Is Possessor of the Dingleys System Called Chiropractic.

Will remain in Charlevoix for about two months for summer vacation at that time he can be seen at 116 Clinton street from 9 to 11:30 a. m.

People other Physicians could not cure are certainly being healed by him in great numbers throughout Michigan, and all are talking about the wonderful cures effect by Dr. Lofquist's drugless treatment.

He is doing what the competitors can't do in hundreds of cases, and curing those who have been regarded by them as absolutely incurable. His drugless treatment heals, and he will prove this to any person's satisfaction, who may come to him with ailments other physicians have not been able to relieve. He does not claim to do the impossible, but his manner of treatment has proved that it accomplishes that which all other curative systems have regarded as impossible. If your case is numbered among those supposed impossibilities do not despair, try Dr. Lofquist's drugless treatment and get well. Over three years successful practice has proved more than he claims. His practice is confined to no sex or age, but nervous children afflicted with spinal difficulty should especially be brought to him. He will do more for them in the way of bringing about recovery than could be produced with all the drugs in the world.

For lumbago, lame backs, twisted backs, and backs otherwise injured, his drugless method is a certain cure and he can prove this, as he have in hundreds of instances.

There will undoubtedly come a time when the Chiropractic science of healing will dominate the world. Drugs will be resorted to for temporary relief only.

Undoubtedly will soon be on the museum shelves together with that relic of barbarism—surgery—and the science of healing known as Chiropractic will have the field.

When you hear hundreds of people praising a certain kind of treatment and recommending it, you may be assured it possesses virtue, and when you come to find out that hundreds have been personally cured by that same treatment it will awaken confidence in your mind.

This is the case so far as the success of Dr. Lofquist is concerned and if you are seriously ill you ought to investigate the matter and place your case in his hands. He is particularly desirous of seeing those who have been to Physicians of other schools without obtaining relief, for he is assured his drugless treatment brings about recovery when all other methods fail, and every patient he treats of this character is a fresh testimonial to the truth of this.

ICE CREAM DID IT.

He Cuts Out the Treat and She Cuts Him Out in Return.

"Come early to-morrow evening and we will sit in the park," she had coyly said as Walter bade her a loving good-night and went down the stairs.

He had replied with a smile and a nod. He was a young and guileless man, and this was his first love, explained the New Orleans Picayune. He had never been bounced.

The next day seemed never waiting to him, but finally the sun went to bed and Walter found a girl handing on his arm and bound for a park. Under the building trees they sat down to hear the band play and the cooling breezes rustling high. He sat with her hand in his lap, and for an minutes neither spoken. Then Helen softly breathed into his ear.

"That must be an ice cream parlor across the street."

"Why, it's a beer saloon," he replied, on a chill went up his back.

"But ladies are going in there."

"Yes, but it is fashionable now for ladies to go into beer saloons."

She sniffed in joyful her hand away and there was silence for a moment. Then she said:

"I can almost taste chocolate ice cream."

"It is odious you smell," he replied. "Some one is cooking them for supper."

She moved a few inches away from him, and under the electric light he saw her eyebrows come together and her nose wrinkle strangely. Then she said:

"It seems to me that if I had a dish of ice cream—" She softly begun, but as she paused he broke in:

"You might have odious coffee mixed in it."

"Mr. Tripp, will you have the kindness to escort me home?"

"Certainly my dear, but why the hurry? Perhaps the band—

"Now—not once at!"

"But Helen—"

"Miss Taylor, if you please."

"But I thought we came out—"

"So we did, sir, and we have come in, sir, and good-night sir. I shall not be at home tomorrow evening."

Visits Goethe's Old House.

A young American on his first trip to Europe writes from Frankfort-on-the-Main: "You know all about Heidelberg, with its castle, its wine, its beer, its fraternities, its duels, its students, its romance. Homberg, the Bingen Rheinstein, Nassau and all the other beautiful places near this city which every tourist thinks he must visit.

You may know also the old Goethe home in this city, which will always have an additional charm for me because of my adventure there. I happened to go through—just one inch, at the same time with a lot of personally conducted young girls from England.

When we reached the room where a little old aphed stood the loquacious guide told the girls that it had been played upon by Frau Rath Goethe and by the poet himself, and that as a special favor—he knew it would bring an additional tip—he would allow one of the party to play a few notes on the instrument.

The girls could not decide which she should have the honor now what should be played. Finally Hermione and Mignon were under discussion, when I turned in and played a few bars from 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' The girls didn't seem to recognize the tune, and I have wondered ever since was it their ignorance, the quality of the instrument or possibly my playing."

STRINGS TIGHTENING

SOME SIGNS OF MORE STRINGENT MONEY CONDITIONS.

That Result Would Seem to Be the Logical Consequence of Unsettling Business Confidence by Premature Tariff Agitation and an Unwise Foreign Trade Policy.

Not long ago the Des Moines (Iowa) Capital, a Republican newspaper, reviewing the tariff clipping writers of the National Association of Manufacturers, remarked:

"If there is to be tariff clipping, you had better be the sitting a little tight to extend your pocketbook."

Has the tightening process already begun? There are many men and men in charge of industry, commerce and finance who think they see signs of tighter conditions. Why do they think this? Reasons are not wanting. Four leading three reasons for thinking that a period of tightened money looks to at hand is the growing tendency to discuss sound business conditions. For more than three years past this tendency has taken the form of agitating for tariff revision.

To agitate for tariff revision is by now thing in the commercial history. The party that was our last advocate for the revision of the tariff gives to the party that was for. But it is a new thing in American politics for the party that is to be which discussed and completely emasculate a tariff of its own making. Yet this is what has actually happened.

Tariff revision talk has become so fashionable in the Republican party that those who desire to meet the exigencies as had to trimming to be so and be popular are also found to be stand-patters, champions of protection, worshipers of a high stand-pat tariff. Yet these men have only joined the ranks of tariff revisionists because they know that a postponement of tariff revision until revision should be actually required in the natural course.

Nevertheless, the rage for tariff revision has gone on and on, encouraged by ambitious politicians, and helped along by newspapers which find it easier to recklessly criticize than to intelligently comment, until at last an influential body of American producers, participated by free traders and stand-patters, have been moved to combine their own foreign trade and the protection of other lines of domestic industry into the tariff on record as "a tariff revision in the current vernacular, stand-pat." And in the same breath the importance of a general revision of tariffs is threatened in numerous quarters.

There can be no doubt that this talk, "revision, revision, revision," has tended to disturb

FROM CUBA.

Another Letter From Our Young Friend Constance Higgins.

HAVANA, CUBA, July 8, 1907.

This last week has been a very busy one for me as I have taken my first Spanish lessons. I have a very fine teacher and am getting along famously. Latin makes it quite easy. Wednesday evening Doctor took Winnie and I to the Spanish opera from which we did not get home until after one as there were three farces of one act given with solo dances between. There was a perfectly dear little actress and roses were fairly showered on her. The company with the scenes and music are all from Spain and though it was all in Spanish there was something so romantic about it couldn't help but admire them. Monday morning was interrupted in writing your letter, but will try to finish it now. I have just come home from marketing with Alfred which is quite fun. It means a big open square with every thing you can think of laid out on tables and you have to pick your way among live chickens and fierce looking Orientals with knives in their belts. Last night was a great siesta festival although it was sunday and I never saw so many people in my life. It was the night of the Spanish club and as we all had invitations we took the carriage and rode down about 8 o'clock. It was a beautiful evening with a breeze "as soft as a baby's breath" the way aunt Ada put it. The city looked so beautiful all lighted up but as we neared it a golden mass of light rose above all the rest which later proved to be the club itself. By the time we reached the museum such a crowd had gathered that it seemed as if every person and every carriage in the city had come out and looking out around the little Greek temple where the band played it seemed like a surging sea of heads. We then turned down the prado where it is all its beauty was the magnificent building which is said to excell or equal anything in United States. It is almost indescribable. You must just imagine a dazzling mass of lime-red and yellow lights arranged so delicately and artistically as to seem almost unreal. The front was decorated with the coat of arms of spain in the center of which was the king's picture and on one side the Cuban flag arranged so as to wave and on the other the red, white and blue—all electric lights and the last of all was on the very top where a brilliant little ship one of Columbus towed and rocked on a silken sea. As wide a street as the Prado as it took us nearly an hour to wiggle our way through the throng of carriages and autos. There was such a mob at the entrance that the policemen were kept pretty busy and at first I never thought we would try it but finally decided that we couldn't miss seeing the inside. I almost despaired of ever getting out. It was terribly hot, jammed in with all your clothes and I guess it was Dolores's uniform that did it. But once we were inside it was worth the discomfort. Everything was perfectly exquisite and most royally furnished. The chandelier in the center looked just like a tie tree with frost on it and I couldn't help but think how grand it would be to have a beautiful silk gown and dance there. We didn't stay very long as the crowd was not very select but after leaving it seemed like awakening from a dream. This is really a very poor account of a splendid night but I guess after all there are some things that can't be described.

Yours,
CONSTANCE HIGGINS.

Concerning the Standard Portland Cement Co.

To the Editor:

The Charlevoix "matter of last week contained quite an extended article on Standard Portland Cement Co. affairs. So far as I can learn, no effort was made to get from the management of the company facts relating thereto.

In reading the article you would conclude that the Standard Co. possesses all the rock lands in this locality and is doing nothing and that it is doing everything it can to prevent others from doing anything.

The fact is there is another cement company organized in Charlevoix, and still other parties own rock land. There is plenty of room for investment outside our company. It is not surprising that from among a hundred or two stockholders there should be found some knockers, or that there is occasionally a lawyer out of business, but that a local paper should rush in to print with an article that can only have the effect of injuring a local enterprise, is indeed surprising.

The article on the second page of the same paper, entitled "Knockers," is answered fully by the article first referred to. I wish to say that our books are open to the inspection of stockholders, and any information asked for is freely given.

We have expended in this locality quite a large amount of money, and largely with outside capital. We have employed quite a number of men, and are making an honest effort to develop one of your natural resources. If we have done something it is certainly better than doing nothing. Anyone can tear down; it takes an artist to build up.

Yours,
E. M. FERRIS.

The Limit of Life.

The most eminent medical scientists are unanimous in the conclusion that the generally accepted limitation of human life is many years below the attainment possible with the advanced knowledge of which the race is now possessed. The critical period that determines its duration seems to be between 50 and 60; the proper care of the body during this decade cannot be too strongly urged; carelessness then being fatal to longevity. Nature's best helper after 50 is Electric Bitters, the scientific tonic medicine that revitalizes every organ of the body. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggists. 50c.

You'll Not Regret Seeing It.

THEATRE TALK NO. 2

"AS GOOD WINE NEEDS NO BUSH" so any panegyric upon the brilliant play of "THE TWO ORPHANS" made famous by KATE CLAXTON is unnecessary. THE HOLD THAT THIS PLAY HAS IN AMERICA IS VERY GREAT, and its reputation is daily increasing. Nor is this to be wondered at, when the most glowing encomiums possible have been passed upon the play in every circle. IT IS A PLAY WHICH WILL RETAIN ITS POSITION ON THE STAGE FOR YEARS AND YEARS TO COME.

HAVE YOU EVER SEEN —A— SNARKALEE GAZHAM?

In selecting France for the action of the play, its emotional style is precisely of the nature to be found in that country. Though very beautiful in many respects, it has some minor faults, yet, AT THE SAME TIME, THE QUICKNESS OF ACTION, AND TELLING CLIMAXES, rivet and please an audience and push aside any imperfections.

DIALOGUE, CHARACTER, INCIDENT all combine to render this drama one of the most powerful, at the same time the most instructive, the stage has to boast.

FROM THE FIRST SCENE OF THE PLAY TO THE LAST, all is interesting, all is natural—occurrences, as in real life, give rise to passions; PASSION INSPIRES NEW THOUGHTS, ELEVATES EACH SENTIMENT, EMBELLISHES THE LANGUAGE and renders each act of the production either sweetly pathetic, or extremely sublime, YET THE HIGHEST MERIT OF ANY, IS THE MORAL WHICH THE PLAY CONTAINS.

SELDOM, IF EVER, has a play of this calibre achieved the remarkable success that has been accorded this remarkable dramatic story. It is a play for the healthy minded, intelligently inclined audience.

WE'D LIKE TO SEE YOU GET YOUR TICKETS AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE when they are placed on sale. There are always plenty who wait until the last minute; BUT GET THEM WHEN YOU CAN. WE'RE EXPECTING YOU. Usual prices will prevail. YOUR MONEY'S WORTH OR YOUR MONEY BACK.

WELL, THAT'S THE DINGBAT THE ACTOR PUTS IN WORK THAT GIVES IT TONE AND FINISH.

When it comes to FURNITURE It will be discovered that nothing can get beyond or above our goods. Each article is the height of value at its price, and the price is down to a figure only reached by us. Use price to every one and that the lowest.

—Judge Fred Aldrich, of Detroit, president of the Standard Portland Cement Co. was here over Sunday. Judge Aldrich is not discouraged by small incidents, and is just as enthusiastic as ever concerning not only possibilities but prospects. The Charlevoix plant will be developed. The sentiment is pretty confident as ever that the Standard Portland Cement Co. enterprise deserves encouragement and has in it the elements of a good business proposition. We are confident that it will develop into a valuable industry.

—Mr. Fisher, manager of the swimming pool, pulled off a very successful tournament one night last week, and announces another for Wednesday, Aug 28th. The tournament embraces several aquatic events of interest. Mr. Fisher, who is professor of German in the Toledo schools, is an expert in aquatic sports and the very important accomplishment of swimming. Three events at the pool are not only enjoyable as an entertainment, but profitable to those who recognize the necessity of being able to take care of yourself in the water under stress of untoward circumstances.

—Mr. and Mrs. Ludwig Marum both of New York delighted one of the largest and most enthusiastic audiences of the season at the Inn Casino last Wednesday evening in a joint recital and song recital of highly artistic character. It may be said at once that we don't recall an equally successful concert in the annals of our lakeside musical history. Mr. Marum who is the leader of the Marum String Quartette of New York has achieved a reputation as one of the foremost violinists of the country. His playing is marked by sterling musicianship and ripe experience. He has a tone of unusual severity and mellowness and he fully meets the artistical demands on his instrument and thus equipped as he is, he always puts his art into the service of the composer whose works he chooses for interpretation which in our mind is the highest tribute one can pay to a true artist. Mrs. Marum quite capivated the audience with a voice of rarely beautiful quality and has a soprano of great power and a wide range, taking a high C sharp in the fortissimo with greatest ease. Her selections were of a most versatile nature giving her ample opportunity to display all the subtleties of her dual trained organ. Both artists had to respond to numerous recalls and graciously added several encores. Mr. Jacob Newman the accomplished wife of the well known Chicago lawyer and herself a most sympathetic and competent for both artists.

—Hay Faulkner, of Chicago, joined his wife here Saturday for a few weeks sojourn.

—Mrs W. J. Pearsons, of Boyne Falls, has been visiting Charlevoix friends the past few days.

—Isaac Hines, who accompanied Mrs. Jones McConey to Greenville, S. C., recently, returned home Thursday.

—Senator Wm. Alden Smith and wife, were guests at the Inn to-day. They left this afternoon for Petoskey by automobile.

—Mrs. Anna E. Canton, of Toledo is visiting her cousin, J. H. Adams and Chas. Pierce in Marion, whom she had not seen in 52 years.

—Mrs. A. J. McLeod, of Detroit, is in town visiting her brother, J. A. Cameron. Mrs. McLeod is a Charlevoix pioneer, having lived here thirty years ago.

—Married, at the Congregational parsonage, Aug. 21st by Rev. H. A. Putnam Mr. Wilber Witherill, of Lake View, to Miss Fannie Culver, of Boyne City.

—The ladies of the M. E. church will hold a cake and bread sale, also rugs woven of ingrain carpeting for sale, in the store building, first door north of the Hartlett hotel. We solicit your patronage.

—Daniel J. Bigelow, a former Marion farmer, who left here seventeen years ago, was back on a visit last week. He is accompanied by his wife and daughter, Mr. Bigelow is janitor of the court house in Toledo.

—Burgess & Cooper's new shingle mill at Oyster Bay is finally completed, and will soon resume work. The mill is about the same capacity as the old one. They have about 3,000,000 shingle to cut this year yet, and expect two years more work before the timber is cut out.

—The SENTINEL has been therefore accused of rudeness in its comments on the conduct of a certain class of summer visitors attending entertainments at the Charlevoix Theater. We do not wish to be rude but, at our worst, we cannot match the rudeness of a crowd that indicted itself upon the audience at the "Two Orphans" Monday night. One person, who doubtless calls himself a gentleman, smoked a cigarette in one of the boxes, and was properly realized by the management. Others were noisy and boisterous—in fact behaved themselves very unseemly. When will the class of people learn that Charlevoix people are capable of recognizing cads when they see them.

Watch out for the sugar. On its little matter of the forthcoming farmers picnic, Hubbard and Marting, the "factotums," have their heads together, and something will come of it.

Both avow that the 1907 gathering shall overshadow that of 1906 as the constitution of the United States overshadows the recently enacted primary election law in the display of American Intelligence. George Van Pelts Norwood, picnics were scene, but the one Sept 6th, will be some and some more. Nothing will be left undone, consistent with the well known modesty of Hubbard and Marting, to make the event one of great enjoyment and profit to the farmers. Therefore, we encourage farmers to be in the pleasure, for there will be plenty of it.

—Lincoln J. Carter's border drama, "The Flaming Arrow," will be presented at the Charlevoix Theatre Saturday night Aug 24th. It is said to possess the true western melodramatic. It is claimed that it is produced one of the truest pictures of western life that the stage has ever seen, depicting army and frontier life in an about the famous historical Fort Hemo, the scene of 60 many stirring incidents in the pioneer days of the great west, when Indians and buffaloes were as plentiful as they now are scarce. The story of the love and adventure of Major Fort, the commandant, daughter of the commander of the Post, is founded on an actual fact. All of the other characters are drawn from living prototypes. There is the treacherous Mexican villain, and his accomplice, a lieutenant—a deserter from the army, a fun loving Irish corporal and his sweetheart who is more than sixteen, the Colonel's charming daughter; a prairie wild flower, and the good old colonel, a typical, kind hearted Indian fighter, a dashy hostler, continually in some ludicrous predicament, also many soldiers, cow boys, Indians and men of the plains. A full and complete equipment of scenery is carried, painted from actual scenes. A fully capable company. Tickets on sale at Ivy Drug store. Prices, 25, 35 and 50 cents. Box seats 75. Matinee 25.

PERE MARQUETTE

Probability of Reorganization and Railroad Improvement.

The plan of reorganization of the Pere Marquette railway is to be submitted to the stockholders at a meeting to be held Oct. 27, next. The plan includes the consolidation of the Pere Marquette Railroad Co. of Michigan, with the Pere Marquette Railroad Co. of Indiana, the vesting of the receivership, the cancellation of the lease of the road by the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton and the raising of $50,000,000 by the sale of Reorganization worth of notes to preferred stockholders of the Pere Marquette.

It was decided at a meeting of the Pere Marquette receivership, Aug. 12, to submit the reorganization plan to the stockholders.

The work laying the line of the Pere Marquette have been "knocked in the stern and the deep sea" for at least three years, owing to the "shuttle cock and battledore" condition of this road. It has more mileage than any other road in Michigan, and likewise more trouble.

A change in condition will, indeed be a welcome blessing.

CHAPTER II.

Madge her acquaintance called her became the name settled her, they said her Maddy then called her at home, and there was a wonderful transformation seen in the person of the old cripple, her grandfather, who then said that same white they dog also lighted her with pride and he seemed proud also that young girl who answered to the name of Maddy. Perhaps they disagreed, for she had lived with them some yet much-dark, for four years, and yet in truth, who, versus nobodies from his last wings in Clyde, she was nothing better she was born. Very tender and devoted was the home of Grandfather Murray, Madge knew without, the absence of Maddie, but with her there, the old red farm house seemed to the girl almost like a paradise.

Since Madge had lived there, filling the rather barren cell of the room homestead, and there was a time when they heard that Richard Clyde was lost at sea, and the far middle night when their daughter died, home sorrow had come to them, and truly the big full for the blessings so long overlooked, then, they had taken to prayer, and with God and man, and risen each morning to pray. But a change was coming over them, in all their old hearts. Grandfather Murray had signed a note for a neighbor and friend, who failed, and he was to fall on Mr. Mortlake, who, to meet the demand, mortgaged the farm, and the necessary neighbor still insisting that long before the mortgage should be, he certainly would be able himself to meet it. It, however, he had not done, and, after twice begging off a foreclosure, he gave his brother-in-law, Mr. Mortlake, himself of the mercy of a grasping, remorseless creditor, who foreclosed the mortgage had passed. It was vain to hope that Uncle Mortlake would, or, if he would, must either be forbearing of the old farm house he sold, with the barns of land. Sometimes, in a lighter mood, he would say that the money is spent, even if he do not, he can do so. And so he must just among grumbers.

"If I could only buy Madge back and my farming when they sat talking over their troubles, and they would do, unless I apply for our office this summer, he intends, and I don't believe he will be at the end of the year, and we," and, as the old people had discovered that their grandchildren Madge, who had sought her home and shared and was the comfort of their lives.

Mortlake was a favorite with all, especially with the young. He was, indeed, a handsome man, and, in the school-room, the plan struck him favorably. Her age, however, was an objection, and he would take time to see what others thought of a child like, she looking where he was grandly known through Honesdale that pretty little Madge Clyde had been engaged as teacher, she receiving three dollars a week, with the prospect of a better position. Madge was rolling from the cottage door, for the morning of the first day of the school, when she met Mr. Mortlake, who, to meet the demand, stopped in the morning, the necessary neighbor still insisting that long before the mortgage should be, he certainly would be able himself to meet it. It, however, he had not done, and, after twice begging off a foreclosure, he gave his brother-in-law, Mr. Mortlake

WHY TAMPER WITH IT?

Changes in Tariff Law Can Be of No Benefit.

The present agitation for tariff revision all comes from Democratic sources. Mass conventions of Republicans have been sought for the city and a few leaders, embracing the hope for the Democratic success for the writer of this paragraph have joined the opposition to demanding a change.

No one, of course, will question the fact that many of the schedules have been more or less obsolete in the manner in which they have been in operation, and the justice or injustice of duties on certain articles is not by any means the sole consideration in the question of Tariff revision.

The effect on business conditions the country over and the impossibility of ensuring any schedule that will be just to everybody are matters that must move to the last night of Ar or the 8 of those. It is a well-known fact to all who have followed the economic history of our country that the opening up of the tariff question invariably gives business a serious set back, regardless of whether the revision be good or bad.

The other consideration is one of equal importance. There are so many interests at stake and presence of such a nature is brought to bear on the members of both houses that it is impossible to secure a law which does not involve many injustices.

The country is to-day prosperous and busy. The protective tariff is furnishing employment to the American workingman instead of giving the job to the foreigner. Then why tamper with a law that is bringing about good results and take chances of spoiling the business of the country and meaning in the end a law no better if not actually worse than the one we now have?—Topeka Herald.

UNCLE SAM DISCOVERS THAT HE HAS BEEN BUNCOED.

Wages and Tariff Revision.

A Pennsylvania newspaper, the Scranton Tribune, in commenting on the statement made by the American Economist regarding the increase of wages of the silk and dye houses of Paterson, affecting 40,000 men with weekly wages ranging from $10 to $20, makes some pertinent remarks upon the question of the effect tariff tinkering would have on wages. The Tribune says:

"Would these advances in wages occur if the tariff were now in course of revision, or even if a definite date for taking up revision had been agreed upon? Certainly not.

"Would the wage increases be granted if reciprocity treaties had been concluded, or were in course of negotiation for which a tariff reduction on silk goods was conceded in favor of imports from France and Germany? No; there would be an increase but decreases of wages. Just as surely as the tariff is revised downward by direct reduction or by reciprocity concessions, so surely will wages be revised downward in every branch of industry. It is well to keep this fact in mind.

"This argument is exactly in line with what the Journal has always repeatedly asserted. The people of New Jersey encouraged the tariff tinkers in 1892 and paid dearly for their folly. We do not believe that they desire to have the bitter and nauseating dose repeated, no matter how smoothly the tariff-tinkers masquerading under the cloak of 'tariff reform' may plead.—Plainfield Journal.

Easy to See.

Evidently the Buffalo Express has not read the German agreement:

"To all appearances the tariff concessions made to Germany followed strictly the provisions of the Dingley law, and the great difficulty in reaching a reciprocal agreement was that the Dingley law restricted concessions within such narrow limits. It is hard to see how the American Protective Tariff league expects to show any violation of the law."

Upon reading the agreement the Express will discover that its most important provisions are utterly outside of the Dingley law, and a comparison of paragraph A of the diplomatic note accompanying and forming a part of the agreement with section 19 of the customs administrative act will show how completely a law of congress has been nullified. Then it will not be so hard to see why the tariff league should dispute the legality of the provision giving to German exporters permission to appraise their own merchandise.

Marriage the Only Excitement.

The average English girl of the upper classes starts life hopelessly stock and indifferent. In her more or less sheltered, easy life she has no particular interests, no opinions, no temptations. The only excitement of her life is her marriage, and even that she takes very timidly.—Ladies' Field.

A God's Gift.

A medicine, no one of which is a gift from the gods, however, but very much like it for the sake of brevity it is called a good thing. In the days of old Rome it was the custom to fasten the tongue of a woman to the board of a lyre, and one of the bards takes time to sing, supported by the humming, very strongly to the job, in a manner and sound in the lyre which is was unmusically long to remember when the instrument was played upon.

SOLDIERS CHARGE RIOTERS IN STREETS OF BELFAST.

Troopers Are Stoned by the Crowd, Putter Are Beaten in Wild Battle and Dragoons Use Sabre-Snake Bite for Lancers.

Serious disorders occurred at Belfast Friday. Numerous street meetings were held in the afternoon, which led to some well nigh in the peak quarter. Upon the crowds of men in Queen's Square assaulted the police and the troops, the latter being on duty, the police had hard tricks to control the situation. Many persons on both sides were injured. Late at night the troops had to be called upon and made several mounted charges in Leeds and Sandy Row. The crowd fled in the streets. One square had twenty one windows smashed in one row. The crowd was the more serious this has greatly increased. Troops are fired upon the police in the district around Corporation and Sandy Row streets. Fifty rioters were shot and 1500 are down with wounds in the arms and variously injured in the attempt to disperse the order's army, having the rioters, infuriated by the fire, rushed on the troops with stones and bottles.

LEG MODELS ARE SHOCKING.

Omaha Women Demand Their Removal from Show Windows.

A number of ladies in the city have enlisted the aid of the Omaha Women's Club in a protest against the display of female legs in the show windows of the city. The protest did not come from the women themselves, but from the men, who have complained that the sight of female legs in the show windows has been so shocking that it has caused a boycott against the women who have been in the habit of using the show windows for a promenade. The protest has been made to the Omaha Women's Club, and it is probable that the women will take the matter up and see that the offending legs are removed from the show windows.

If one-half was true of this county of ours which those say of it who do not wish to be pleased with any sort of circumstances or conditions, it would not be necessary for the government of Europe to be troubled over ways and means to keep their people from coming to the United States. If there is any other spot on earth which would better suit those who find this country not to their liking or interfering effort will be made to their departure, and no schemes will be formed to secure their return, that country and its government are not all that they should be, but they will not be improved through anarchistic threats or socialistic fault-finding.

"Had I been governor of this state and had the evidence been brought to me that was submitted to Governor Gooding I would have done just as he has done." The above is a declaration made by Clarance Darrow, the principal attorney for Haywood whom the jury at Boise, Idaho, found not guilty of the charge of having participated in the plot to murder Governor Steunenberg. And this statement comes after every socialist in the country has shouted himself hoarse over the alleged injustice of Haywood's arrest. And after a frenzied attempt was made to create the belief that Governor Gooding of Idaho was actuated by opposition to labor. But threats and frenzied appeals to opposition to the laws and courts of our country did not prevent the arrest of Haywood and his associates. Nor did any influence in the least disturb the justice and fairness of Haywood's trial. And now the very leader of Haywood's defense says that up to the present hour the governor of Idaho has done just what the demands of justice required.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Mr. Geo. Empey of Bastport died in the asylum at Traverse City last week and was buried in the Antrim cemetery.

The twenty-eighth annual reunion of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Association of Northern Michigan, comprising counties along the Michigan division of Michigan Central and D. & M., railways, will be held at Gladwin, Sept. 18, 19 and 20. Reduced railroad rates will be given for the occasion, and a fine program has been arranged.

One of the oldest settlers of this region died when death claimed Mrs. Nancy Dumey of Howers Harbor, last week. She was 80 years of age and had lived at Howers Harbor since she was 27 years old. A daughter and two sons survive her. The funeral will be held from the Ogdensburg church tomorrow morning at 10 a. m. She was the mother of Capt. J. C. Dumey, of Charlevoix.

The Annual Northern Michigan Conference and Camp-meeting of the Seventh Day Adventists will be held at East Jordan from August 25th to Sept 9th at the D & G. grounds on the West side. The district comprises Bay City, Clare, Reed City, Baldwin, Ludington and all points north in the lower peninsula. This takes the third year of their meeting here and they are welcome visitors to our little city.

Last week a coterie of Michigan men met at the Hotel Pantlind Grand Rapids and organized the Yellow Pine Lumber Company with a capital of $1,000,000. The corporation is one of the largest of its kind ever organized under the laws of this state. The board of directors will consist of W. H. White, James A. White and Thomas White of Boyne City, Aimee Mendelssohn of Grand Rapids, J. T. Wyche of Saginaw and Salmer Carlin of Petoskey. The company has acquired title to a large tract of yellow fir in Oregon and expect to purchase more land soon. No operating plans have yet been formed.

Traverse City has its Enoch Arden story. Returning, like Enoch Arden of old, to find his wife wedded to another man, Jacob Updegrove is spending his time visiting his children, whom he has not seen for many years. About ten years ago Updegrove went to Ottawa, Can., to seek work. Not hearing from him, his wife supposed he was dead, and married a man by the name of Wattgatz. Updegrove was not dead, but had become engaged in the lumber business, where he accumulated a fortune. When he found his wife had married he attempted no reconciliation but will seek a legal separation.

Catching her tail in the limb of a tree while fighting like a cow belonging to Frank Parmenter of Traverse City, in trying to free herself strained and grunted until she had the tail parted completely, leaving nothing but a wagging eight inch stump to give battle to insects. Parmenter discovered the animal's plight before the brush crowned and disembowled to initiate the candid appendage with no success. Then he secured a saw and started to cut the tree down, but the cow still pulled and broke the tail before he could finish. When the tail parted the report was heard a block away. A veterinary could do nothing in the way of mending and the tail was used for soup.

At Bastport August 1st 1907, the Pioneer Association of Antrim County, in the above date about 20 of the old settlers of Antrim County met at the house of Daniel Blakely and formed the above named organization. Although a very wet day the order of the old settlers was not disappointed in the least. The following were elected officers for the first year: Daniel Blakely, President; Louisa H. Pearl, Vice President; Ernest H. Harris, Secretary, James Williams, Treasurer; Mrs. Mary M. Childs, Historian. The executive committee of three members is as follows: Mrs. Mary M. Childs, Mrs. Mary E. Williams and J. H. Childs. The charter members were 19 in number who are as follows: Daniel Blakely, Mary Blakely, Wallace Crow, Norman Larsen, Louisa H. Pearl, Ernest H. Harris, John W. Mettlewan, Angie McPherson, J. H. Childs, Mary M. Childs, Theodore Guyer, Lucy C. Guyer, Fred L. Church, Sophia M. Church, James Williams, Mary E. Williams. The time of the next meeting is left with the executive committee, but it will be held at Bastport, sometime next year. Louisa H. Pearl arrived at Antrim City in 1852 closely followed by Daniel Blakely and several others. The settlers as to religious creeds are follows: All those who were residents of territory comprised of Antrim and Charlevoix Counties in the year 1877 and who are now residents of Antrim County and who those who shall attain a residence of 30 years in Antrim County. The fee to join was placed at 50c. Application blanks will soon be placed in the hands of the charter members and a large membership is desired. For further information write the Secretary E. H. Harris, at Ellsworth Mich.

The Limit of Life.

The most patient medical scientists are unanimous in the conclusion that the generally accepted limitation of human life in many years before the attainment possible with the advanced knowledge of which the race is now possessed. The critical period, that determines its duration, seems to be between 50 and 60; the proper care of the body during this decade cannot be too strongly urged; carelessness then being fatal to longevity. SANITARY MILK SUPPLY

Clarified Retail Milk Delivery

Ours is CLEAN MILK, it is not strained through three or four folds of cloth simply, but by centrifugal force. No sediment. When you see settlings of any kind in milk you may be sure that there is considerable dirt that you do not see. None of either kind in ours. Ours is clean flavored to. No cowy flavor nor heavy odors, but absolutely clean, and clean all the time—kept clean. Bottled at the factory and guaranteed. No sloppiness; not exposed to the dirt and filth of the street, but strictly pure. Ask our driver, Mr. Rob Withers, about cleanly and better milk delivery. Costs no more than common milk. Visitors always welcome.

AN ORDINANCE

Relative to the Construction, Repairing and Maintaining of Sidewalks Within the Limits of the City of Charlevoix.

The City of Charlevoix Ordains:

Section 1. All sidewalks hereafter constructed shall be of the uniform width of six feet, the inner line of which walk shall be the boundary line between the street and the adjacent lots or premises, and the walk shall be constructed of the best quality of cement and brick sidewalks in the village of Charlevoix, and shall be laid in such manner and of such materials as the sidewalks in the village of Charlevoix are now laid, and shall be of such grade as shall be established by the proper authorities of said village of Charlevoix, and the owners of the adjacent lots or premises are hereby required to apply to the superintendent of streets for the proper grade before the same is laid.

Section 2. Whenever the majority of the property owners on any one side of any one street or alley, shall agree upon a uniform grade and shall make a joint request to the village council that a sidewalk be constructed, the council shall take steps immediately to order the construction of such walk, and shall give the property owners on the other side of said street or alley, a reasonable time to allow them to order a walk to be laid on their side of said street or alley, to be laid and constructed, provided said other property owners shall agree among themselves upon a uniform grade for such walk, and shall make a joint request to the village council that such walk be laid, and if such joint request shall be made by said property owners within such reasonable time, then the village council shall order such walk to be laid and constructed on said street or alley.

Section 3. If the city shall ordain a joint or district walk, and the property owners shall not agree upon a uniform grade for such walk, or shall not make a joint request for the construction of such walk, then the village council shall have power to order any sidewalk or sidewalks to be laid and constructed on any street or alley in the village of Charlevoix.

Section 4. Whenever the majority of the property owners on any one side of any street or alley shall petition the village council to order a sidewalk constructed, the council shall take steps immediately to order the construction of such walk, and shall give the other property owners on the other side of said street or alley, a reasonable time to allow them to order a walk to be laid and constructed on their side of said street or alley, provided said other property owners shall agree among themselves upon a uniform grade for such walk, and shall make a joint request to the village council that such walk be laid, and if such joint request shall be made by said property owners within such reasonable time, then the village council shall order such walk to be laid and constructed on said street or alley.

Section 5. Whenever the majority of the property owners on any one side of any street or alley shall petition the village council to order a sidewalk constructed, the council shall have power to order the construction of such walk, provided said other property owners shall not within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the council, order a walk to be laid and constructed on their side of said street or alley, provided said other property owners shall not agree among themselves upon a uniform grade for such walk, and shall not make a joint request to the village council that such walk be laid, and if such joint request shall be made by said property owners within such reasonable time, then the village council shall order such walk to be laid and constructed on said street or alley.

Section 6. If the city shall ordain a joint or district walk, and the property owners shall not agree upon a uniform grade for such walk, or shall not make a joint request for the construction of such walk, then the village council shall have power to order any sidewalk or sidewalks to be laid and constructed on any street or alley in the village of Charlevoix.

Section 7. Whenever the majority of the property owners on any one side of any street or alley shall petition the village council to order a sidewalk constructed, the council shall have power to order the construction of such walk, provided said other property owners shall not within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the council, order a walk to be laid and constructed on their side of said street or alley, provided said other property owners shall not agree among themselves upon a uniform grade for such walk, and shall not make a joint request to the village council that such walk be laid, and if such joint request shall be made by said property owners within such reasonable time, then the village council shall order such walk to be laid and constructed on said street or alley.

Section 8. If the city shall ordain a joint or district walk, and the property owners shall not agree upon a uniform grade for such walk, or shall not make a joint request for the construction of such walk, then the village council shall have power to order any sidewalk or sidewalks to be laid and constructed on any street or alley in the village of Charlevoix.

Section 9. Whenever the majority of the property owners on any one side of any street or alley shall petition the village council to order a sidewalk constructed, the council shall have power to order the construction of such walk, provided said other property owners shall not within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the council, order a walk to be laid and constructed on their side of said street or alley, provided said other property owners shall not agree among themselves upon a uniform grade for such walk, and shall not make a joint request to the village council that such walk be laid, and if such joint request shall be made by said property owners within such reasonable time, then the village council shall order such walk to be laid and constructed on said street or alley.

Section 10. If the city shall ordain a joint or district walk, and the property owners shall not agree upon a uniform grade for such walk, or shall not make a joint request for the construction of such walk, then the village council shall have power to order any sidewalk or sidewalks to be laid and constructed on any street or alley in the village of Charlevoix.

Section 11. If the city shall ordain any joint or district walk, and the property owners shall not agree among themselves upon a uniform grade for such walk, or shall not make a joint request for the construction of such walk, then the village council may by a resolution vote thereof, order the same to be laid and constructed on said street or alley, and the cost of such walk shall be assessed upon the property in front of which such walk is laid and constructed, provided, however, that the cost of such walk shall not exceed the sum of $1.00 per lineal foot for the first ten feet in width, and 50 cents per lineal foot for each foot in width in excess of ten feet

Then for the first time I did nothing correctly, and feeling pained by some how to remember this unusual and astonishing room to correspond with the dolls' house in question. Mr. Cornelius Guy gave her with generous philosophy, but, remembering the disappointment occasioned just in an hour of distress Maddie raised her little hand to her head, if she would ever be an author quite free from, and sobbing out:

"Oh, my mother! It makes my head so tired. They don't think that you can ever—ever—ever—I don't know—I know."

Suddenly it occurred to Guy that he had gone unkind, strong, and unfeeling, consequently he gave her a little kiss, and darted out half ashamed, half pleased, and wondering if he could ever be a gentleman.

"Why, my little Maddie, you are tired, and nothing ever comes right when you are tired. Now, I'm sorry I spoke so to you, and I'm sorry I'm a boy, and I'm sorry I'm a gentleman, and I'm sorry I'm—I'm—I'm—I'm sorry I'm—I'm—I'm—I'm sorry I'm—I'm—I'm—

Struck While Hitching to Sense of His Fire at Old Orchard, Maine—Young Woman is Seriously Injured.

The tragic death of Phillip Partridge, aged 24, son of the Rev. Lee Warren P. Partridge, of the Fourth Avenue Baptist church of Pittsburg, the largest Baptist congregation in Pittsburg, has added a romance that was to have terminated in marriage within a few weeks. Partridge, together with his fiancee, Miss Alice Mitchard, were spending their vacation at Kennebunk, Me., when the other night, warning of the big fire at Old Orchard, Me., they started to drive to the scene. Their rig was struck by a Boston and Maine train near the outskirts of Kennebunk. Partridge was killed instantly and Miss Mitchard received serious injuries.

ORDER FOR GENERAL WALKOUT PROMULGATED.

Call to "quit" Includes All Commercial Telegraphers in United States and Canada—Strike Officially Adds Few Recruits to Strikers.

The general strike order to all commercial telegraphers not working under union agreements, which was issued by President Shonfarber of the Union of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America at 1:30 o'clock Friday morning, had produced almost no change in the situation Saturday afternoon, more than twenty-four hours after it had been promulgated.

In fact the general order, heralded in advance as the crowning feature of the strike, hardly created a ripple in Chicago, according to a correspondent. The force of the Chicago and Milwaukee Telegraph Company, which organizes for quick business between the Chicago Board of Trade and the 300 wireless grain exchange, six men all told, went out and five men employed on local wires in Halsted, Warren & Chandler, a brokerage house, went into line again.

Political Comment.

A Governor Who Governs.

Gov. Hughes supervised every legislative bill that was signed in this state last year. He vetoed thirty-seven bills, the lower of a crop delayed the Legislature to record 1907 measures, and he has allowed 256 bills to die unsigned, which is more than New York's executive is not an eligible homeseeker. He works ten to twelve hours every day, and he is doing something throughout all of that time. His touches with the side people and President Cleveland's activity in that direction, but Cleveland's vein was of partisan cloth against private pension bills, while Hughes' bits measures, of larger quality.

This activity has created something like consternation among the politicians. He examines every measure which reaches him. There is nothing perfunctory about his performances. He acts on the assumption that the people who have placed him in office up to the power of his pen to give them good government. Nothing within his scope is his official life, is not his attention. Many of the Republican politicians have called against him. He is accused of persistent meddlesomeness, and the party leaders on both sides are getting solemn but uneasily as to whether he ought to be called a Republican. A year ago, the Republicans were ready to nominate for governor Mr. Hughes, who now has given them an much time to the duties of his office.

Illegal Cures.

The Illinois Supreme Court has ruled that the practice of healing by faith is not a violation of the state statute, which would seem to be a decision against the practice of healing by faith, but the court holds that the statute does not prohibit healing by faith, but only the practice of healing for fees. The decision is a victory for the faith healers.

OBEDIENCE TO LAWS.

Some Who Are in Trouble Might Have Avoided It.

Some who are in trouble at this time, yet claim to be upright, well meaning citizens, would have avoided their present experiences by rejecting the idea that certain laws made by Congress or the State legislatures are less binding than others, and that an observance to some extent is a matter of usage, or subject to manipulation. The Indian commissioner of Indian Affairs recently instructed his restraint of traffic in liquor on the Indian reservations in the Dakotas, and for a long time. Mergers and rebates have been forbidden by law for years, but many men have been committed for violations with it. Lack of knowledge of the law has been the cause, and a prevailing belief that the enactments would not or could not be enforced. Ignorance of the law is no excuse in the eyes of the law. The

Mr. Bryan's favorite platform question. "When has a party out of power increased its strength more rapidly than the democratic party has?" is fully answered by the democratic New York World. That paper calls attention to the fact that always before have the leading parties out-country increased their strength more rapidly than has the democratic party of Mr. Bryan's rebuilding. On several occasions, in 1874, 1882 and in 1890, notable democratic congressional victories were won directly following decisive democratic defeats. But in the ten years Mr. Bryan has been leading the democratic party it has lower had a majority in congress and has known nothing but defeat. Something more might be said in that same direction if it shall come to Mr. Bryan to see another question.

One of the cheapest and most common types of the demagogue is the fellow whose capital consists gum opinion in boundless domination of corporations. Railroads are the usual object of attack on the part of representatives of this type. Taking advantage of the fact that there had been a just prejudice created against railroads in recent years through their resistance to legitimate and at first seemed reasonable and fair, members of the class above referred to have used this prejudice to seeking notoriety and popularity. It is as much to be desired that no encouragement shall be given to such fakirs as to the encouragement that railroads in Michigan shall fairly comply with the laws on our statute books. The man who has little or nothing to contribute to solemnly save an ability to increase prejudice and to create contention is a nuisance rather than an assistant in any helpful direction.

Rev. A. T. Ferguson of Traverse City, presiding elder of this district, had his right foot badly crushed between two cars at Boardman lately. He was standing on the platform between two cars of an excursion train when the train stopped at Boardman. His foot was in the space between the two cars and as they came together his foot was badly crushed.

Pittsburg Record: The question of Whether Roy Vaux is to have an sensibles in the future of not was the main order of business before the adjourned meeting of cottagers on Monday. A proposition that seems to hold the only feasible solution to the matter, was presented by Judge Moore, embodying an agreement between the association and John M. Hall and Thomas Gordon, Jr., whereby these gentlemen are to provide an assembly not to cost more than $4,000 per year for a period of ten years, provided the cottagers raise the sum of $2,000 yearly by subscription. The plan is to levy a tax of $5 on each cottage (all but the first two years, this to be collected the same as the hot and water rentals, each subscriber receiving a nontransferable ticket for each dependent member of his family. The plan received the full vote of the association and committees have been appointed to carry out the plans.

The Limit of Life.

The most eminent medical scientists are unanimous in the conclusion that the generally accepted limitation of human life is many years below the attainment possible with the advanced knowledge of which the race is now possessed. The etiquet period, that determines its duration, seems to be between 50 and 60; the proper care of the body during this decade cannot be too strongly urged; carelessness then being fatal to longevity. Nature's best helper after 50 is Electric Bitters, the scientific tonic medicine that revitalizes every organ of the body. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist. 50c.

Letter to Mr. Frank Lamphere.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: Let's talk it right out before folks; there's nothing to hide in your business or ours. If there is, we'd better hide ourselves.

We are in trade to make money; so are you. We make it by saving our customers' money; so do you. Our object, in trade, is to save your customers' wood from rotting and iron and steel and tin from rusting; yours the same.

We work for thousands of property owners; you for a few. We can do some things that you can't do; we have the facilities. You can do some things that we can't; you are there. Let us work together; be faithful to one another. We can serve our customers better by working together and being faithful to one another.

Your dollar, put into your paint, will paint more feet than to any other way; and the paint will last longer. This saves you money, and saves your customers' money. That's all there is in our whole business.

Yours truly

Probate Order.

State of Michigan, Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.

At a session of said court, held at the probate office, in the city of Charlevoix, in said county on the 27th day of August, A. D. 1907.

Present: HON. JOHN E. HARRIS, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John F. Conn, deceased.

Jane Conn, having filed in said court her petition praying that the administration of said estate be granted to Alexander Cameron or to some other suitable person.

It is ordered that the 23d day of September, A. D. 1907, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said probate office, be appointed for hearing said petition.

It is further ordered, that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county.

JOHN E. HARRIS, Judge of Probate.

Hard Lines for True Love.

A man and woman wrecked a train in New York state. They were in epirec and buoyed up by the hope of robbing dead passengers of enough to pay for a marriage license and the paraphernalia of homekeeping on a modest scale. Nobody was killed, the plotters did not get a cent and the man has gone to jail for so long a term of years as completely to upset the wedding arrangements. Doesn't the course of true love ever run smoothly?

Barmaids' French Champion.

One must have little sympathy with the winters night on the shores of the Thames; one feel have looked in the blushing eyes of some waitress for a reduction of the absent blue sky, in order to understand all the horror of the proposal to replace charming barmaids by men.—Mallie, Paris.

FREAK EUROPEAN PAPERS.

Plans to Win Readers Failed to Prolong Their Lives.

A French magazine writer who has been looking into the subject of freak newspapers thinks that one of the most remarkable of these was the Luminaria, published in Madrid. The ink with which it was printed contained a small percentage of phosphorous, so that the letters were visible and the paper could be read in the dark.

Next after the list this remarkable the case of the Rosal, printed with an ink manufactured nonpoisonous on thin sheets of dough. After absorbing all the information the sheet contained one could eat it, thus derived from it nourishment for mind and body.

The publisher of a new Parisian journal, La Dieu Vivre, promised to all subscribers for 40 consecutive years a pension and free burial. In spite of the unfavorable conditions were so few that the paper died in a month. It was followed shortly after by a paper called La Monolith, the handkerchief, it was printed on paper such as the so-called Japanese napkins are made of and might be used in case the reader forgot to buy his handkerchief. It did not last long.

At two different French museums recent newspapers called the Courier des Dialectes (Dialects' Courier) and La Nanda, which doesn't need translation, were printed on waterproof paper. The inducement was that the bather could take his paper into the sea with him and read it while he enjoyed his bath.

The climax of utility seems to be reached in Norway, where some of the newspapers used so tough a quality of paper that it can be cut into strips and twisted into serviceable rope when the news is all read.

HAS REAL GRIEVANCE.

Prisoner Suffers inconveniences in an Indian Jail.

A prisoner in Pampore Bonila jail has a clear grievance against the government. There are certain inconveniences inseparable from prison life which all reasonable criminals more or less unwillingly accept, but the most complacent drive the line at being marked down and clawed by a tiger-tiger in the seclusion of the prison yard. The animal seems to have been inspired by a sufficiently like curiosity as to the inside of a prison, and having got in by the high by irregular method of leaping the wall she concerned herself among the low brick piers on which the cell racks are raised from the ground. In the early afternoon she exploded a prisoner in the yard clearing up, and, like impulsive creatures she is, promptly leaped upon him, striking him to the ground and clawing his back. Then with the fickleness of her sex, she suddenly changed her mind, and by an access of shyness ran away and hid herself among the brick piers. Now that B. B. Weir, temporary general of prisons, happened so be in the vicinity, and to him the incident was reported. Though it cannot be said that the duties of an inspector general of prisons include the destruction of vermin, Col. Weir did not stop to consider technicalities. He took his rifle. After some difficulty in getting within striking distance of the intruder as she lay in her fastness, he succeeded in planting his first shot behind her shoulder, after which nothing remained to be done but to drag off the carcass and record its tape measurements as more than seven feet.—London Daily Telegraph.

Among the Worst City Noises.

All American cities are afflicted with too many noises, most of them wholly unnecessary, and in the opinion of scientists this is the cause of many of the nervous disorders which are characteristic of the nation. Noise, however, is so unusual and annoying as the raucous yelling of the street peddlers who drive their carts at a snail's pace through the residence districts, shouting at the top of their voices from morning until night. The penalty is offensive enough to well persons who have enjoyed a night's rest, but to the sick and to night workers who are compelled to sleep in the daytime it is an intolerable hardship from which they have a right to be protected by law.—Kansas City Journal.

Her Description.

A little girl, two years old, had been taken to the farm for the first time, and was much interested in the barnyard sheep, especially a litter of young lambs. In attempting to hold the mother asked what she had seen, and the little child at once replied: "A lot of little—little a lot of little—mamas!"

Self-Conquering.

You are never conquered until you have yourself to be conquered. You are conquered, even though success is within your grasp, all of which means that no person and no power can conquer a man; that he is conquered when he conquers himself. —Tyrwhitt.

The council took the matter under advisement.

—Rev. Dr. H. A. Wright, of the Methodist church will leave for conference next Monday, and he takes with him the expressed desire of his church friends, that he may return. We are sure that this desire is shared by the public at large. Dr. Wright is not only a good preacher but a model pastor and one of the sort of Christian gentlemen who make friends. During the year seventy members have been added to the church, $1,000 has been raised, as indebtedness of $800 lifted, and the church thoroughly repaired.

—"Sis in New York" is the title of the offering which comes to the Charlevoix Theatre on Saturday evening Sept. 7, and it reveals the merry Hoosier lass in a new role. A visit to the great metropolis permits of many chances for fun, and he runs the gamut from shaking hands with "Uncle" of the Waldorfastoria making a souvenir post card in the fire alarm box and poetically causing a riot, to trying to stop the trolley cars by standing on the track. She takes with her the characters that have followed her through her laughing adventures since the author discovered her down in Posey county, Indiana. She is her new play ought to be a winner.

—A stranger in the city, who came here in connection with a business enterprise, was reminded about the inclination of the local citizenship, to indulge itself in the public expression of opinions, forecasts concerning the future of our city. Therefore we comment.—Boyne Citizen. Never mind, brother. The croakers, like the poor, are always with us. Let them croak! Every town has them. If the cornerstone of the gods were to be emplied in their lays they would still croak because it were not larger. Let them croak. The man who will not fight for his town, through good and evil report, is not fit to live in it, and a man who croaks when things do not seem to move as they should, is a coward.

The Farmers Picnic.

Good still work is being done by the Sugar Co. staff in arranging the table for the big farmers' picnic here Sept. 14th. Reduced railroad rates have been secured, and an effort is being made to get the big car-ferry to bring an excursion from Grand Traverse Bay.

Enough is known to warrant the assertion that it will be the biggest farmers' gathering on record in Northern Michigan, and the preparations be on to insure enjoyment for all.

Petoskey Normal and Business College

M. O. Graves, M. A. Principal.

The nineteenth year of this successful school begins Oct. 7th, in its splendid new building on Lake St.

We take pleasure in noting the evidences of the prosperity of this remarkable school, which was the pioneer among the normal and commercial schools of northern Michigan, and which has prepared hundreds of young men and women for the best positions as teachers, book-keepers, stenographers and all round business men and women. We may quote the report of Prof. Graves in a circular, thus: "Our institution, whether it be a normal, a printing office, or a factory, by the product, judged by the standard, the Petoskey Normal has no superior. The school is small, compared to most schools of the kind, the instruction comes from the principal, personally every day. Graves is a graduate, M. A. of the University of Michigan, has devoted his life to the study of the science, is well acquainted personally and gives the same attention to each individual student. We give cuts of a few of the many successful graduates of the school, some of whom are well known in our readers.

Harry S. Squires, a Petoskey boy, went to Detroit two years ago as stenographer for the Acme White Lead and Color Works. He was soon promoted to the position of head stenographer and is now sales manager of one of the departments at a large salary.

Miss Myrtle Bachelder, formerly in charge of the office of the Booth Packing Co. in this city, is chief book keeper and stenographer for the O'Brien Mercantile Co. at Bear Lake

H. L. Millbaugh, office man with the Cadillac Chemical Co., is one of the most rapid and efficient stenographers in the state. With only the usual education of the farmer boy as a preparation, he turned his attention to shorthand and book keeping and after a short course at Ann Arbor, entered upon a very successful career.

Young people who desire thorough preparation and an assurance of a good employment should carefully consider the advantages offered by this excellent school.

Circuit Court.

Judge Moore began a special term of court Tuesday to try the case of Sampsh vs. White, growing out of condemnation of railroad right of way. The jury went to Boyne City Wednesday to view the premises, and the case is still on.

The regular Sept. term will begin next Monday. There are thirteen criminal cases, and eleven civil cases in the docket. It is expected that the term will take up the week at least.

Dependent heirs of possible discharge from a tuberculous sanitarium, Inscribed Hardbrace as book-keeper and stenographer.

H. W. Robinson, after completing his course at the Normal, was employed for a time on the G. R. & Lake Ins. Co. for several years operator for the Michigan Central at Cheboygan.

Miss Verna Wylie, formerly a very successful teacher at Central Lake, completed the commercial course two years ago, and has since been in the employ of the Bay Shore Furniture Co. at Petoskey.

CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL.

VOLUME XXXIX, CHARLEVOIX MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1907 NUMBER 15

Charlevoix Sentinel.

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

Mr. Bryan's favorite platform position.—When has a party out of power increased its strength more rapidly than the democratic party has? is fully answered by the democratic New York World. That paper calls attention to the fact that always before have the leading parties of our country increased their strength more rapidly than has the democratic party of Mr. Bryan's rebuilding. On several occasions, in 1874, 1882 and in 1890, notable democratic congressional victories were won directly following decisive democratic defeats. But in the ten years Mr. Bryan has been leading the democratic party it has never had a majority in congress and has known nothing but defeat. Something more might be said in that same direction if it shall occur to Mr. Bryan to ask another question.

One of the cheapest and most common types of the demagogue is that fellow whose capital consists principally in bombastic denunciation of corporations. Nationwide now the usual object of attack on the part of representatives of this type is taking advantage of the fact that there has been a just prejudice created against railroads in recent years through their continuous resistance to that seemingly reasonable and fair, members of the class above referred to have used this prejudice in seeking honesty and popularity. It is as much to be deplored that no encouragement shall be given to such fellows as to the requirement that railroads in Michigan shall fairly comply with the laws on our statute books. The man who has little or nothing to contribute to society save an ability to increase prejudice and to create contention is a hindrance rather than an assistant in any helpful direction.

Rev. A. T. Ferguson of Traverse City, presiding elder of this district, had the right foot badly crushed between two cars at Boardman lately. He was standing on the platform between two cars of an excursion train, when the train stopped at Boardman. His foot was in the space between the two cars and as they came together his foot was badly crushed.

Petoskey Record: The question of whether Bay View is to have an embolism in the future of not was the main order of business before the adjourned meeting of cottagers on Monday. A proposition that seems to hold the only feasible solution to the matter, was presented by Judge Moore, embodying an agreement between the association and John M. Hall and Thomas Gordon, Jr., where by these gentlemen are to provide an assembly—if it cost more than $4,000 nor less than $3,500, for a period of ten years, provided the cottagers raise the sum of $2,000 yearly by subscription. The plan is to lease a site of 50 on each improved lot for the next ten years, this to be collected the same as the lot and water rentals, each subscriber receiving a transferable ticket for each dependant member of his family. The plan received the full vote of the assemblage and committees have been appointed to carry out the plans.

The Admit of Idiot.

The most eminent medical scientists are unanimous in the conclusion that the generally accepted limitation of human life is many years below the attainment possible with the advanced knowledge of which the means is now possessed. The critical period, that determines its duration, seems to be between 60 and 65; the proper care of the body during this decade cannot be too strongly urged; carelessness then being fatal to longevity. Nature's best helper after 60 is Electric Bitters, the scientific tonic medicine that remakes every organ of the body. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist. 50c.

"Everybody Should Know"

says C. G. Hays, a prominent business man of Bluff, Mo., that Bucklen's Arnica Salve is the quickest and surest healing salve ever applied to a sore, burn or wound, or to a case of piles. I've used it and know what I'm talking about." Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist 25c.

Letter to Mr. Frank Lamphere.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: Let's talk it right out before folks, there's nothing to hide in your business or ours. If there is, we'd better hide ourselves.

We are in trade to make money; so are you. We make it by saving our customers' money; so do you. Our object, in trade, is to save your customers' wood from rotting and iron and steel and its from rusting, yours the same.

We work for thousands of property owners; you for a few. We can do some things that you can't do; we have the facilities. You can do some things that we can't; you are there. Let us work together; be faithful to one another. We can serve our customers better by working together and being faithful to one another.

Your dollar, put into your paint, will paint more feet than in any other way; and the paint will last longer. This saves you money, and saves your customers money. That's all there is in our whole business.

Yours truly

F. W. DEVOE & CO.

New York and Chicago

S. M. See & Sons, sell our paint.

Probate Order.

State of Michigan, Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.

At a session of said court, held at the probate office, in the city of Charlevoix, in said county, on the 20th day of August, A. D. 1907.

Present: HON. JOSEPH H. SMITH, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John F. Jacobs, deceased.

John Cross, having filed in said court his petition praying that the administration of said estate be granted to Alexander Cameron or to some other suitable person.

It is ordered that the 14th day of September, A. D., at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said probate office, be and is hereby appointed for hearing said petition.

It is further ordered, that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county.

JOSEPH H. SMITH, Judge of Probate.

Hard Lines for True Love.

A man and woman wrecked a train in New York state. They were married and buoyed up by the hope of robbing dead passengers of enough to pay for a marriage license and the paraphernalia of honeymoons on a special train. Nobody was killed, the robbers did not get a cent and the married pair in jail for so long a term of years as completely to upset the wedding arrangements. Doesn't the course of true love ever run smoothly?

Barmaids' French Champion.

One must have thrown from through a dull winter's night on the shores of the Thames; one must have looked in the laughing eyes of some waitress for a reduction of the absent blue sky, in order to understand all the horror of the proposal to replace charming barmaids by men.—Matin, Paris.

FREAK EUROPEAN PAPERS.

Plans to Win Readers Failed to Prolong Their Lives.

A French magazine writer who has been looking into the subject of freak newspapers thinks that one of the most remarkable of these was the Luminaria, published in Madrid. The ink with which it was printed contained a small percentage of phosphorus, so that the letters were visible and the issue could be read in the dark.

Next after this he finds remarkable the case of the Herald, printed with an ink guaranteed antiseptic—so on that sheets of death, after scanning the dire information the sheet contained one could eat it, thus deriving from it nourishment for mind and body.

The publisher of a new Parisian journal, Le Jour (The Day), promised to all subscribers for all consecutive years a pension and free burial. In spite of the inducement subscribers were so low that the paper died in a month. It was closed shortly after by a nice called Le Monchoir, the handkerchief. It was printed on paper such as the so-called Japanese napkins are made of and might be used in case the reader forgot or lost his handkerchief. It did not last long.

At two different French account reports newspapers called the Courier des Buigneres (Bathers' Courier) and La Naiade, which doesn't need translation, were printed on waterproof paper. The inducement was that the bather could take his paper into the sea with him and read it while he enjoyed his bath.

The climax of utility seems to be reached in Norway, where some of the newspapers used so tough a quality of paper that it can be cut into strips and twisted into serviceable rope when the news is all read.

HAS REAL GRIEVANCE.

Prisoner Suffers Inconveniences in an Indian Jail.

A prisoner in Rampore Doulla jail has a clear grievance against the government. There are certain inconveniences inseparable from prison life which all reasonable criminals must or less unwillingly accept; but the most complacent draw the line at being marked down and classed by a jinpardess in the seclusion of the prison yard. The animal seems to have been inspired by a sufficiently like curiosity as to the inside of a prison, and having got in by the high by irregular method of leaping the wall she seemed herself among the new brick piers on which the old barracks are raised from the ground. In the early afternoon she gained a perch near in the yard clearing up, and, like the inquisitive creature she is, peeped by leaped upon him, striking him to the ground and clawing his back. Then, with the fickleness of her sex, she suddenly changed her mind, and in an access of shyness ran away and hid herself among the latticed pillars. Now the prisoner, who complained of prisons, happened to be in the village, and to him the incident was reported. Though it cannot be said that the duties of an inspector general of prisons included the duties of a nursemaid, Col. Weir did not stop to consider technicalities, but borrowed a rifle. After some difficulty in getting within striking distance of the intruder as she lay in her fastness, he succeeded in planting his first shot behind her shoulder, after which nothing remained to be done but to drag off the carcass and record its tape measurements as more than seven feet.—London Daily Telegraph.

Among the Worst City Noises.

All American cities are afflicted with too many noises, some of them wholly unnecessary, and in the opinion of scientists this is the cause of many of the nervous disorders which are characteristic of the nation. Noise, however, is so useless and annoying in the unceasing jolting of the street peddlers who drive their carts at a snail's pace through the residence districts, shouting at the top of their voices from morning until night. The noise is offensive to every person, and persons who have enjoyed a night's rest, but to the sick and to night workers who are compelled to sleep in the daytime it is an intolerable hardship from which they have a right to be protected by law.—Kansas City Journal.

Her Description.

A little girl, two years old, had been taken to the farm for the first time, and was much interested in the barnyard stock especially a litter of young pigs. On returning home she noticed asked what she had seen, and the little child at once replied: "A lot of little—little—a lot of little—ments!"

Self-Conquering.

You are never conquered until you think you are. The moment you believe yourself to be conquered you are conquered, even though success is within your grasp; all of which means that no person and no power can conquer a man. That is only conquered when he conquers himself. —Freeman.

—The motor and electric attachments for the tower fire alarm have arrived and Supt. Martindale expects to have connections made next week.

—Mrs. Ada Stevens and children arrived here Friday from South Carolina, and are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Ford. Mrs. Stevens does not expect to return south.

—Petoskey News: Those who attended the grand meeting on Sunday and heard the Rev. H. A. Wright of Charlevoix preach on a great theme speak in the highest terms of the man and the sermon. Any one who listens to a ministerial way would be signally appreciated by even a larger audience.

—Miss Edna Green, the librarian of the public library, has the following report to offer for the month of August. No. of fiction given out 416; juvenile fiction 347, religion, 2, sociology, 17; natural science, 1; fine arts, 1; literature, 15; history, 5; biography, 3; total number 811, daily average 94. Banner day, 112. Number of patrons enrolled during the month, 105. Total number of patrons 291. Amount of fines collected $2.92.

—Many of our readers will remember Miss Evelyn Wright, who, two years ago, with the assistance of another young lady, sailed a 36 foot sloop in the Chicago-Mackinac race coming in second. Miss Wright stopped at this port on her way home, and was quite a favorite among our sailor folk. The following winter Miss Wright married C. A. Crawford, a Chicago millionaire. The past week Mr. and Mrs. Wright have been in port in their beautiful steam yacht, the Cornelia. The Cornelia has been anchored in the harbor, leaving here for St. Joseph Tuesday morning. Mrs. Crawford is the only lady member of the Chicago Yacht club, and is a well period sailor.—Indeed it is said that she can pilot the Cornelia from Chicago to Duluth or Michigan.

—Geo. Dougal and Robert F. Graham, of Chicago, the latter chief electrician of the Edison Harrison street station, are visiting their uncle Capt. John Beattie.

—The N. L. Produce Co. have bought the interest of Jerry Healy and Elmer Ingalls, in the business. They will, however, continue to furnish milk and cream to the creamery.

—Jas. Dunlevy, of St. James, was here Tuesday. Mrs. Dunlevy accompanied him, on her way to St Clemens, where she will take the mineral baths for a very aggravated case of rheumatism.

—"Skiway Bill" Gallagher of St. James, qualified yesterday as deputy oil inspector for this district, and has entered upon the discharge of his duties as successor of deputy McIntyre, of Cheboygan.

—The three Dumbrose sisters assigned to the Charlevoix mission church—St. Mary's—arrived last week and are lodged in the house opposite the church. They are sisters Clara, Innocent and Carola. They will officiate as teachers in the parochial school, which will be opened this month.

—The small steamer Mary, formerly on the Charlevoix-Boyne City route, but for the past two years operating as a ferry between Holland Wankegon, was burned to water's edge on Macatawa bay last Friday. The Mary was owned by J. C. Everett, of Chicago, and the loss is estimated at $6,000 with an insurance of $3,000.

—No business of importance was transacted at the council meeting Monday night. —Representatives of the Charlevoix Summer Home Association and Lindsay Park were present and addressed the council in the matter of supplying highway tax assessed against those properties to the streets thereof. The council took the matter under advisement.

—Dr. M. A. Wright, of the Methodist church will leave for conference next Monday, and he takes with him the expressed desire of his church that he return. We are sure that this desire is shared by the public at large. Dr. Wright is not only a good preacher but a model pastor and one of the sort of Christian gentlemen who make friends. During the year seventy members have been added to the church, $9,000 has been raised, an indebtedness of $800 lifted and the church thoroughly repaired.

—"Sis in New York" is the title of the offering which comes to the Charlevoix Theatre on Saturday evening Sept 7, and it reveals the merry Hoosier lass in a new role. A visit to the great metropolis permits of many chances for fun, and Sis runs the gamut from shaking hands with Croesus" of the Waldorfastoria mailing a souvenir postal to the fire alarm box and speedily causing a riot, to trying to stop the trolley cars by standing on the track. She takes with her the characters that have followed her through her laughing adventures since the author discovered her down in Posey County, Indiana. Sis is her new play ought to be a winner.

—A stranger in the city, who came here in connection with a business enterprise, has remarked about the inclination of the local citizenship, to indulge itself in the public expression of gloomy forebodings concerning the future of our city. Therefore we comment.—Boyne Citizen. Never mind, mind, brother. The croakers, like the poor, are always with us. Let them croak! Every town has them. If the concoqcts of the gods were to be emptied in their lap they would still croak been—as it were not larger. Let them croak. The man who will not fight for his town, through good and evil report, is not fit to live in it; and a man who croaks when things do not seem to move as they should, is a coward.

—Mrs. Chas Moody, formerly of Bay shore, died at her home in Petoskey Tuesday. Mrs. Moody was the mother of Mrs. Frank P. Bellen.

—Robert Caldwell, of Traverse City, was here over Sunday. Mr. Caldwell has just returned from a six weeks visit to his native town in Scotland.

—An engineer from the Grand Rapids office was here Saturday and made an inspection of the bad spot in the revetment just above the bridge, and new work will probably be put in this fall.

—Miss Addie Holly, book keeper at the telephone exchange, left Tuesday on her Georgian Bay trip, which came to her in the recent "most popular lady" voting contest. She will be absent about ten days.

—James Bartlett, of Indian Territory, was in Charlevoix last week, calling on old friends. Uncle Bartlett was a pioneer of Charlevoix county about forty years ago. He took up a homestead in what is now Eveline township. Thirty years ago he removed to the western country, and this was his first visit here since leaving.

—Many Charlevoix people will remember "Billy" Dennis, who four years ago was a barber at Frank Weeds shop. "Billy" was a good cornet player, and played "second" with the editor of this paper when he had the honor to lead the band. Billy has been unfortunate. Two years ago paralysis of the optic nerve, made him totally blind. This is his testimonial to Charlevoix since he left, fourteen years ago.

—Mrs. J. S. Baker, of the Beach Hotel, made a quick trip to Chicago this week, where she went to sign a contract with the Fred Harvey Dining Co., which operates all the eating houses on the Santa Fe railroad system, west of Chicago. Mrs. Baker's contract involves her services with the Harvey Co. from Sept. 5th to May 5th. She will, however remain here the most of this month, securing help for the eating house system. She will make the trip over the system from Chicago to the coast, and will be accompanied with the supply and help department.

—The rejuvenation is great city has furnished the young page with news of its material for the past decade, and the bewildered chamber looking down cable slots and growing out the gas, has become a familiar figure, but the author of "Sis in New York" has gotten out of the beaten path and instead of her Bed Bloomsbury at one of the city streets, we have the photographic image of the Bowery, the Tenderloin, the Great Metropolis in its city of a million people. We give cuts of a few of the many successful pictures of the author, and some of whom are well known to our readers.

H. W. Robinson, after completing his course at the Normal, was employed for a time on the G. R. & I. and has been for several years operator for the Michigan Central at Cheboygan.

Miss Viola Wells, formerly a very successful teacher, at Central Lake, completed the commercial course two years ago, and has since been in the employ of the Boyne City Lumber Co.

The Farmers' Friend.

Good stiff work is being done on the Sugar Co. staff in arranging details for the big farmers' meeting here Sept. 14th. Replanted tests at rates have been secured, and an effort is being made to get the big car-ferry to bring an excursion from Grand Traverse Bay.

Enough is known to warrant the assertion that it will be the biggest farmers' gathering on record in Northern Michigan, and the program will be one to insure enjoyment for all.

Petoskey Normal Business College.

M. O. Graves, M. A. Principal.

The notebook was of this successful school begins Oct. 1st, in a splendid new building on Lake St. We take pleasure in noting the evidences of the prosperity of this remarkable school, which was the pioneer among the normal and commercial schools of northern Michigan, and which has graduated hundreds of young men and women for the best positions as teachers, book-keepers, stenographers and all normal training school work. We may judge the worth of any institution, whether it be a school, a printing office, or a factory, by the product. Judged by this standard, the Petoskey Normal has no superior. The school is small, compared to some institutions of the kind, the enrollment numbering about eighty, personal care bestowed on each student, and the thoroughness of the work, the demand for graduates, and the success of the graduates in the world of business, are well known to our readers.

Continuing his way through the wide, neat filled hall, she entered him into the drawing room where he was found by her personally introduced. It was his first future mention to the essential, noble, and lovely one, and it seemed to him as if he had evidently been contemplated in his absence. He was the only person with whom she was on the second-mentioned occasion, and he was thus enabled to form some idea of her character. There was little one at this time, however, to distract his attention from the object of his visit, and he was soon in the enjoyment of a very pleasant interview, which was only interrupted by the appearance of the tea and coffee, which Mrs. Hollowell poured with a lavish hand, and which Mr. Hall was not slow to appreciate, for he was a great lover of good eating, and had been a long time from home, and was very hungry. Mrs. Hollowell was a good woman, and had a good deal of the motherly in her nature, and she was very much pleased with her son's choice, and was not slow to let him know it, when, after the tea was over, she took him into her own room to show him the presents which had been sent in for the occasion. Some were very costly, and all were in good taste, for the fashionable Mr. Hollowell had seen to that, and had given his wife a liberal sum with which to purchase what she liked. Among the presents was a set of pearl ornaments, which Mrs. Hollowell insisted on her son's giving to his bride, and which she was quite a connoisseur in, for she was a great lover of the beautiful.

"I shall be very happy to do so, if she wishes to wear them," he said, and then he added, as he looked at the pearls, that they would be very becoming to her, and he was sure she would like them.

IS FOOLISH MOVE

GERMAN TRADE AGREEMENT DENOUNCED AS PERNICIOUS.

Belief That Flat Rate Trade Would Be Less Detrimental Than Such Bartering Away of Our Industrial Rights by Special Concessions in Favor of Foreign Competitors.

The San Francisco Chronicle is in dismant regarding the extraordinary diplomatic stroke by which the United States government has bound itself, without the knowledge or consent of congress, to reduce tariff rates on competitive imports from Germany. The Chronicle one of the most ably conducted and influential among the leading Republican newspapers of this country, condemns the new treaty as a surrender, in consideration for an "arrangement to permit undervaluations on imports, subject to an ad valorem duty." Says the Chronicle:

"It could have been asked for by Germany for no other purpose. It could have been granted by our government for no other purpose than that of permitting a undervaluation, in a way involving condemnation of the gross blundering of our global state department than any which has been expressed by the American Economist. Yet, when all has been considered what else could have been the purpose of this astonishing concession? The assumption that Secretaries Root and Cortelyou were unaware of the purpose of the Germans in asking for such a concession is to reflect upon the intelligence of those two secretaries. There is not a customs administrative officer in the service of the United States, not one—scarcely a low tariffist who handles and unpacks goods in the appraisers' stores—who does not know that the opportunity to undervalue exports is sought by the Germans. So far as we have been able to discover, there is not an intelligent man in the entire customs service who does not know that the privilege of naming export values is to effect the privilege of undervaluation.

"It is past comprehension that even our gifted servants of state who know nothing of customs administration, and our inexperienced secretary of the treasury, who knows little more, should not have somehow or other learned what was at the bottom of the German demand for the 'export price' privilege. Still, we would infer or believe that they blundered like schoolboys than that with eyes wide open they deliberately betrayed the revenues of the government and the interests of American labor and industry.

"Frankly the Chronicle expresses its preference for open free trade rather than the double dealing of "reciprocity" tariff conventions. "Free trade," it says, "is foolish, but it is honest. Trading tariffs are devices of the devil." There are many protectionists who concur in this view, believing that the even tenor of a tariff for revenue only would in the long run work less mischief than the dishonest policy of accumulating some industries for the benefit of some other industries. "Double tariffs are treacherous," the American Economist has said in this connection. That is the solid truth. Rightly the Chronicle sizes them:

"The only dual tariff which is defensible is a surtax added to imports from countries which in any way discriminate against us."

The McCleary bill embodied a sound principle—that of increased tariffs against the exports of any and all countries having two sets of tariffs, and enforcing maximum rates against the products of the American people such a bill should be passed by the next congress at its first session, and in addition, a joint resolution giving six months' notice of termination of the German agreement. With such a bill passed and such a notice given we should hear no more about German threats and French duels. Neither would the country be shocked and humiliated by a repetition of the colossal blunder of permitting foreigners to write the American tariff to suit themselves.

Facts, Proof and Figures.

Not long ago Senator Rayner of Maryland said in an interview:

"We must meet the Protective league with facts and proof and figures, and not with sitting generalities. The time has gone by for discussing the general policy of tariff reform."

Facts and proofs and figures are precisely what are wanted. By all means let the Democratic enemies of the Dingley tariff bring forward a revised list of duties so that the country will know what to expect of a Democratic administration. Republican tariff tippers should do the same. They deal wholly in generalities. Let them now come forward with the details. Thus far nobody, whether Democratic or Republican, tariff tipper, has furnished a bill of particulars. They have asserted that the tariff is all wrong and needs revising, but have not said wherein. Let us have facts and proof and figures.

STAB AT PROTECTIVE SYSTEM.

What Recent Agreement with Germany Amounts to.

In declaring that "the arrangement with Germany is a violation of the principles of the protective tariff system" the Washington Post states a fact of importance, all is true as this Post gives, that the foundation stone of protectionism is that the United States shall treat all countries alike, and that "the agreement just made is not justified if the protective system is to be continued."

The agreement with Germany contemplates larger opportunities for the admission of competitive products in the United States. Either it means that, or it means nothing. We do not suppose that the shrewd diplomats of Germany have been putting to their time treaties an agreement which means to German producers no more than the entry on inconsequential concessions relating to goods, vermouth, sparkling wines, statuary, etc. Poultry dickers like this do not take so much time. It was the privilege of undervaluing their exports that the Germans wanted and got.

Just now our gifted state department and our accomplished treasury department are busily engaged in trying to show that the permission to fix their own values is not going to do the Germans any good as American industry and labor are hard hit. Then why was the permission granted? Was it law of countries distorted out of shape and nullified to no purpose? It is able to suppose it. The Post is right. The German "agreement is an undertaken stab at the protective tariff system. This agreement must of necessity be extended to all competing nations—all except Great Britain, the nation that deserves most at our hands. So, if the system stands protection must fall. Nothing is plainer than that.

STILL NEED OF PROTECTION.

Outcry of Chicago Journal is Unsupported by the Facts.

"The Dingley tariff has been in effect for ten years. In that time our infant industries have had all the protection they need, in many cases too much protection for the good of the people."—Chicago Journal.

Is that so? And how about the Journal's subscription and advertising patronage? Both have been the beneficiaries of the era of prosperity that exists in this country on account of the Dingley tariff. Does the Journal think it has got to a point where it can get along without prosperity? Has it a notion the American industries can go on paying the highest wages ever known and supplying full quotas of workmen in competition with the cheap labor of Europe? If it does it is laboring under a delusion. The removal of the protective properties of this tariff would instantly expose the industries of this country to the inroads of foreign goods made by starvation wages, and no matter how strong and prosperous an institution is, it cannot long withstand such a crushing influence on its business. Wages would have to be lowered, quality of articles cheapened and money withdrawn from investment in unprofitable concerns. Anyone with common sense can figure out the ultimate result of such a condition. With all due respect to the Journal for a most excellent but misguided newspaper the intelligent people of this country do not propose to do away with the protective tariff and let down the bars to pauper and business stagnation.—Saginaw Hawkeye.

PRACTICAL APPLICATION OF THE PERSONAL NON GRATAE PRINCIPLE.

"It is hereby understood," says the new German agreement, "that the general principle as to personal genius shall apply to special agents, confidential agents and others sent by the treasury department to investigate questions bearing upon customs administration." What will happen should these officials become personal non grataes because of overzeal in the matter of ascertaining true values of German exports is graphically suggested in the above illustration.

Seeing a Light.

In a letter to the Philadelphia Record, M. A. H. Parsulow, an unconvinced free trader, boasts that money to the singerin of the demand of the manufacturers for tariff revision at the earliest possible moment, and also for a general spasm of reciprocity in compiling products. "Our manufacturers have begin to see light," says Mr. Parsulow. Perhaps they have. But they will see more light when tariff tippers and reciprocity—competition under so-called reciprocity shall have been established. In that light they will readily recognize themselves as having foolishly dug away the ground from under their own feet and fallen in a hole.

The Hilarious Russians.

There, speaking about Yogor, Pavel said: "Do you know, Andrey, the people whose hearts are always sobbing are the ones who joke most?" The little Russian was silent awhile, and then answered, blinking his eyes: "No, that's not true. If it were, then the whole Russia would split his side with laughter."—Maxim Gorky, in Appleton's.

Largest Building Stone.

The stone used in building the Baalbek temple called Cyclopean. The famous Cyclopean temple of Jupiter ever used in building, measures respectively 64 and 68 feet in length, each block weighing about 70 tons. Some of these huge masses were accurately placed in position 19 feet above the ground in a perfect wall, without cement, with all its appliances even yet unsolved.

Above them are Arab fortifications. The quarries whence these gigantic materials were obtained are among the most interesting features of Baalbek. There was still the same the bottom of the quarry, one Tyrson, stands vertically hewn rock almost ready to the hand of the builder. One of these stones to which the Arabs give the name Hajjar-el-Hubla, measures 69 feet in length and weighs 915 tons.

M. de Saulcy calculates it would take the united efforts of 10,000 men to put this huge block in motion. This quarry is now used as a menagerie by the inhabitants of Baalbek.—Sunday at Home.

The Chinese minister to the United States Sir Chentung Liangcheng, is a great friend of Andrew and Yale. He is a devotee of baseball, and often attends the games. A good player himself, he often is the chief figure in a most unique picture, when playing, his silken cocked up, with his two small boys and their little friends, on his knee, he takes a great fancy with the minister, while he is also very much devoted to horseback riding. These last two accomplishments are rather rare among officials.

Advice as to Alaska.

Young man if you are dissatisfied or cramped in the advice of Mr. Henry Gannett, of the United States geological survey: "If you are old, go to Alaska by all means; but if you are young, wait." The Gannett gives the reason for his advice. "The scenery of Alaska is much grander than anything else of the kind in the world, and it is not well to dull one's capacity for enjoyment by seeing the finest sights first."

Just a Few Hundred Thousand.

The time was exceedingly busily time—one of second years in time the season of extreme value. A customer asked the paying teller of a New York savings bank back: "How much money do you usually have on hand when the bank opens?" "Not very much," was the answer. "Not over $100,000 or thereabouts. We keep the most of it in the main bank upstairs."

HARSH DIVORCE CURE

GUILTY PERSONS ARE TO BE IMPRISONED.

Drastic Law Enacted by New York Legislature Provides Penitentiary Sentence for Offenders—Alleged Black Mocker Convicted.

NEW YORK.—Of more effect than all of the most drastic laws ever framed against divorce in this State, it was the year a criminal offense against the sanctity of the marriage relation, misdemeanor and an enormous subpoena issued, of a lawsuit to imprisonment in a penitentiary or reform jail for not more than one month and a fine of not more than $250 or both. Mr. Dolson, author of the bill, said yesterday: "Mr. Hill is not responsible, as it may seem at first reading. The clause was added at the request of the Senate Judiciary Committee, of which Senator Cullen is chairman. Perhaps it was for the purpose of making the measure appear not quite so drastic. Perhaps it was a bone to throw to the opposition. Perhaps it is a sop to conservatism, perhaps for the sake of harmony. Perhaps it was a concession to the Senate Judiciary Committee, which, I understand, is not quite so drastic as the Assembly committee

Charlevoix Sentinel.

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

With only definite and known in advance legislative subjects to claim its attention and consideration, it would seem probable that the proposed special session of the legislature could not only in a comparatively few days correct the errors through which several important measures heretofore acted upon were made inoperative, but it could take actions in some new directions of interest and importance to the state as a whole. The present mood of the people will probably suggest to the legislature, in case they come together again, that the usual dilatory, time-wasting methods of the ordinary sessions would not be patiently endured.

The announcement which comes from Lansing that public sales of state lands to the highest bidders to take place during the month of August, are being arranged for by State Land Commissioner Rose, is a matter not only of interest to the counties whose lands are included in the coming sales but to all the taxpayers of the state. Through these sales thousands of dollars will at once be divided among the county treasuries and the state treasury, thousands of acres of non-productive lands will be restored to township and county and state tax lists, and the expense to the state of handling and advertising them will be at an end. The August sales include lands in Muskegon, Lake and Mahnagon counties, to be followed a little later by sales in Schoolcraft and Chippewa counties.

Though the report of the National Civic federation municipal ownership commission, just published, the information is given that the franchise element of city ownership is being seriously considered in several cities in England. The city owns and controls to so many directions that the city employes can keep any administration in power or put it out. This situation now constitutes the most serious threat which public ownership in England has to reckon with. When economy was expected some most unusual extravagances have been instituted upon. This is a situation which has always been in the minds of those who feared the extreme of public ownership in the United States. There could be no dodge in such a situation here, but there could be and would be political control by municipal employes with the attendant deposition which a similar situation is now producing in England.

Mrs. Almira B. Stocker, who has been sick all summer died last Wednesday, and the funeral service was held at the house and at the M. E. church at Atwood on Friday, and she was buried in the cemetery at Hayview. She was a daughter of Sylvester Brown, who lived at the time of his death in the town of Norwood on the state road. She was born at Tecumseh, Mich, on the 6th of Sept. 1871. The cause of death was gallstrike. She leaves a little daughter, husband, mother and 4 sisters.

Colonel Mayhew, wife and children of the Salvation Army arrived Monday and will stay in town this week.

Health is the Canal Zone.

The high wages paid make it a mighty temptation to city young animals to join the force of skilled workmen needed to construct the Panama Canal. Many are restricted however by fear of fevers and malaria. It is the knowing one—those who have used Electric Bitters, who go there without this fear, well knowing they are safe from malarious influence with Electric Bitters on hand. Cures blood poison too, billiousness, weakness and all stomach, liver and kidney troubles. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co., druggists.

A Few Words to the People of Charlevoix.

Dear Friends:

You seem to think that I am here to make money, to hoodoo the people and for my health. No, dear friends, I am not.

I am here to introduce the greatest system on earth for curing the sick, ailing and suffering humanity. Here are hundreds of people in Charlevoix and surrounding who have poor health, which sooner or later settles into chronic trouble if it doesn't get proper treatment. Not thrown out of the system, which could be done in a few days if done in time.

I know you have been humbugged so much by those who profess much, but prove nothing, that you are discouraged and afraid to try something new.

But that is wrong, when you have an opportunity like this you should not miss it. You never had one before like this, and may never get one again.

My charges are very small compared with what you have been paying for other treatments, and if I cannot prove to you that I can do more for you than all other systems which you have tried, it will not cost you a cent.

Let me prove this to you and you will be glad to tell others of the wonderful discovery for the curing of ailing humanity.

Call at my office, 216 Clinton street. Hours 9:30 to 11:30 a. m. or 7 to 8 p. m.

A Humane Appeal.

A humane citizen of Ishpeming, Mr. U. M. Williams, 107 West Main St., says: "I appeal to all persons with weak lungs to take Dr. King's New Discovery, the only remedy that has helped me and fully comes up to the proprietor's recommendation." It saves more lives than all other throat and lung remedies put together. Used as a cough and cold cure the world over. Cures asthma, bronchitis, croup, whooping cough, quinsy, hoarseness, pleurisy, stops hemorrhages of the lungs and builds them up. Guaranteed at F. G. Hines & Co's. drug store. Price and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS.

Mr. A. Sterling & wife of Manistee, are visiting with Mrs. Sterling's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Phill C. Gallagher.

Mr. Mike McCann has been on the sick list the past week.

A force of men are here this week repairing the light house property.

The first annual meeting of the Juvenile Club was held at the home of Mrs. John W. Green on Cherry St. Wednesday evening of last week. The purpose of this club is to perpetuate youthful customs and manners and the obligation of each member attending the meetings is to be dressed in youthful attire. All kind of juvenile sports and games were indulged in until 12 o'clock mid-night when a very nice lunch was served consisting of ice cream and cake, after which each member departed for their respective homes, feeling from ten to fifteen years younger. The promoters of this club are Mrs. Patrick Hodgy of Milwaukee, and Miss Lillian Green deserve great credit for the manner in which they entertained those present.

H. C. Lister returned from a visit with friends in Manistee.

Letter to Cash Fruit Fountain,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: There are these five ways of business in plant:

(1) alsited out with chalk, or something like that;

(2) bayrtee, better than chalk, but no covered; (3) nobody knows it's there;

(4) teeztee in the oil, or water, or other cook stuffing;

(4) too thin—too much liquid, whatever it is, for the solid;

(5) about measure.

Now with you buy by the price per "gallon."

We furnish our agents with a state chemical license of analysis that tells what's in Dewee.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The Emmet county fair will be held at the fair grounds, in Petoskey, on Sept. 17, 18 and 19.

Farmers in the vicinity of Traverse City have struck on a new scheme to get more money out of their produce. A number have arranged to build a sort of co-operative warehouse, store their crops, handle the sales themselves and save the middlemen or regular profit of buyer or shipper.

H. D. Jones, a Mormon exhorter from Dayton, Ohio, began to expound his doctrine on a street corner in Traverse City Saturday night. An aged citizen raised an argument and the discussion became heated. Some 200 listeners decided that Jones should have a lack and headed him for the river bill after hauling him about the street for a time let him and his six disciples go.

It is rumored that the White Pine interests near Boyne City have been sold to Bay City parties, the same ones who have bought the Ward interests, and that the lumber will be manufactured in Bay City instead of Boyne City.—Central Lake Torch.

Herr Wilhelm, of Traverse City, has secured the contract of building the big iron furnace to be erected here, it will take a year to complete the job. Wilhelm has just completed building a dam at Barker Creek—East Jordan Enterprise.

All the committees that are in charge of the details for the Soldiers and Sailors reunion are working hard at present perfecting the plans and the big event promises to be the most successful ever held in Northern Michigan. It is though that there will be at least 1,000 old soldiers in camp here and it is probable that the relief corps will be better represented than it has in several years. All the posts do not respond by letter although some have done so already. East Jordan writing that they would have thirty five in their body. The program will be completed within the next few days. One feature of the big parade will be an escort of twenty mounted men.

Petoskey News: For nearly two months back there has been some little agitation in local circles of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, brought on by a general straightening up of the company's books. In looking over those back accounts it was found that the company had a large amount of money out, partly in notes and partly in unpaid assessments. Desirous of getting these financial affairs in first-class shape again, the company immediately took steps toward that end, with the result that a number of policy holders have been the principals in minor suits. Justice Worden has had a number of these cases in since July 12, and in most cases a settlement was reached that was satisfactory to both parties, some trouble being experienced in a few suits.

The Beulah Land Commonwealth for Boys of Boyne City, Mich., has received over fourteen hundred of these homeless and neglected lads from the slums of our large cities since the work started. During the past year sixteen thousand and two hundred lodgings, and forty eight thousand six hundred meals were provided for these lads. The farm is receiving just the class that other institutions do not want and will not have. Such a thing as a really incorrigible boy is not a fact, and no boy is too bad to be admitted to the full privileges of the farm. Boys are not admitted temporarily and encouraged in idleness; but are received permanently and helped to good, useful manhood. This is not merely a charity but the boys' right and our privilege to lift them up and turn their faces toward the light.

ANY good party wanting money, having A-1 security, can obtain same from George H. VanPelt, Address, months of July and August, Norwood, Michigan, balance of the year, 55 Huron street, Chicago, Ill. My reference are any one who has ever dealt with me. I also have, I think, as fine a 1,200 lb. black mare for sale as there is in Northern Michigan. Double and single harness and buggy. Must be disposed of by August 25th. Cut this out for future reference.

WANTED—At once maid for general house work.

CRUELTY TO HUMBLE HEN.

Man Complains of Mean Trick Played on Defenceless Biddy.

"The meanest trick I ever heard of," said a pugilistic "Sir now being played on a certain family of New Jersey town. This trick comes under two heads. It consists under its head of cruelty to animals and under the head of giving intoxicating drinks to minors. It should be taken up and put a stop to by our humane societies. Let the sex stand by one another off the way down the line." "That I thought you were talking about sense." "I am talking about eggs. That is the point to my story. You know how hens only want to sit at certain times after they've laid a couple of dozen eggs running." Well, on this New Jersey farm I found a speak of this from the hens alcoholized grain, and while the poor unprotected creatures are under the influence they place them on top of nests of eggs, and when they come to themselves the pair is a blank, they think they laid the eggs beneath them, and for many days equal there distinctly until the chicks are hatched. It's a power-making trick, isn't it, all right. The other a poor hen drunk—its therefore her besides is no important a matter as that of offspring! How would you like to be deserted alone your offspring? No, sir, it ain't right, and it ought to be put a stop to."

SADDLE OF HUMAN SKIN.

Remarkable Object in Possession of Philadelphia Man.

Human skin can be prepared, tanned and made into durable articles as successfully as can the skin of horses and other animals. The resulting leather is very much like dundy, or plaskin. William Hessell of Philadelphia has the human saddle which has ever been known to be made from human skin—a beautiful pink white saddle—and any one examining it would be at a loss to tell the kind of skin from which it is made. The pores have a familiar look, but the skin itself is of an astonishing fineness. The saddle was made from the skin of a man. A woman's skin, generally speaking, would be too delicate. Human skin leather is a very new article and it will be exhibited shortly in R. Stoneman's physiology, will be a piece, made into a cover for an instrument case, and other medical students get enough to be made into a purse or a pair of slippers. Patients sometimes have a belt or a belt made from a Mob which has been amputated.

WHY PROPOSAL WAS SUDDEN.

One Thing That Fond Youth Had Taken No Thought For.

"This is so sudden!" As he heard the girl speak these words the astonished young man rose to his feet in bewilderment. "Sudden!" he repeated. "I have asked you to be mine two years ago, I believe. It was, since I first met you. For several months after that I only saw you occasionally; then gradually, very gradually, I began to see more of you. Six months to get on a formal calling basis, it took six months more to be a regular visitor, six months more to win you to my true Christian name, and it is only during the last few months that I have ventured, with many misgivings, even to hold your hand. And now, after all this gradual development of our love, you tell me that my declaration is so sudden. Do you call this sudden?" "I do, indeed," she replied calmly. "But for what reason?" The young lady replied, with some degree of hauteur. "Simply this. I hardly imagined you would dare to speak to me like this for another two years at least, considering your poor salary."

Cheer Up!

Writers who still have their way to make may be encouraged to know that Mr. Aldrich's "Baby Bell" was promptly declined when it was offered in succession to Putnam's, Harpers and the Knickerbocker, so that the poet had to fall back on the Journal of Commerce for its publication.—Boston Globe.

Also, Warner has called a special session of the state legislature Sept. 30 to reconsider some of the measures that were passed by the last legislature and were found to be defective. The proposed changes in the primary law, the juvenile law and the law governing the establishment of a central state normal school.

—Spraying to kill weeds will doubtless be the accepted method in the near future of clearing fields. This has been done most successfully in killing wild mustard in Cut, and in destroying charlock, wild barley, sheperd's purse, wild buckwheat and ragweed in N. Dakota. A 10 per cent solution of chemically pure copper sulphate seems to have done the business, applied 60 gal per acre.

—Among the bills passed by the legislature and signed by the governor is one which provides for the quarantine of cattle in its own contagious disease and defray all expenses. Heretofore the county has been called upon to care for such cases. Perhaps this new law will cause the taxpayers to be more careful and cautious to see that future importations are the real thing and not a great, big joke.

—The special election for the election of delegates to the Constitutional convention, will be held one week from next Tuesday, Sept. 17th. —Mr. A. T. —Saturday there arrived in port, in tow of the steamer Dewey, the snow schooner Inland Queen. On the quarter deck stood the stalwart form of Commander H. —One of the prettiest literary gems that has come to our notice is a poem in Current Literature entitled "Wilderness." In diction, thoughtfulness and grace, it is pure gold in every line. The author is Miss Sara Teasdale, daughter of J. W. Teasdale, of St. Louis, who is one of our best known and most popular summer residents. The poem was first published in the St. Louis Mirror, and that Current Literature should reprint it indeed is a compliment that Miss Teasdale may be proud of.

—The old timers drop in once in a while. The latest is O. L. Wheat, whom the old residents will remember well. Mr. Carr is also in St. Johns, engaged in the carpenter business. Mr. Wheat is enjoying himself among his many old acquaintances several days this week.

—Wm. Lar, our only Chinese fellow citizen, had a very narrow escape from death last Friday. He was painting on a scaffold at the Belvedere Hotel, when it gave way, precipitating him to the ground, a distance of fifteen feet. He was taken up for dead and carried to his room at the Hotel Bartlett, where three doctors were soon looking him over. The general opinion was that Lar was a goner, but he was waiting about the hotel office Sunday in good spirits, two ribs were fractured, but no other injury sustained. Nothing would kill this short of a fall from the top of the water tower.

The Farmers Picnic.

The farmers' picnic is on at the sugar factory. As we go to press about noon, it is evident that the threatening weather of the morning kept many at home, and the attendance is far from what was expected.

But by ten o'clock the sky cleared partially and gave promise of a condition. At last writing it is evident that the picnic will be not from a failure, as the farmers are coming in from nearby points.

Had the sun shown in full this morning there is no doubt but that the event would have been the greatest of its kind in the history of Northern Michigan.

A Pleasant Social Event.

Hon. J. W. Gibson, president of the Charlevoix Commercial Association, entertained the commercial council, city officials and press at the Belvedere last night. The occasion was given in honor of a "smoker," but an elegant lunch was served in the dining room.

There were no speeches, but there was very much being done of a social nature. All who were present enjoyed their appreciation of the hospitable courtesies received.

Dead Far From Home.

Saturday Horace Wakefield, of this city, received a telegram from Towner, N. D., that Geo. Wakefield was dead at that place. No particulars were given of the cause of his death, but his wife, who is absent, and his death, was a short time previous to his relatives here.

Had some time Wakefield became subject to attacks of mental unbalance, due to epilepsy.

He became violent at times, and his friends and neighbors had taken charge of his affairs.

An examination under the direction of the probate court last evening resulted in his being sent to the Traverse City asylum.

Late in July, very much to the surprise of the community, he appeared in town, but seemed to be rational and harmless. It was soon discovered however, that he had escaped from the asylum. Manifesting no disposition to be troublesome, no one seemed to be disposed to cause his re-arrest.

August first he disappeared. His relatives say they had no knowledge of his going, or where he went. To their knowledge he had no money, no means of getting it. The news they heard of him was the telegram announcing his death in the far Northwest.

—The country newspaper is the most useful of all agencies which stimulate the interests upon citizens. Without the aid of the local newspaper, towns as a rule are thriftless and dead. The county newspaper makes more great men out of less material, more tickets without straws, than any other factor in politics, and it is the one bulwark which can climb to local distinction and higher fame. Thereby of the local newspaper has always dated the measured thrift of the community and it is the life of the locality in which it is published. And the measure of its support, as a rule, is the measure of its usefulness.

Hilda Westhaver, Principal of Grammar School.
Mary Jones and May Gleason, 7th and 8th grades.
Ellen Penland and Pearl Lewis, 5th and 6th grades.
Alice E. Hazel, B. Sc., B. Pd., Training room.
Florence Crowell, 3rd and 4th grades.
Mae Hamilton, 1st grade.
SUBURBAN SCHOOL.
Stella Manson, 5th and 6th grades.
Catherine E. Jarvis, 3rd and 4th grades.
NORTH SIDE.
Bessie Turner, 3rd and 4th grades.
Benjamin M. Cleveland, 1st and 2nd grades.

The attendance promises to be large this year, and with the foreign element in the schools, as there have been some inquiries from all parts of the county that have taken up their abodes in Charlevoix during the past few years, and the prospects are realizing more each year that our system can offer them practical training which will be of value to them in the future.

There have been some changes made in the system which ought to be observed by the public. The high school promotion class will be used whereby a student advances by shorter steps, and with the student's interest, is intensified and the work is accomplished with less strain as he is held responsible for only a half year's work at a time of promotion instead of a whole year's work.

The County Normal has presented a very promising aspect, and will be a permanent part of the Michigan school system. All of our graduates from the normal department who desire to teach have schools and continued the highest wages so it is an advantage both to the teacher and the county. The demand for teachers is seeking these trained teachers for their schools. There have been a number of applications for membership in this year's class, so that it will be quite large.

Athletics will flourish as heretofore. Principal Wilson was the star half back on the champion Sam Normal team and was also a member of the base ball and track teams. With the help of Mr. DeVoe who has had charge of athletics at Cheboygan our boys should make good in that line of school life.

The first issue of High School Hustler appear Oct. 1st with Earl Young as Editor-in-chief, and with his able corps of assistants, the paper should be a success.

There have been a number of calls for recommendations for girls to work for their board, and this will give those otherwise could not attend school opportunities for an education.

On the occasion of the graduation of the class of '07, we spoke of the excellent work done by Supt. Woodley in his direction of school work here. We not only desire to continue but to emphatically emphasize that opinion. Mr. Woodley deserves more than ordinary commendation he has earned every good word that we can say of him, and we can say many. He not only is endowed with strength as an educator but has that rare quality that the life students to him to board of stand. If you want to see some of our hunky high school students "good thinks come" say something against Woodley. It is quality that insures good order and discipline and results in the success of the school.

Contrary to Guy's expectations, Agnes did not come up to breakfast, and he was particularly sorry, as he had his suspicions where he intended taking her and the little girl and was sealed by her fresh face quite charmingly neatly in the office of the village hotel, where the road ran when Guy told her where they were going, and why they were going there. He was came so near that he could see nothing but her face in profile, as she replied hurriedly:

"I don't like to go much that direction. It is so near Aikenside, and I don't care to meet Mr. Hollibrook."

Then she gave Guy such a peculiar look covering Marcia's probable home. "Would you go to Aikenside if I should?" he ventured to inquire. "Yes," she replied. "How old is Madeline? I mean, thinks Madeline was that kind to good girl to take to boarding? Because, Trudie's mother, and the little prattler herself, made us the young man's acquaintance." "Madeline is six," he added, "because, Brother Ned, fetching her to Boston, thought it was time she was in school." "Six years old! Why, I know a little girl just about that age, and I feel—

Guy drew her nearer to him, for the chair trembled, and she was trembling so that he could not respond, so he said:

"Who would you like all this little one?—and your mother, sure?"

"No, not at all," said Mr. Morton, the waiting maid was left in Boston. She told me about it. I was expecting to own different from mamma. Do you [illegible]

The question startled the young man, who was fond of nothing so much as children, and he was about to ask her if she taken friends who were unwittingly breathing up Madeline's very life, but the grandparents and Jessie, these he suffered to remain, and sitting down by Maddy, watched till the last blood ceased. Silently and reverently the aged counsel prayed for their darling, asking that, if possible, she might be spared, and that heard their prayers. Lifting, at last, the heavy fog from Maddy's brain, and waking her to life and partial consciousness. It was Jessie who first caught the expression of the dearest eyes and darling forward, she exclaimed, "That's wicked, Mr. Hollibrook, she will live."

Wonderingly Maddy looked at her, and then as a confused recollection of where she had been before rushed over her mind, she smiled and said:

"Why, my dear, I do. Have I never come home, and this Dr. Hollbrook's office?"

"No, no; it's home, your home, and you are getting well," Jessie cried, bending over the bewildered girl. "Dr. Hollbrook has cured you, and I'm the happiest girl in Christendom."

"Dr. Hollbrook!" repeated the doctor, who was standing at the foot of the bed, and who, as Jessie spoke, had come to her side and felt her pulse. "Dr. Hollbrook, Dr. Hollbrook, I know, I know, I know I did."

"Hush, hush, hush," said the patient, as the doctor stood by her, feeling her pulse and looking down into her face with a look of intense interest. "Don't talk, don't think, don't—I know I feel too proud. Tell me who brought me home, and who—

"Hush, hush," said the doctor, as he felt the pulse grow more feverish, and saw the flush deepen on her cheek

VERMONT'S NEW MASTER.

Hon. George W. Pierce, Who Succeeded Ex-Governor Bell.

One of the new members of the national grange will be Hon. George W. Pierce, master of Vermont state grange. As the grange is playing such an important part in the economic and educational development of the country, its personnel is of wide interest.

Mr. Pierce comes of a fine old New England family whose pioneers are famous in the annals of their state, says Farm and Fireside. He secured the foundation of an education in the country schools and has built upon it by a life time of study, investigation and observations. His outlook is so clear, his business ability so well tried and his character thrown with men of affairs so close to the business and governmental life of his state so well known that he became manager of a large publishing firm, the Horticulturist, which he brought to a high degree of prosperity. In 1892 he was appointed secretary of the state board of agriculture. In 1897 conscientious to the Tennessee centennial exposition, in 1899 in the farmers' national convention. For six years he was secretary of the Vermont State Dairymen's association, for one year its president and declined re-election. Elected to the Vermont senate in 1904, he became an active champion of farmers' interests. After the session had ended he resigned unfavorably on a grade crossing bill which he was pushing, one member only voting for it. He brought it through the committee and received its passage.

He has been a member of the grange thirty years, for three years master of his own grange, during which time he added 170 members. He has held many positions of honor and trust and promises to be a strong member of the national body.

MR. PIERCE'S PLEDGE.

Good Roads in Ohio.

Ohio state grange and the state board of commerce are working unitedly for road improvement in that state. It is designed to ask the legislature to authorize the state road commissioner to take up the work in default of action by the county commissioner. An appropriation of $5,000 will be asked for each county to start with. The two organizations named propose the following amendments to the existing legislation. To ask the county to pay 50 per cent of the cost of the roads instead of 25 per cent, the county to pay 30 per cent instead of 50 per cent, the township 10 per cent and adjoining property owners 10 per cent. A new phase of the road improvement question has arisen in that state, as farmers are objecting to the destruction of the roadbed by heavy traffic. It is claimed that there machines running at a high rate of speed sweep the top dressing from the surface of the material from which the roads are made and that the wind scatters it in the fields, on the grass and growing crops.

An Educational Conference.

An educational conference was held at Middle Bass island, Lake Erie, in August. The object of this conference was to bring about a system of education that will enable all children during their school age to acquire that particular kind of instruction that will fit them for the vocation they propose to follow. Further there was a discussion of the labor and truancy laws. Special emphasis was placed on the fact that the education of the child and not the school should be the destination and that the employment of children out of school hours and during vacation should be a part of the educational system as well as the study of books. The conference believes that all children, whether in school or employed, should be under the direction of a school district officer. A temporary committee of organization was appointed, of which E. B. Norris of New York is to represent the grange and report at a future meeting.

The Live Grange.

The live grange is alive all through the year. The grange that dies regularly each spring will soon forget to come to life in the fall. The members who "drop out" or "fade away" during the four hard work months will soon stop out and stay away permanently, and their grange will fall into the "dormant" class. Keep the grange busy, just as you keep the soil busy, and growth and good returns will be assured.—New York Farmer.

The grange has done many good things, but in our opinion, says the National Stockman, none has been greater than its forty years of contention, declaration and proclamation of the importance and dignity of agriculture. Before it has been a dispute of that old idea that there is something degrading in cultivating the soil.

Would you make a good investment?
Join the grange.
Do you care for self improvement?
Join the grange.
If you hopefully aspire
To a nobler life and higher,
You will find what you require
In the grange.

Luck of a Landlord.

The harsh forest laws of William the Conqueror are responsible for the meaning of good luck now so often associated with the term windfall. Under the Norman it was a criminal offense to cut down timber in the forests, but as the peasants were allowed to gather whatever wood the wind had blown down they always hailed a storm as an omen of good luck.—Sunday Magazine.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

A Little Information Which Every Grange Should Possess.

The national grange was organized Dec. 4, 1867, but its permanent organization as a delegated body was not perfected until the sixth annual session, which was held at Georgetown, D. C., in January, 1873, at which time delegates from nine state granges, representing 1,362 subordinate granges, were present. The seventh annual session was held at St. Louis, Mo., in February, 1874. There were thirty-two states and two territories represented. During the year 1874 12,035 granges were organized, and receipts throughout were $216,581. The declaration of purpose was adopted at the seventh annual session, in document, which still exists admirably and unchanged civilization. The eighth annual session was held at Charlestown, S. C., in February, 1875, and thirty-six states and territories were represented. In 1875 distinction amounting to $58,875 were made to the state granges, pro rata to the number of granges in each state, to relieve suffering among the members of the Order caused by floods and crop failures. The secretary's office was moved to Louisville, Ky., in 1875, and the national grange convened there in November of that year. Up to 1876, 24,228 charters had been issued. After that a reaction took place. Instead of $12,000 from state granges due in 1875 there was only $12,219 in 1876, and half the amount had been furnished by the national grange in reimbursements of dues and donations. Up to 1879 $500,000 was refunded and donated to the state granges. In that year only seventeen granges were organized, quite a contrast from the 12,035 organized in 1874, only five years before. In 1876 there were 2,800 granths employed, and as the balance of the receipts from the expenditures had fallen to $10,000, bonds amounting to $15,000 were ordered sold, but not until 1882 was the last sale of bonds made to cover the deficiency. Since that time the balance has been on the right side of the ledger.

Busy New York Granges.

State Lecturer Shepard of New York has issued a blank form to subordinate grand lectures for reports along various lines of grange work. Only about one-half the granges in the state reported for the quarter ended July 1, or 288, of which number 154 held public meetings during the quarter with 9,413 visitors, and the number of applications for membership received to the meetings was 111. Of 234 granges reporting on lecturers' programmes it was shown that those participating in music numbered 2,617, in readings 2,393, in debate 1,263. Only seventy-six granges use printed programmes, seventeen conferred degrees without musinals, although fifty-five partially dispensed with their usual. As there are just about twice as many granges in the state as reported and only about one-half of them reported, the figures given will be held at low rates for the round trip. Tickets good going on September 6, 7 and 8, with return limit October 6th, 1907. Ask agents for details of points which may be covered on this trip and cost of tickets.

"Sleep?" shouted the city chap in disgust; "why, man, I was twenty and turning all night."

"Sorry to hear it," said the farmer. "Kept turning, did you, neighbor? Wall I told you that you would sleep like a log."

"Funny, eh?" Well, do you know there was so much noise I saw it was unusual to keep quiting in my ears and rose at dight."

If weak, worn-out, nervous, cannot sleep; have indigestion, headache, neuralgia or periodic pains, it is because your nerves are weak. It is lack of nerve force that makes the stomach, heart, lungs, etc., work imperfectly—become sick. Dr. Miles' Nervine cures the weak, strengthens and restores nerve strength, and puts the power behind the organs to do their work.

"Almost from since I received from you a sample, improvement and palpable gain of the nervous system, which I lacking in comfort, or work or talk. Now I can do more work, talk more, be a less nervous. My doctor did what seemed to do me any good. I had tried many other medicines, but none gave me such good results as your Nervine. Long use has confirmed my opinion of your Nervine as a friend. I got relief from the first, and after a few days felt like a new man. I feel that your Nervine has invigorated my whole system. I am very grateful because your Nervine has restored health to me. I have had absolutely no trouble since I left off using it."

Reference Books.

The children should be taught how to use reference books, to look up meanings, spellings, places and so on. The habit of looking up whatever needs getting identified appears good for good manners and education. The child that has acquired it requires but little going to school in order to impose those who have extensive school training in the use of reference books.

A CENTENARIAN.

The Oldest Grange in the World Celebrates Its Hundredth Anniversary.

Above Dunton of Hope, Me., has the distinction of being the oldest grange in that state. It and no one United States, by having celebrated his one hundredth birthday anniversary on Aug. 5. A few months ago Mr. Dunton became a member of Hope grange, and it was under the auspices of that grange that the anniversary celebration was held. Every one of the nineteen subordinate granges in Knox county sent a large delegation of members to do honor to the oldest brother. There was a procession in the form of decorated grange floats, headed by the Camden brass band. The venerable gentleman rode in a carriage to the exercises, spoke feeling and made assignal the attention of the people. Asbury Hodgdon of Montcalm, son of Ahaz, president, Hosea Simmons, master of Mount Pleasant grange, made a short address. Anthon Dunton of Belfast gave the principal address. Hon. John Dunton was again. An original poem by Rev. E. W. Pike was sung by the choir. Sullivan Butler of Rockland and Thomas Hunt of Camden spoke briefly. David S. Gould of Malvern, Mass., was another elder by gentleman present, who, it was stated, has been chairman of every town meeting at Malvern for a number of years, having presided at 200 meetings at annual times and for various purposes. A letter was read from Hon. John Dunton, who is a member of Hope and his aged daughter. Mr. Dunton is in full possession of his mental faculties and can remember absolutely many events of his early days. He recalls the great cold of 1816 when it was then just seven years of age. When the British landed on the Maine coast and took some prisoners. He fled over to Camden to help repel the invaders.

It was in the year of his birth that Robert Fulton operated the first steamer on the Hudson river. The first railway line was a short piece of track laid on Beacon street, Boston. It was the year of the great Lisbon and Ulark earthquake in the Northwest territory. Napoleon Bonaparte was at the zenith of his power, and the great Louisiana and Mobile were built that year. In his childhood the Declaration of Independence was let fairly one years old, and Washington had been dead four eight years when "Uncle" Abner was born. Into his room came hope as to realize the great epoch covered in this one century. In the universe story of his one hundredth birthday he wrote the following letter to his grandson:

Hope, Me., Aug. 1, 1907.

To My Friends:

The good lord and support always on the 5th day of August, 1907, I shall be ninety-one years old. Some of my friends have agreed to celebrate my birthday in Camden, in the company of his, which I shall be pleased to see. Some other or some other as need have to take care. Yours truly,

Queer Names of Granges.

Rhode Island has its Kickamuit, Maine its Dishmonsuck, Massachusetts Weweantic, Connecticut Quinnipiac, Wessaquoddy and Wonnumatta, New Hampshire names filling with Wamtastaquit, Pattaconway, Mascoma and Pumpkinseed, while Delaware lost reports Quinnetisset, Winnapaug, Tashmamuck and Mechanicsville. Good names for a pronunciation match in the grange!

Wen Grange Scholarships.

The successful contestants for the grange scholarships in Cornell Agricultural college offered by the New York state grange are Byron H. Lodge of Monroe county, Dwight Wakeman of Broome county, Orvin F. Wright, Katherine E. Jones, Ora B. Jones of Oneida county and Earle Hardman of Chautauqua county.

The annual fairyary fair to be held under the auspices of the Pomona grange of Newcastle county, Del., on June Sept. 2 and continues five days. The interest of the grange in the agricultural aims is noticeably, or where it is interest they can a fair of their own, as is the state, maintained case.

There are over 220,000 farms in New York state and barely 70,000 granges, men and women. Lots of room for grange schoolmary work without going to the Philippines or Alaska.

THE GRANGE PRESS.

A Powerful Influence in the Promotion of the Order.

[Special Correspondence.]

Ever since the grange movement began the most prominent feature in the work it has had a powerful ally in the grange press, and the managers of periodicals in general have been alike secure. The rapid increase among years since in the number of granges in New Hampshire, in the membership and in the favorable change in public sentiment in relation to the work of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry was materially aided by the support of the press. The success of the grange, the steady, persistent and resolute efforts of its leaders would have commanded the Order to the serious attention of thoughtful people, but its progress would have been comparatively slow without the aid of the press. Having realized the possibilities of the grange, the editorial fraternity commanded the interest and received its hearty support of the present time nearly every paper published in New Hampshire has some of its forces identified with and actively engaged in the propagation of the Order. In its infancy newspapermen was a friend to the grange in introducing it to the public. Today it is a most powerful factor in the enlightenment of the consciousness of the farmyard and of the debater and in the introduction of new features in the library grangemen, for it is recognized by every pedagogical believer that it supplements the literary grangemen lacks drawings, and drawings have proved permanent. Having acquired the distinction in New Hampshire of leading the greatest per cent of active granges in the whole number organized, we give credence to statistics, our conviction.

Planned of two years ago, in response to the request and the wishes of grange papers and of the managers of grange departments and in accord with the desires of editors in general, the grange press bureau was established, and since that time the summer has never failed to furnish a weekly letter, containing an abstract of the reports sent out by the corresponding in each grange in the Granger state, as all specialists are liable to publish it. We have had grange papers and grange departments, as every religious and secular papers, but the bureau is the most satisfactory and successful. No grange paper in the state ever had a thousand paying subscribers, and the grange department received only a few dollars annual, but some part of the bureau's weekly letter or real by special of a million people.

Rural School Gardens.

At a recent grange conference held at Chautauqua Lake Prof. Charles Cummings, president Olivet College, presiding outlined the purposes of a three-days' grange conference to be held next year. The purpose of the conference is to discuss the school garden as a means to develop the child's sense of the beautiful and to familiarize him with the principles of agriculture. Professor Bailey of Cornell spoke at length on "New Rural Education." Hoosier that he would like to see in every county a summer home institutions attractive sociability with a congenial environment, a place for discussing social forms of town meeting, and for the rural church. He said that the school garden should be planted on the school grounds wherever possible, and where not possible the child should have his garden at home under the supervision of the teacher. Dr. Vincent spoke in behalf of the Chautauqua institution in favoring the school garden plan and offered six weeks in preliminary training to school garden work, and summer at Chautauqua to any rural schoolteacher desiring to attend. Professor Cummings who would carry out the plans of the conference, discussed the school garden in the school. The proposition was unanimously accepted.

Not a Farmer.

Lieutenant Governor Dunlap of New York is a rich man and the son of a rich man, and he said at the Tuxedo Club dinner last night that he had never done a full day's work on the farm, but he agreed with the agricultural talk to farmers on the occasion above mentioned.

Women as Grange Editors.

Mrs Herbert Mann presides the grange department of the Ohio Farmer, Miss Jennie Buell thereof, Mrs. Ingham Farmer and Mrs. Mary Ione that of Farm and Fireside, all five departments too.

The Washington County (N. Y.) Agricultural society has offered $50 to the grange making the best exhibit at the fall county fair, and other prizes ranging down to $10. There will be several granges in the contest.

It is interesting, and agreeably so, to the editor of this grange column to see so many newspapers reproduce from it in agricultural journals and other papers. Let the good work go on!

A new grange song book has been recently issued by Albert P. Rogers, containing grange words set to old familiar tunes.

There are quite a few hagerstown papers of influence that do not carry a grange department.

Circuit Court.

When Judge Mayne called the regular term of circuit court Monday morning, Judge Walker, of Chicago was his guest on the bench, and Hon. Balsa Boudeman sat with the bar. The forenoon was taken up with the call of the calendar, and the disposal of several probationary cases.

John and Pearl Brown, of East Jordan, charged with keeping house of ill same, plea of guilty entered. Sentence deferred.

The two rape cases, both from East Jo-dan, Tolleski and Hathaway, were put over to next term.

Emma Mitchell, charged with assault with intent to kill, entered a plea of guilty of assault and battery. Sentence deferred.

A Notable Trip.

One of the most remarkable automobile trips on record, in this section, at least, was terminated in Charlevoix last week Tuesday, when Mr. Chas. Gotlehaus, with his wife and one friend, of New Orleans, arrived in their locomotive from that far off city.

They left New Orleans July 20th, for New York, as their first run. After a day or two of rest they made the second long run to Chicago, then from Chicago to South Bend. This was made in a day, and a day was taken for the run from South Bend to Grand Rapids. The run from Grand Rapids to Cadillac was made in eight hours, and the home run from Cadillac was made in a day.

Not a breakdown or a mishap occurred in the entire journey. The car was a 50 horse-power locomobile, and the chauffeur was A. J. Melchner.

The News and the Hearth Stone.

In a recent issue the editor of this paper expressed his opinion concerning the relation of the local paper to public interests. Several of our editorial neighbors did us the honor to publish and endorse the article.

And this leads us to refer to our conception of the relation of the local paper to the community in which it is published with reference to certain, we all happiness, that find their storm center in the police court.

In a large city the individual resident does little and troubles not beset the family circle next door to him, or across the street, and he cares less. A mother's heart may be hunted just across the hedge from you, while all is joy in your household.

Not so in country communities like this where there is always a bond of common sympathy and mutual concern. The trouble that comes to one household brings a pang to the community. This community sympathy begotten by the closer relations that exist between neighbors.

The sorrow that comes to the mother's heart and pierces as an arrow the father's very soul, is poignant enough without any help from the local paper. The wound is deep enough without twisting the blade and rending the heart strings.

So far as this paper is concerned, these soul harrowing afflictions will be suppressed. The gratitude of a sorrowing mother is sufficient reward.

A Remarkable Report.

A human statement, published in Richmond, Ind., Mr. U. D. Williams, 107 West Main St., says: "I appeal to all persons who wish lungs to take Dr. King's New Discovery, the only remedy that has helped me and Will continue up to the proprietor's recommendation." It saves more lives than all other throat and lung remedies put together. Used as a cough and cold cure the world over. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough, asthma, bronchitis, grippe, hemorrhage, lung troubles and consumption it is supreme. Guaranteed at all druggists. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

A Great Event.

Miss Alberta Lee, who is playing the part of Pamneno, the Indian girl, in "As Told in the Hills" at the Charlevoix Theatre Wednesday Sept. 18th, shot the largest deer that was killed in Lewis County, New York last season. She says however, that there is little glory in the achievement for it was as near an accident as such a thing could be. Miss Lee who is one of the best rifle shots in the country uses a shot gun almost as well as she does a rifle and next to hunting big game, duck shooting is one of her favorite pastimes. The camping party, of which she was a member, was lodged in a cabin in the Adirondacks twenty miles from the nearest town where supplies could be bought. Knowing there were excellent prospects for getting a brace of ducks she went to the shore of a nearby lake and waited, gun in hand, in a sheltered nook in a range of a place frequented by the numerous flocks of ducks that were seen around the little lake every day. She had waited less than a half hour, she said, when there was a rustle not fifty yards from where she was concealed, and looking she saw the tips of a pair of antlers over the top of the bushes near her. It was the work of a second to change the shells in her gun, replacing the one charged with duck shot with heavy buckshot. "When that deer heard the click as I closed the gun", Miss Lee said, "it turned slightly and at that instant I fired both charges. He was away like a flash, but some of the heavy shot took effect just back of his shoulder and he was found only a few hundred yards away." Miss Lee had the head mounted, where it hangs in her summer home on the shore of Lake Michigan, as proof of her story she has a number of photographs of herself and the deer that was taken by one of the party. "I don't wonder that people want more proof of a story like that," she said, "for I'm sure I would not believe it if it were told any one else."

Mr. Wilkinson and wife of Chicago, Mrs. Dora Kincaid of Corry, Penn., were the guests of Dr. and Mrs. Wilkinson over Sunday.

It is now that the people of the island have an opportunity to listen to such eloquence as was accorded them a few evenings ago by the Hon. T. Donahoe of Illinois, when he delivered a lecture on Irish history. Although young in the oratorical arena, yet his ability in that line will compare very favorably with the masters. The comprehensive manner in which he handled the Irish question shows him to be thoroughly familiar with the history of Ireland both ancient and modern, and the appreciation of his merits as a lecturer was manifested by the frequent bursts of applause from the audience. Mr. Donahoe is no mountebank nor charlatan and the A. O. H. of this place were very fortunate in securing such an able speaker.

Letter to W. H. Woodley,

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir. You are a teacher; here's one for your topic:

If the painting cost two or three times as much as the paint, and one paint goes twice as far as another, how much is the other one worth?

If Devoe is worth $1.50 or $1.75 a gallon, how much is the other one worth?

How much is a gallon of paint worth anyhow?

The answer is: Depends on the paint.

The reason is: paint isn't always paint. There are true and false paint and short-measure.

How much is a short-measure gallon worth? How much is false paint worth? How much is Devoe worth?

There are millions a year in the answer to this last one.

Yours truly

IS NOT FAIR PLAY

NEW TARIFF DEAL WITH GERMANY SHARPLY CRITICIZED.

It Not Only Permits the Cheating of the Revenues by Undervaluation, but Also Enables Foreigners to Undersell American Producers in the American Market.

It is gratifying to find an influential newspaper as the Chicago Tribune arrayed on the side of fair play and square deal in connection with the new German agreement. Additionally gratifying it is to have the view of the American Economist regarding the unwisdom and the folly of that agreement so thoroughly agreed with by the Tribune. Again it is gratifying that the Cedar Rapids Republican has written at the truth through the Tribune, after having hesitated to accept identically the same truth as promulgated through the Economist several weeks in advance of the Tribune. We are delighted to find that the truth, through whatsoever channel, has at last penetrated to Cedar Rapids. The main thing is that the truth has got there. The over real estate business seem a prompt appreciation of the truth in strictly no less lamentable than the under and which business is according a tenth when it is as plain as the nose on a man's face.

The Chicago Tribune, albeit no fervent friend of protectionists, and far from partial to the avowed "standpatters," shows a clear comprehension of what is the true substance of our new dickker with Germany. The Tribune is not fooled by the grandiloquent conversations authorized in section 3 It knows better than to suppose that this paltry consideration is all that Germany obtains in return for her generous condescension in marking down to normal rates a tariff schedule previously marked up for that very purpose. It knows that what Germany will offer, and what Germany gets under the agreement, was such a mollification of our customs laws and methods of administration as would permit the wholesale undervaluation of German exports contained to German agents in the United States. Fully aware in the premises that there is no virtue in the clause requiring that the goods shall be for export only and not such as are sold in the home country except in limited quantities only. In order to defeat this restriction, says the Tribune,

"All the German manufacturer has to do is to put up a staple article in an unusual form and refrain from selling it in that shape in the domestic market. It immediately becomes an article for export only, and the manufacturer finds his own price, which under the convention cannot be attacked either by our consuls or by customs appraisers at the port of arrival, no matter what may be its actual value."

Every competing country will claim and sooner or later be granted similar favors to send to the United States special brands of goods manufactured for export only. In every competing country manufacturers will, as the Tribune says, fix their own export prices on everything they export to the United States. Well may the Cedar Rapids Republican exclaim:

"It is almost past comprehension how such a blunder could have occurred. If what the Tribune has set forth be true, the United States has virtually said to Europe: Here is our tariff law; make your own reductions, in other words, fix the schedules to suit yourselves."

Yes; this is precisely what our gifted state department, backed up by our neophyte commerce department, has said to the commissioners of Europe. They has said more than that and it was then that. They have said to the government of the world: "First mark up your tariffs on American exports, and we will then mark down our own tariff as an inducement for you to put your tariffs back where they were before you marked them up on us." Evidently the year of American tariff revision has passed by. Henceforth foreigners are to determine what our tariff shall be. The results, as affording American labor and industry, of the universal undervaluation of goods for export to the United States need not be speculated upon. Industrial disaster will be hard in hand with national humiliation.—Lawrence Sentinel.

When it comes to FURNITURE It will be discovered that nothing can get beyond or above our goods. Each article is the height of value at its price, and the price is down to a figure only reached by us. Use price to every one and get the lowest.

My reference are any who have ever dealt with me. I also have, I think, as fine a 1,200 lb. black mare for sale at there is in Northern Michigan. Double and single harness and buggy. Must be disposed of by August 20th. Out this out for future reference.

TWO FARMS—Must be sold before over four large consignments from the Island. The Silver Spray, as stated elsewhere, is making Cross Village trips for the warehouse. Superintendent Coulter says the yield is good and the quality generally satisfactory.

—On Tuesday morning Judge Mayne handed out sentences to the following offenders tried at "he last term of court, all for assault and battery: Emma Mitchell, Boyne City, Lafrantz, Boyne Valley, Clark Wood, East Jordan. All 90 days in Detroit house of correction. They went down Tuesday evening in charge of deputy sheriff.

—Supt. Woodley still has the stereoptican slides exhibited at the teachers' institute, and will give two lectures with them for the benefit of the Athletic club. The first will be Friday evening of this week,—"The Beginning of the World." The second will be next week Friday evening,—"The End of the World." Both at the high school room.

—Five of our lovely young chaps, —Harold Bedford, Chase Coulter, Lee Smith, Chas. Emery and Lafayette Carey, left Sunday in the Herbert automobile for a tour to Detroit and other Michigan points. They will be gone two weeks, and if they don't have a good time it will be the fault of the roads and the police. But no better bunch of boys ever traveled the pike than this bunch, and here's hoping that no mishap befalls them.

—Attend the fair at East Jordan next week.

—Mrs. L. D. Savage, who spent the winter in Valparaiso, Ind., is here visiting friends.

—Frank Hull and wife, left yesterday for a three week's visit with friends at Saginaw.

—W. W. Boyle, of St. James, came over Friday, on his way to New York and the Jamestown exposition.

—The steamer Silver Spray arrived here Monday evening from Cross Village with 1500 bushels of peas for the Ferry Co.

—L. L. Crane and wife, left yesterday on an eastern trip for business and pleasure. The trip will take in both New York and Washington.

—W. J. Ferguson, who for two years or more has been on his farm in Hayes, will resume management of the Ferguson House, in this city, this fall.

—Walter Small, who has been employed at the swimming pool as engineer, the past season, leaves Friday morning for Ionaing, to resume his studies in the Michigan Agricultural College.

—Mrs. McGulgan, wife of Capt. McGulgan, formerly of the steamer Illinois, died in Manistee last week. Mrs. Capt. Duncan, of this city, who attended the funeral returned on the Missouri Monday.

—Miss Winifred Gale and Miss Constance Iddings reached home Saturday from Cuba, where they have been spending the summer. Both are perfectly well, and are loud in their praise of them "Gem of the Antilles."

—Rev. Mr. Haylens, of Kalkaska, has accepted a call from the Charlevoix Baptist church, and will assume his duties as pastor the first Sunday in October. Thos. who heard Mr. Haylens preach here this summer, speak highly of their ability.

—Miss Nita Mayne leaves today for Evanston, Ill., to enter the Northwestern University, where she will take a course in the department of elocution. Mrs. Mayne will accompany her to Evanston, returning after a few days at the college town.

—The unfortunate case that is to serve as the new water works well stands up on the lake front ready to be sunk. Inasmuch as there is now plenty of water for the matter, Supt. Mathlake is in no hurry about sinking it. It is thirty feet in diameter at the bottom and about eighty feet at the top. Sand will be taken out at the top and it will be sunk to the required depth—about twenty five feet. "Jim" says this will bring the water supply fully up to all demands for many years to come.

—Mr. A. T. Stewart will be here the one of the month to fit up the auxiliary hatchery for the fall work. There is no doubt than an appropriation will be made by Congress the coming winter for a permanent hatchery here. It was recommended last winter by the fish commission but failed to pass. Those in a position to talk say the measure will certainly pass the coming winter. And this brings up the question, of which the Sentinel has before spoken, of giving the government the old water works building on the lake front. It is well adapted to the purpose, and seems to entirely useless to the city. Charlevoix could not do a wiser thing than to secure the fish commission to use of its willingness to turn over the building.

THE FARMERS' PICNIC.

A Very Successful Gathering—Picnic Will be Made Annual Event.

The farmers' picnic held last week Thursday under the direction of the West Michigan Sugar Co., was a decided success, notwithstanding the fact that the threatening aspect of the weather in the morning cut down the attendance fully half.

A conservative estimate of the attendance places the figures at two thousand. The sugar factory was crowded all day, and the city was pretty well filled up. Everybody seemed happy, and the farmers all seemed enthusiastic over beet crop prospects.

Another gratifying fact was developed—The farmers are beginning to understand that the sugar beet has in it more of the elements of safety and undiscounting profit than any other crop. The farmer is generally skeptical when it comes to any radical change in crop location, but when experience strengthened by intelligent investigation, demonstrates the wisdom of a certain line of action, he may be counted on to make the most of it. This is the present stage of beet culture in Northern Michigan. There will be no more difficulty about sugar beet acreage.

Federal manager Hubbard strongly advocates making the picnic an annual event, and there is little doubt that it will be. These gatherings when the fruit of sugar beet raising particularly, have a broader and deeper significance. Primarily, they afford opportunity for mutual interchange of agricultural ideas, and much social enjoyment.

Let the picnic be perpetuated.

Death of M. D. Woodford.

Mr. M. D. Woodford, one of the best known of our summer residents, died in Kalamazoo last Sunday morning. Mr. Woodford, with his wife and valet, left here last week Tuesday for his home in Cincinnati. He has been in poor health for several years, and spent his winters in California and his summers here. He has every summer brought with him a fine automobile, and with his wife and friend or two, has spent much of his time cruising about on the country roads.

During the later part of this season he seemed to be failing rapidly and when he called at this office a few days before he was too weak to alight from the car. On the trip south he continued to fail, and at Kalamazoo the good old man breathed his last.

For several years, and up to the absorption of the road by the Morgan syndicate, Mr. Woodford was president of the C. H. & D. R. R. In 1890, when the telegraph wires came into Charlevoix over the Michigan Central R. R. and was made superintendent of certain highway lines, in which Mr. C. officials were interested, including that from Grand Rapids north.

The editor of this paper, who was then postmaster, was made operator and manager, Mr. Woodford sending an experienced operator here for three months as an instructor. For a little more than a year the writer of this served under Mr. Woodford. The Western Union then bought the line. He was a grand old man, and the world was better for his having lived in it. His was a strong, yet a quiet temper. He had delved great problems and moulded large enterprises, yet was as gentle as a woman, and as tender as a child.

The Clubs.

If the banks and saloons had not been closed from midnight until sunrise would not have known that an election was in progress in Charlevoix. Only about 100 votes were cast in the three wards.

The cause of the apathy was the fact that but one ticket was in the field. The same reports come from all over the district. In Traverse City but about five hundred votes were cast. The total vote in the county will be about 1,500 instead of 3,000 as it should be.

The Republicans have nominated Judge Mayne for circuit judge, and Judge Parker has been tendered the Democratic nomination. Judge Parker will probably accept the nomination, and the fight will be a very lively one.

APPLE SHIPMENTS.

Charlevoix Forging to the Front As a Shipping Point For Apples.

The writer of this can remember when an apple in Charlevoix was as rare a luxury as an oyster or terrapin. To devour a Baldwin or a Greening was to partake of a feast fit for the gods.

To-day the finest apples in the world are raised in Northern Michigan, and their value to the farmers of the Grand Traverse region will be fully one million dollars.

From the north half of Antrim county and the west half of Charlevoix county, this year, there will be shipped, from Charlevoix, by water and rail fully 20,000 barrels. Thus far this month there have been shipped over Willson's dock 5000 barrels of fall fruit, and 850 barrels have been shipped by rail.

And shipments have but fairly commenced. Shippers say early stock will be handled here for two weeks yet, and then late stock will come on in greater volume. Prices have held firmly at 50 cents per bushel, and there is no sign yet of a slump. The market for winter apples is yet uncertain, but it is thought that good prices will prevail.

LECTURE COURSE.

Citizens Organize to Supply High Grade Winter Entertainment.

On Monday night a meeting was held in A. L. Fitch's law office, at which there was organized "The Charlevoix Citizens' Lecture Course," with the following officers:

President—Hy. H. A. Putnam.
Vice President—I. Z. Merriam.
Secretary—A. L. Fitch.
Treasurer—W. H. Woodley.
Chairman Ex. Com.—B. W. Kane.

Although the formal organization was not effected until Monday night, work has been going on for some time in anticipation of that result, and a splendid lineup of lecture and concert talent has been booked, with five first class attractions as follows:

Oct. 15—Royal Hungarian Orchestra.
Jan. 27—Ralph Bingham, impersonator.
Feb. 7—Monroe Markley, lecturer.
Mar. 11—Rev. Edgar Vincent, lecturer.
Feb. 25—Leland Powers, Reader and Lecturer.

Season tickets will be limited to 150 and the price will be $150 for the season. Provision will probably be made to give high school students a rate of one dollar.

The Hungarian Orchestra, which appears Oct. 15th, is one of the finest musical organizations in the country, and numbers eight people, all artists. Without question City will be one of the finest lecture courses ever in the history of Charlevoix. Notices of the other events will appear in these columns in due time.

The gentlemen who have promoted and so successfully provided this magnificent array of talent, are entitled to the thanks of the community.

Michigan Central News.

Fletcher F. Dupuy, of East Jordan, was in town yesterday on business connected with a real estate deal with W. J. Weikel, which involves M. C. matters at East Jordan.

Engineers are now engaged in locating a line for a branch from the M. C. to the furnace site, on the East Jordan side of the Arm. This line will be built as well understood there that the M. C. people will take up the Charlevoix extension next.

There are the very best of existing reasons record in Charlevoix to that effect, but they cannot yet be given out.

The road will be built to Charlevoix next spring.

Methodist Appointments.

The M. E. Conference at Albion last week did just what was feared here—that Rev. R. A. Wright back to Charlevoix. He has done such good work the past year. Other appointments are as follows:

Rev. A. T. Ferguson comes back as presiding elder, Bellaire, R. L. Merritt; Boyne City, L. Grossbaugh, Central Lake, James Irvine; East Jordan, W. W. Lamport; Norwood, H. E. Yost. Rev. Mr. Nagler goes back to the 4th year at Ironwood, Rev. Mr. Yost and J. W. Vickers goes to Gaylord.

AIKENSIDE

BY

MRS. MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Tempest and Sunshine," "English Orphans," "Homestead on the Hillside," "Lena Rivers," "Rectorsbury," "Teacher and Teaching," "Louis Kindred," etc.

"If I could only take her something," he said, moving restlessly about the room. "Now I'm also entire Jenny nuts and excuses might answer—for she must see we could do no harm—and he set him off to think again, just as they had done, while his heart beat like a mad captative bunnie."

"If Harry is going to spend Christmas in Hinsdale as I know he intends sooner or later, I think it would be a good idea for us to make a call on the Hollowbeds," said Mrs. Mackey, who was quite as much in the matter as her husband, and who had a good deal more than he of running from Aikenside to Hinsdale.

"So I would, if that," the doctor answered, his mind reverting to the subject which had taken him to Hinsdale that morning, and which, from the manner in which it had been discussed, had become quite a bugbear to him. "Yes, I think we may as well go, and I will go with you, if you wish, and I will explain all by and by."

Mackey was not quite satisfied to let him wait for his explanation, but he knew from the tone that she was not flighty, or inclined to be romancing herself at last, she answered in the affirmative, and he was soon wandering towards the hollow, leaving behind him the wondering Mrs. Mackey, who was not quite sure that she was not prevented, and planting in her hands he said:

"You like Sarah, I know, and there are few you do not like.

"Oh, I like Jim, thank you, dodear! I am so glad I love them so much, and you are so good to make me feel that I can bring them! I wanted flowers so badly, but I could not have them, because I was sick and did not work in the garden. It was so good in you," and he delight Mackey's tears dropped upon the fair blossoms.

For a moment the doctor was sorely tempted to keep the truth from poor unfortunately great, but he was too much fit for that, and he only answered, in a tone intended with pleasure, he said:

"I am glad you like them, Sarah, and so am I. Mr. Remington is. He sent them to you from his conservatory."

"Mr. Mr. Remington from Aikenside—not Jessie's brother?" and Maddie's eyes grew fairly bright as she recalled the doctor's face.

"Yes, Jessie's brother. He came here with her. He is interested in you, and brought these flowers for you. He said

"It was Jessie, I guess," she said then, "Maddie suggested, but the doctor persisted that it was Guy.

"He wished you to remember them with his compliments. He thought they might please you."

"Oh! they do, they do!" Maddie replied, her face crimson with the delicious thought that such I think blue and lily, him, not Guy, had thought of her.

The doctor opened his lips to tell her she had made a little mistake, but closing the words were uttered, the night she thinks as well of Guy, he thought, and there was no harm in keeping it back.

In Maddie had no suspicion that the fine thought of all the flowers had been Guy's, and that Jessie had been sent him, and Guy had been sent to Hinsdale for them, and that Jessie's gloves were a present from Guy, and that Jessie's gloves were a present from Guy, and that Jessie's gloves were a present from Guy

A VETERAN GRANGER GONE.

Death of J. Woodman, Once Master of the National Grange.

One of the shining members of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry and a former national grange master has passed away. Hon. J. J. Woodman of Paw-paw, Mich., died last July, mourned by a host of people. Mr. Woodman joined with the grange in its early days. He became a member of the state grange organized in the state of Michigan. He was elected master of the Paw-paw grange in 1874 and in June, 1875, he came master of the state grange, which office he held for several years. The whole work he was elected overseer in the national grange, which he held until 1878, when he was elected master of the national grange. He held this position until 1885, when he was elected master of the executive committee and kept its meetings. He also held several positions in honor in public life. He was member of which was for several years in 1877 and speaker in 1879-71.

When he was elected master of Michigan state grange about 300 granges had been organized in that state and many had joined the Order for the financial benefit which they hoped to get from it. The greenback question was also in discussion at that time, and the granges were disrupted in some instances by the force discussion on the money question. These seemed to be an entire misapprehension of the aim and purpose of the Order. Mr. Woodman went to work to reconstruct things, to achieve conditions to the priest and give dignity to the design work. His work proved successful when grand services were most needed. He possessed many qualities of a true leader. He was an influential and effective speaker, and his breadth of mind caused him to view all phases of the grange work in their true relation. He was familiar with the work, history of the Order and knew well the early workers. The idea of establishing harmony and strength between the north and south just after the war was one real cause that brought about the organization of the order of Patrons of Husbandry. Mr. Woodman was later now, when Mr. Wardin, master of Florida state grange, addressed the national grange at our session, he declared that he was ready then and there to grasp the hand of a brother from Vermont or any other northern state and on behalf of every member of the Order from the south pledge and tary all bitterness and all feeling and work in fraternal unity. Immediately E. H. Cutler, then master of Vermont state grange, rushed to the floor and grasped Mr. Wardlaw by the hand with the Patrons' grip and said in behalf of every member of the northern states. "We reciprocate your pledge and assure you that your desire of fraternal unity and brotherly love is as sincere in northern hearts as it can be in the hearts of southern brothers and sisters. We pledge you that we will use our influence through this fraternal order to force ill feeling and bitterness between the north and south." At the conclusion of his remarks a recess was declared, and each and all gave pledges of fealty to the sentiment.

Questions For Grange Discussion.

How much time each day should the farmer and his wife devote to self improvement, or in the work show more important than the workers?

What is the greatest question before the American people today, limit grade, liquid, gas, imperialism?

How can state and county fairs be carried on successfully without the midway and vaudeville shows?

Should anything but dollars and cents be counted as income on the farm?

Poems and essays on education in the home, the school and the world. The inherent man's opportunity as compared with fifty years ago.

Do the best interests of the country demand a parcels post?

What is destined to become the greatest motive power?

Does it pay as well to care for poultry as other stock?

Appreciation of our grange advantages.

The interests of the Pomona grange. Village improvement associations. The cultivation of flowers.

The Grange Will Approve.

Postmaster General Meyer has stated in a recent interview that he should recommend to congress a domestic parcels post limited to ten pounds, also the establishment of a postal savings bank, to those two particulars he is in harmony with the grange and will receive the grange support if these measures are brought before congress.

Another new grange bank is to be built at Troy, Ills. It is to be a two story building, 32 by 40 feet, of gray pressed brick. The upper story may be used for a grange hall.

Luck of a Windfall.

The harsh forest laws of William the Conqueror are responsible for the meaning of good luck now so often associated with the term windfall. Under the Norman it was a criminal offense to cut down timber in the forests; but as the peasants were allowed to gather whatever wood the wind had blown down they always raised a storm as an omen of good luck.—Sunday Magazine.

THE GRANGE

Prize Correspondent New York State Grange.

TWO BIG FIELD DAYS.

One in New Jersey, and the Other in Pennsylvania.

A unique field day meeting that promised most entirely to a state fair was the one at Alpine Park, N. J., in August, which occupied three days. There was a fine exhibit of stock and farm produce. Indeed, it resembled a state fair in many respects. The speakers on the three days of the meeting were State Master Hadley of New Hampshire, Past Master Norris of New York and National Lecturer Gates of New Jersey, besides other local speakers. Therefore prizes had the largest exhibit of any of the twelve grangers in the county, and the farm produce displayed was remarkable, and bidding most of the determined, including the stock as well would do credit to the average state fair. The attendance on the last day was said to have been over 20,000.

At Spring City, Pa., the annual picnic of Kimberton grange was held at Bonnie Brae park. Four thousand people were present, and 1,500 lunches were served on the grounds. Tables were spread over the park for a distance of 1,250 feet, and Sam's people partook of the delicacies of the season. Phoenix Military Band furnished the music. The speakers were National Lecturer Gates, Past State Lecturer A. M. Cooper and A. L. Martin, deputy secretary of agriculture, and others.

GRANGE ELIGIBILITY

A Letter Written by O. H. Kelley Forty Years Ago

The question of eligibility to the grange is still being raised, but in the case for members little attention is paid to it by those seeking to enroll names. A letter written by O. H. Kelley, one of the founders of the Order, Nov. 5, 1865, forty years ago, sets forth in clear manner the purposes of the grange and may well be carefully considered by Patrons of today. It gives a clear expression of the intentions of the founders at the time the Order was being set in motion and so cannot be called an effor consideration. He writes:

A number of gentlemen engaged in agriculture and the kindred branches in different states are now performing a effort for an object to be proposed which of promote social and mental directly interest in agriculture and the kindred branches. The object will seem to be methods to get people together and to get the farmers out of their shells, as well as to organize, to make a social and intellectual feast for the farmers and their families, and to lay a foundation for admitting the young folks of such women, sisters or daughters (over of age) it will have a tendency to teach to make minds a Christian, for God's gift and present in a great measure as they of their duties to the child, and all occupations are now excluded, and of the farmer's wives and daughters, and of the young of young men to the other spheres. The whole it is believed, will do much toward elevating our occupation as well as establishing a unity of sentiment among the farmers of the country and materially increase the circulation of publications devoted to the interests of agriculture and kindred branches of industry. Politics and religion are not subjects of discussion.

Wherever this thought has been the mainspring of action the grange has strengthened with the years. The grand conception of a farmers' organization Worked out for the three or four men in Washington forty years ago has resulted in the largest, strongest organization we have, one which is everywhere recognized as a power for good in any and every community. The responsibility resting on the grange today is to hold the order true to its original purposes and make it influential in strengthening social and intellectual and work and building deep and strong the true thought of the rural home.—Dr. George M. Twitchell.

Aug. 30 was a great day for Wayne county, N. Y., patrons. About 1,500 assembled at the farm of A. J. Smith near Newark village for their annual picnic. The speakers were Charles Wilson of the state agricultural college, Cornell university, and J. H. J. Watkins of Herkimer.

More people have heard grange doctrine preached and there have been more greenbacks thrifted the past summer than ever before. Grange field days and grange picnics seem to have been more numerous than ever—a good sign, by the way.

A Pomona grange in Maryland has taken a strong position against gambling at county fairs. No should every grange where there is need of it.

Mortimer Whitehead of New Jersey, one of the originals of the Order, writes an interesting grange column every month for the Farm Journal.

Patrons are awaiting with interest the appearance of the new National Grange Weekly that is promised for October.

The seed sowing at grange picnics and field days now past should bring forth abundant harvests the coming winter.

Germantown (N. Y.) grange has recently purchased a $4,000 hall property. There's a live grange for you!

Sixty subordinate granges are said to have been represented at a field day at Brattleboro, Vt., in August.

Over 600 entered the corn growing contest instituted by the Michigan state grange.

The Hilarious Russians.

Once, speaking about Yegor, Pavel said: "Do you know, Andrey, the people whose hearts are always aching are the ones who joke most?" The little Russian was silent awhile, and then answered, blinking his eyes: "Yes, that's not true. If it were, then the whole of Russia would spin its side with laughter."—Maxim Gorky, in Appleton's.

Nervous Indigestion

The action of digestion is controlled by nerves leading to the stomach. When they are weak, the stomach is deprived of its energy. It has no power to do its work. If you want permanent relief, you must restore this energy. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores nerve energy, and gives the organs power to perform their functions.

"For some time I was in serious suffering from nervous indigestion, at times could not retain food on my stomach, and suffered from constipation and kidney disorders. I tried many remedies, but found no relief until I used Dr. Miles' Nervine and Nervine Pills. The first bottle of Nervine gave me relief, and the continuance of use finally cured me. I began to feel better each succeeding day, and now I am free from all these troubles. I am very much indebted to Dr. Miles' Nervine and Nervine Pills for my health." Mrs. Mary Ann Ward, Ashland, Ky.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by your druggist under a guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails, he will refund the money.

EAGLE WHIPS A MAN.

Then Resumes His Flight With a Stolen Lamb.

Frederick Hellenbach, a farmer living on the Schoharie turnpike near Greenville, was feeding the gray eagle pets in his woodshed when an eagle swooped down and in its talons carried off his lambs. The big bird had been annoying the community for a month. Many farmers wanted to shoot it, but the game warden threatened to revoke the law providing for a $250 fine and imprisonment for killing a bald eagle. The farmer was frightened and thinking he could save the lamb, Mr. Hellenbach struck the bird sharply with a stick. The eagle dropped the lamb all right, but instead of flying off made for the man, rising upon his face, his hands and chest with its talons and practically tearing off his clothes. After it had technically killed the prisoner in the woods the eagle picked up the lamb and flew off. Hellenbach is in bed with a doctor attending him.—Philadelphia Ledger.

TWAINS FRIENDS WERE MANY.

Little Jean Thought He Had Almost Reached the Limit.

We had recently arrived in Berlin, and the house housekeeping is a far different one from that we left in Vienna. To us pensions it was a case of "Hobson's choice." Hunting for rooms in Berlin, I discovered early on the continent has been left behind, and all the white lines was the country roads and more immediately concerned, the Kaiserstrasse, Jean, who had been passed from hand to hand, around the table and overloaded with kisses and caresses, and generally made a fuss over, suddenly turned to Mamma and said: "Mamma, I'm so glad we have come to live in Berlin, because I shall be able to be with you all the time." Mamma looked at her in surprise and said: "Why, Jean, I thought you liked Vienna very much, and you used to be always so happy." "Oh, I was happy in Vienna, Mamma, but I never could be with you all the time." "Why, Jean, what do you mean?" "Why, Mamma, I thought I was almost as big as a man, and I was afraid that if I stayed in Vienna I would be a little boy all my life, but I thought I would be a man when I came to live in Berlin, because I thought Berlin was the biggest place in the world."—Harper's Bazar.

CHILD STOLEN TWICE.

PARENTS IN DOUBLE KIDNAPING SENSATION.

Finding Husband Has Taken Six-Year-old Girl, Mother Makes Fruitless Pursuit—Was Waken Master by Son's Action.

A double kidnaping within the border of the town will go the boldest annal of Ann Arbor. It happened on Sunday afternoon and evening and for a time baffled Chief Hinkley and his men more than a dozen times. The kidnapping consists of the forcible abduction and possession of Gaius Frederick Stephens Mansfield by the part of Hubbard Mansfield, his former husband. It was followed by the most beautiful Hinkley is alleged, outlined for quick home and recovered the child safe and in a week. Mrs. Mansfield, Hubbard's wife, and three of the children, accompanied the father in person and assisting in the kidnapping. In fact, it was Mrs. Mansfield who first found and pounced upon the child, and it was at her instigation that the party with whom the child was taken, Mrs. Hubbard, Jr., and the boy, Hubbard, Jr., left the home of Mrs. Mansfield, Sr., in Ann Arbor, and drove to Ypsilanti, where the child was left with the Mansfield family and the party drove on to Detroit, where they lunched and then drove to Windsor, across the river, and then to Amherstburg, Ontario, where they lunched and then drove back to Detroit and then to Ann Arbor, where they arrived at 10 o'clock, the entire party being in a state of exhaustion. The child was taken from the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Mansfield, Sr., in the afternoon, while the family were at dinner. The child was taken in a carriage by Mrs. Mansfield, Jr., and Hubbard, Jr., and driven to Ypsilanti, where it was left with the family of Mr. Mansfield, Sr., and then the party drove on to Detroit. JUVENILE HORSE THIEVES

Two Barefooted Petoskey Lads Have Short and Enjoyable Escapade.

Two Petoskey boys, aged eleven and fourteen, respectively, were entertained at the county jail Monday night, and accompanied the Emmet county sheriff back to Petoskey Tuesday morning, to answer to the charge of horse stealing. We were unable to learn their names, but they are known as old offenders for their age.

Early Sunday morning last they took a horse and buggy from the barn of Russell's rooming house, in the southern suburbs of Petoskey, and started out to see that portion of the world that lies between Petoskey and Traverse City. They reached Charlevoix Sunday forenoon and tried to put up their horse in the Charlevoix Lumber Co.'s sheds, but were directed to Williams' livery barn, where they took the rig.

After arrest they frankly disclosed their plans. They had no money, and their intention was to smuggle the rig out early Monday morning when the men were out, or before they were up. They slept Sunday night at the Nicholls saw mill, and were at the barn at day-break, but could get no chance to secure the horse and buggy.

Then they concluded to try equestrianism, and from Tuttle's livery barn they secured two riding ponies to ride about town, as they said. Then they went south. Meantime the Petoskey sheriff struck their trail, arriving here Monday afternoon. The telephone located them, and finally, at a point two miles north of Atwood Lewis Ray gathered them in, holding them until Sheriff Jones arrived.

Monday night the boys spent in jail and Tuesday morning they went back to Petoskey in the stolen rig, with Sheriff Jones as driver.

Health is the Great Issue.

The high wages paid make it a mighty temptation to our young men, men to join the force of skilled workmen needed to construct the Panama Canal. Many are restrained however by the fear of fevers and malaria. It is the knowing ones—those who have used Electric Bitters, who go there without the fear, well knowing they are fully from malarious influences with Electric Bitters based. Cures blood poison too, biliousness, weakness, and all stomach, liver and kidney troubles. Guaranteed by F. G. Blake & Co., druggists. 50c.

ANOTHER CUBAN LETTER.

Miss Iddings Writes About Morro Castle and Cabanas Forbeas.

HAVANA, CUBA, Sept. 22, 1907.

DEAREST PINE:

At last I am write and tell you about Morro Castle and that usual ensemble of all spanic, Cubanas. Our long postponed trip came to pass in a most delightful way, on yesterday May Slocum arranged for launch, ambulance and guide, everything ready at the Punta at two o'clock, and we were only to be there at the appointed time. We invited a Miss Corogan and Dick Birmingham, Alfred's chum, to accompany us, and then two o'clock found us all, including Dolphus, spending across the bay in a very fine launch with an English speaking guide.

On the other side was awaiting the ambulance and then, up the old rocky road leading to the castle with the park walls of Cabanas at our right, surrounded by laurel trees, a very picture in Rasel.

As we journeyed farther up the winding hill, great grim walls came to view and then a hill! We were at the entrance of the fort. After claiming to our feet we saw ahead of us a long narrow passage, seemingly cut from the very rock, as it was nearly as high on both sides as our heads. This walled road of rock gradually sloped upward and led us up, up and on, until finally we stood on the outer ramparts surrounding the moat, where by creeping cautiously to the edge we could look down from the dizzy heights to the bottom of the moat which is now filled with tropical growth.

Oh! But it was all like going back a few pages in Spanish history, and it was so delightful to pretend that there really was an enemy behind us and to scamper across the little old drawbridge and order it drawn up—and yet, it was sad too, for the only response to our cries was a hollow echo as of mockery. At the head of the drawbridge was a long dark passage the only light coming thro' the gun holes that were all along the way, and giving a most ghastly effect as it filtered through the green trees on the outside.

We next explored the main part of the fort which consisted of officers' quarters and barracks, where were still the rings for the hammocks, so close together that it seemed almost impossible that a man could survive one night. Then the ammunition room where the old rusty bullets still lie, tho' now harmless, I thought one grape shot about the best souvenir I could find, so managed to carry one home.

The guide next conducted us to a rude stone stairway up which we toiled laboriously until at last we found ourselves on the very top of the walls where we could obtain a splendid view of Havanna across the bay in all its pink and white loveliness, and where we were to the end of interesting sights. One piece, which was iron barred, you could look thro' and see a long dark hole where prisoners were "secured" to the chacks, and which was dreadfully cramy when you heard the water gurgling maliciously beneath.

In the side toward the ocean is a narrow inclosed pathway leading to a small tower or lookout, and crossing this you stand on the very edge of the parapet. The guide then takes you by the arm and lets you lean far over where you look down a distance of ninety feet or more to the sea—just a so.M mass of grey wall relieved here and there by clustering vines, and then he tells the story of how the English scaled the walls and took possession in 1762.

We saw some terrible old dungeons with curious inscriptions, but always with the sign of the cross, and then stood for a last lingering look on the heights of Morro Castle. Far out at sea the ships were coming in, and a short distance at our left were the green guns pointed seaward, but the saddest part of all were the waves far below us murmuring as distinctly as words, "forever."

FINE OLD TIMEPIECE

REMARKABLE CLOCK OWNED BY INDIANAPOLIS MAN.

Was Brought from Pennsylvania to Indiana in 1821, and Still Keeps Good Time—Rare Piece of Mechanism.

With the name of its maker, dead these hundred years, written in his own hand across its face, a tall old corner clock stands in the library of the home of George H. Yansee, 322 East Michigan street, Indianapolis, ticking away the time as it did in the Lehigh valley Pennsylvania, when the state was yet a little frontier settlement of a few log cabins.

The clock, which has been in the family of Mr. Yandee for 86 years, and which was hammered and carved out by the hand of August Hoff, a clockmaker of Lancaster, Pa., perhaps a quarter of a century before, is well preserved, and although none of the wheels or other pieces of mechanism has ever been replaced it keeps time almost as accurately as it did in the days when George Washington was president of the United States.

Brought across the mountains and plains from Pennsylvania to Indiana in 1821 by Mr. Yandee' father, the old clock has remained in Indianapolis ever since, witnessing the growth of the Hoosier metropolis. It has ticked off the seconds unnoticed in covering the monument, the statehouse and practically all of the public and private buildings now standing where a wilderness of forest trees stood in the dark when it was perhaps already a generation old.

In bringing the clock from Pennsylvania to Indianapolis, Mr. Yandee father carried the works on horseback, guarding it as carefully as he would a child. Upon reaching here, he had a case built for it by Caleb Scudder, the first cabinetmaker that ever settled in Indianapolis. The size of cherry still contains the original works brought on horseback across the mountains.

The clock is one of those rare old pieces of mechanism, wrought entirely by hand, which show not only the hour of the day, but the day of the month, the changes of the moon, and the ebb and flow of the tides, on its face. The dial is quaintly ornamented with gold tracery and a beautiful bird. The signature of Hoff, together with his native city, Lancaster, is written twice above the Roman numeral "VI" on the dial.

"The old clock is perhaps the strongest recollection of my childhood," said Mr. Yandee, who is 68 years of age, a few evenings ago. "I well remember how I thought in those days that the man who used to tinker with it, to keep it in good running order was the most wonderful of men. The sound of the old clock's going is striking to me like that of any I have ever heard, and I use it has a peculiar suggestiveness. It has the same sound it had in my boyhood days, although sometimes I fancy it has grown weaker with years."

In the same room with the old clock is a quaint rocking chair that has been in the family for about three quarters of a century, and a sideboard of solid mahogany, also an heirloom, which is used now for a bookcase. Mr. Yandee prizes all of the relics highly, but takes especial interest in the old clock.—Indianapolis Star.

Murderer Got Away.

On a recent Sunday night a murder was committed in a town not far from Boston. The chief of police, after ascertaining the facts, left the scene for the murderer to an assistant, on the ground that he needed a long nightly sleep in order to be sworn early for the town meeting the next day. The murderer has not been found.—Boston Herald.

The itch for Persecution.

Is there not yet a strange itch upon the spirits of men? Nothing will satisfy them unless they can press their finger upon their brethren's raw sciences to pinch them there.—Oliver Cromwell.

AIKENSIDE

BY

MRS. MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Tempest and Sunshine," "Rosamond or the Orphan," "Lena Rivers," "Meadow Brook," "Dora Deane," etc.

There was a strange light in the fearless eyes as he answered, half smiling, "Yes, Maddy, I am not what you call a Christian, but I am not ashamed of the people and rank I was in."

"Oh, I'm so sorry," said Maddy's eyes expressed all the sorrow she professed to feel. "You mean you don't believe the Bible or God?"

The doctor colored crimson, and stopping his horse under the elm shadow of a maple in a little house, he said:

"I'm not so very old, Maddy, only twenty-five, or ten years older than yourself, and Agnes' husband was more than twenty years her senior."

"Oh, only twenty years—that's different, she must be happy and glad he died. I would not marry a man more than five years older than I."

"But if you loved him, and he loved you very, very dearly?" the doctor asked, his voice low and tender in its tone.

Wholly unsuspicious of the well steen beating in his heart, Maddy smiled her white sunbonnet, and, taking it in her lap, stretched back her soft hair, styling with a long breath: "Oh! I'm so hot, and then, as I was saying, I'm so tired, too, replied: "I shouldn't love him—I couldn't. Grandma's few years younger than grandpa, mother was five years younger than father, Mr. Green, and she was happy. Grandma Mr. Green, and she's so many. You are warm, too, aren't you?" and she turned her bonnet and fell upon the doctor. "I wonder why he married that old man?" she mused. "Can if you were to marry Jessie."

"Sister and gentleman were in the house, I imagine," the doctor said. Agnes was in the parlor, entertained in a great house by uncle Mrs. Remington."

"Poor, poor Agnes!" Maddy replied. "Guess maybe Mr. Guy will some day marry a poor girl. He's rich, too, he's 21!"

Maddy's face alternoon trembled on the doctor's, but he did not speak of her with such preparedness that Maddy should have any inkling of Guy Remington, who was quite as old as himself, besides being engaged, and with this unfortunate encounter, the doctor turned his horse in the direction of the village, the Maddy was growing tired and needed to be at home.

Maddy would never forget that morning on the lake, for it was the first she had enjoyed it so much, and she thanked him many times for his kindness. He was a very nice doctor, much better than she had imagined, she thought, as she sat down to the table and entered the neat kitchen, where her grandmother sat setting pies for dinner, and her grandfather in his leathern chair was whispering over his weekly paper.

"Did you meet a grand lady in a carriage?" grandma asked, as Maddy sat down beside her.

"Yes and Dr. Holbrook said it was Mrs. Remington, from Aikenside. Mr. Guy's grandmother, I think, she was more than twenty years younger than her husband, and he married her, I guess, for her land, the doctor didn't seem to," and in a perfectly artless manner Maddy repeated which of the conversation which had passed between the doctor and herself, appealing to her grandma to know if she had not taken the right side of the argument.

"Yes, child, you did," and grandma's knife lingered among the light green peas in her pan, as if she were thinking of an entirely foreign subject. "I know nothing about this Mrs. Remington, only she stared a good deal at the house as she went by, and I guess she thought it looked queer, and lifting her spotted veil after she got by. She may have been as happy as a queen with her man, but as a general thing there comes a time when you don't work, and had better not be thought on. Poorer folks don't think you are in pain with somebody, and in a few years, when you get older, to be sure, they will go so far as to bite a slight of harm. That's what spoilt your poor greatuncle Joseph, while he was in the hospital 'a Wednesday years.'"

"I was—" And Maddy's face was all aglow with interest. "Tell me about it."

"There is no great to tell, only he was many years younger than I. He's only forty-one now, and I was thirteen years older than the girl he wanted. Joseph was a man of and business, and a large farm and folks made a great deal of what himself and Agnes were to be married for the girl, whose father's farm was nothing, but she had a pretty face, and her long curls bewitched him. She couldn't have been older than seven or eight when first saw her, and she was only sixteen when they got engaged. Joseph's life was bound up in her, he worshiped the very air she breathed, and when she died without him, it almost took his life. He was too old for her, and then right on top of that he heard after a little that she had married some big lord, and he was so broken up he got enough to be her father. That settled it with Joseph. He went into a kind of melancholy, grew worse and worse, till we put him in the hospital, and he died little property to pay the bill until it was all gone, and now he lies on charity, you know, carpetin' what we do."

Grandma had an object in telling this to Maddy, for she was not blind to the nature of the doctor's interest in her child, so she told the sad story of Uncle Joseph as a warning to Maddy. It made an impression on her, and all that afternoon she was thinking of the unfortunate man, who she had seen but once, and that in his prison home, where she had been with her grandfather the only time she had ever ridden in the cars. He had taken her in his arms, and she had wondered, and called her his little Sarah. That must have been the time when the treacherous betrothed. She would ask if it were not so, and she did.

"Yes, Sarah Morris, that was her name, and her face was handsome as a doll, grandma, and resembled you, only she was as beautiful as Jessie, or Jessie's mother, Maddy went back to her reverie of the poor mantel, whom Sarah Morris had wrecked and ruined.

CHAPTER IX.

It was very pleasant at Aikenside that afternoon, and after grandma had gone from the miniature fish pond in one corner of the grounds, some sixteen feet the handsome parlors where Agnes Remington, in a pink silk dress, ruffled lightly upon the crimson-lined sofa, leaning her graceful head to suit the height of Jessie, who was twining some flowers among her curls, and appealing to Guy to know if it was not pretty.

In his favorite seat in the pleasant bay window, looking into the garden, Guy was sitting, apparently reading a book, though his eyes did not move very rapidly down the page, for his thoughts were on some other object. When he gently stepped for first came to Aikenside, three months before, he had been half sorry, for he knew that her life quiet would be disturbed, but as the weeks went by, and he became accustomed to Jessie's childish pranks and freshness ways, while even Agnes herself was not a bad person for his handsome home, he began to feel how he should miss them when they were gone. Had she been more agreeable to him he would have hesitated to offer her a home as long as she chose to remain, but, as it was, he felt that Lucy Albertine would be much happier alone with him. Lucy, however, was not coming yet, and until she did come Agnes perhaps might stay. It certainly would be better for Jessie, who could have a teacher in the house, and if she was spoiled it was his place to see reflecting.

As if divining his thoughts, Agnes said to him aloud:

"Guy, Ellen Laurie writes me that they are all going to Saratoga for a time, and then to Newport, and she wishes I would join them. Do you think I can afford it?"

"Oh, yes, that's splendid, for I'll stay here while you are gone, and I like Aikenside so much better than Dunton. Mamma can afford it, can't she, Guy?" Jessie exclaimed, dropping her flowers and springing over behind the sofa.

Brushing her bright hair and pinching her cheek, Guy replied:

"That means, I suppose, that I can stay home, too, and that Jessie think by just now about your staying here, where you are comfort."

Then turning to Agnes he made some remark in the same pleasant tone, and Laurie, ascertaining that Agnes' son was in college, he should like to go with him to Saratoga, or Newport, or anywhere, so long as he could be a treacherous betrothed. She would ask if it were not so, and she did.

"Yes, Sarah Morris, that was her name, and her face was handsome as a doll, grandma, and resembled you, only she was as beautiful as Jessie, or Jessie's mother, Maddy went back to her reverie of the poor mantel, whom Sarah Morris had wrecked and ruined.

The Popular Pulpit

SECRET OF CONTENTED LIFE.

By Rev. Olin Scott Kocha.

I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content—Philippians 4:11.

When St. Paul wrote these philosophic words he was in prison, depend upon the charity of others and in peril of a violent death. He remained contented, however, in spite of murmuring against the Supreme Being and destroyed jealousy toward our fellows. It gives credit to the mind, society to the life and peace to the heart.

The apostle's other writings prove that he recognized that there is situations as well as a personal content. There is such a thing as righteous discontent, and it is absolutely necessary to all advancement, whether moral, social, intellectual or spiritual. It is that which makes man wants and exerts, and not of moral or spiritual nature. His great endeavor was to make man dissatisfied with their sordid mind state, he was constantly urging them onward and upward.

But, on the other hand, he teaches that there are some things in life that are not worth the pains and anxiety. Man is to do his utmost, but he is not to be a slave to worry. Character is the main thing, and whatever develops that is important, and whatever does not is worthless success.

Even if you would be happy, strive to enrich the soul—seek supremely heavenly wealth, with regard to the body, it is the prime necessity to have food and raiment.

There are two good rules which may grip somewhat toward the attainment of contentment. First, only to desire what is in your power to obtain. Second, to be satisfied with things you do not possess. Many make their lives miserable by wishing for what they do not have by thinking constantly of what they have not, and comparing their wealth, position, fame or power the only thing lacking is the one thing without which they cannot be happy. In our day we great cause for discontent seems to be that everyone is not a millionaire, and that, too, without special labor. Strictly, it is fortunate that we cannot all have our desire, else there would be no stimulus to effort and the world would soon end in decay.

The other rule is to cultivate the power of looking on the bright side—to see the good in life, to chase sullen or gloomy frings—to sight without its star. Disappointments come to everybody, but life is a weak nature that is overcome by them. They are necessary to keep down pride and to harden strength. Inexperience checks exertion, but good spirits ever achieve success.

God has given each one of us much to enjoy—we have eyes to see it. Flowers, the songs of birds and all the beauties of nature are typical of His goodness. Priceless jewels are not the sole treasures more than food and raiment and shelter, and if we possess these we ought not to be discontented. Let us look on the bright side of life.

Such rules will go far toward imparting the great virtue of content, but there are other things which must also be found: good health, good spirits, good humor, good sense, a vacant lot on the street inflamma thoroughfare, but one upward lot, with a sign stuck up: 'For sale, to chase an estate; inquire of the landlord.'

And, of course, I sort of saunters into the office indicated on the sign right away, and I says to the man there:

"What are you asking for that lot down in 22? And he says:

"A million dollars a square foot."

"How much is there of it? I asked, and he says:

"Seventy feet." And I says:

"Well, I'll take it, but I'm that nervous I know it was a bargain; never'd been offered at that price in the world, I guess, except to close an estate, and the only wonder to me was that somebody hadn't snapped it up before I came along.

"So, I bought the only vacant lot on a great business thoroughfare and the man said he'd have the papers made out right away, and I could drop in on it about the next morning and pay the money and hold hand over the deed; and then I went out and stood on the sidewalk and saw those wonderful multitudes of all the people of the earth passing in those amazing processions, crowds that made the people passing on Broadway and Fifth avenue, New York, seem like the lines of strugglers working their way out along to some county fair; and then I goes down to that vacant lot at 22, my lot, and stands there and sees 'em go by from there, and pats myself on the back and says to myself:

"'Well, son, thank goodness you've finally hit up on something that you're going to make something on; large money.'

To Reach Any Worthy Ideal by Simply Keeping Heart of Its Things Of Life.

What we need is not so much a smaller number of ideas to humor as a larger number of active, aspirative virtues to occupy our energies. He is good who is positively good for some thing, not he who is innocent of anything. What you really are can never be determined by the most minute enumeration of what you are not. There is too much negative goodness in this line in what they are.

Cultivate the virtues and the vices will take care of themselves. The development of the good is the death of the bad. There is no need to be in a circumstance of life, never so much as a chance passes on the street or a flower in the meadow, but that in them we find either good or ill the thought and spirit of the beings or blossoms.

He who forces forth in cheerfulness of duty seeking to find good and to do good, discovers that the foes he once feared flee before him; some of them, I know, except to close an estate, and the only wonder to me was that somebody hadn't snapped it up before I came along.

"So, I bought the only vacant lot on a great business thoroughfare and the man said he'd have the papers made out right away, and I could drop in on it about the next morning and pay the money and hold hand over the deed; and then I went out and stood on the sidewalk and saw those wonderful multitudes of all the people of the earth passing in those amazing processions, crowds that made the people passing on Broadway and Fifth avenue, New York, seem like the lines of strugglers working their way out along to some county fair; and then I goes down to that vacant lot at 22, my lot, and stands there and sees 'em go by from there, and pats myself on the back and says to myself:

Change in Homestead Regulations Make Entry Easily Accomplished.

"Nothing succeeds like success." is an old and true saying, having many applications in Western Canada. The following letter is an illustration. The writer, Mr. Gerts, left Chicago a short time ago and his success so far indicates that may well be gained by anyone having pluck and energy to develop on the free homestead lands in Western Canada. A change has recently been made in the Homestead Regulations permitting homesteading immediately, which makes it possible for any member of a family to make entry for any other member of the family entitled to a homestead. For instance, a man may now make entry before the local agent for his father or for his brother or brothers, or for his son or sons, or for a sister or daughter, who may be the head of the family having minor children depending upon her for support. Or, a son, daughter or sister may be entitled to make entry for any members of the family who are entitled to entry upon a homestead. The only fee required is $10 for each entry. A general survey of the country has now been made. Read what Mr. Gerts has to say.

Dear Sir: Thinking a letter from an Northwest settler might interest you, I write a few lines to let you know we are progressing finely and thoroughly satisfied with our location.

When I think of the many hard-working, industrious people in the Old Country who are struggling for a living and during the strenuous factor so practically nothing for old age, the possibilities of acres of land here yet to be placed and cultivated, capable of raising 30 to 40 eighty bushels of oats thirty to forty bushels of wheat and barley in proportion, a pity the two coaled be brought together. But I will repeat, this country is only in its infancy, and, mark my words, it will be a great, great country before many years have gone by. Now, I will close, this comfortable home, and letter in the tabernacle.

Yours very sincerely, Jeffrey. Meaning he was, he had shown that he would on occasion, and that he would do so also afterward. And if he had been permitted to take his place in the Kingdom of Heaven, he would have still found occasion to do so. Jeffrey was a man who was ready to do anything he was called upon to do, and,

IRISH CHURCH BELLS

THE EARLIEST ONES WEIGHED ONLY A FEW OUNCES.

First Adopted About the Time of St. Patrick—Bells of the 15th Century —Were Made of Hammered Iron.

It was about the time of St. Patrick, in the 5th century, that bells began to be adopted in the Christian church, though their use in other countries was long anterior to Christianity, as Mr. Layard records having found some in the palace of Nimrod. The first Christian bells, like St. Patrick's, weighed only a few ounces, and from that they gradually increased till the greatest weight was reached at Moscow with 128 tons of beautiful bell metal, with a strange contrast to London—"Bow-and-arrows Dick-in" or "Bell of Partick's well" sometimes referred to as the bell of Arbraath, with its diminutive dimensions of six inches deep, made of thin sheets of hammered iron bent into a four sided bell. Diamond will cut glass and brass or hammer. This bell is a super fine most authentic and the old one which rings Christmas eve, which had been presented to us, and it was thought to the "Annals" under the date of 802.

Such as this were the bells of the early apostles of Ireland, but the age was a precursor of the age, and advancing art soon claimed the bells to work on, and the hammered iron gave way to bronze castings, more skillful stock probably and to more perfect resonance. We are fortunate enough to have on loan the finest example in the Hanlon bell of what the craft of bell making had advanced to by the time the tenth century had dawned. For 500 years the iron bell of Patrick had done its duty, and now it had to be laid by.

The same story applies to many other famous bells of Ireland and their glorious but their church bows those ancient bells, and their ancestors from rebellious them, most precious relics. They must be preserved, and the far famous bell workers of Ireland came to the rescue and brought the national art, then in the zenith of its perfection, to bear on the "easer to hold them called "shrines" and to far the most beautiful of all was that for the bell of the great patron saint of Ireland.

The early church builders and artificers of Ireland were skilled and bold and fearless in their creations, with an independence of thought, that took on original lines to work on the age. It is in the stone-roofed churches, the stately round towers, the great crosses—a model of one, the finest cross on earth, stands near the case containing the bells—and by the preservation of the bells themselves we see a the refinement or obtrusive another manner thought, rare and unique, and the bell shrines, and the churches, the stately round towers, the great crosses—a model of one, the finest cross on earth, stands near the case containing the bells—and by the preservation of the bells themselves we see a the refinement or obtrusive another manner thought, rare and unique, and the bell shrines, and the

BELIEVES IN SUN SPOTS.

A Word About a Favorite Theory as to Short Crops.

In the bottom of its heart a good part of the financial community cherishes the suspicion that financial crises, especially when caused or accompanied by bad harvests, have something to do with "sun spots," says the New York Post. The argument is that these years of intense solar activity come somewhere near once in ten years and so the panics that "sun spots" very probably cause abnormal seasons on our own planet, and that abnormal seasons cause crop failures and trouble in the stock exchange. Nobody would need to take this seriously but for the fact that 12 years ago, a very eminent English economist frankly asserted his belief in the theory. Prof. Jevons was so confident of its applicability that in 1875 he predicted a European panic in 1879, because the "sun spot" activity would then be again approaching a maximum.

But how about the facts? The year 1877 was one of sunspot maximum and also a year of commercial panic. Sun spots were very active in 1871, 1872 and 1873 and we know what happened in the markets. In 1883 a vigorous maximum was reached; Europe had a stock-exchange panic in 1882 and the United States one in 1884. There was a famous "sunspot year" in 1893 and, what is more to the point, we are still in a period of solar activity and disordered markets.

So far, this is all very well, but let us be thorough. The panic of 1857 was one of the worst on the list, and 1857 came in a period of sunspot minimum. In 1866, when one of the worst of England's financial crises occurred, solar activity was at the lowest level in a decade. A period of sunspot minimum began in 1888 and continued into the "Baring year," 1890. Dividends are spots do not always have the same effect.

Prof. Jevons thought that the effect was brought about through crop failures. The astronomers tell us, however, that so far as there is any correspondence, "cold years, rainy and inconstant seasons correspond to those when the sun is quiet; dry and warm years to epochs of great solar activity." Now a dry year may ruin crops as well as a rainy one, but as a matter of record among panic years, 1857 produced an abundant European harvest, 1873 yielded a "bumper crop" in the United States, 1893 had a good second, and 1890 was a year of unparalleled wheat production all over the world. And what is to solid of 1879 and 1907, when the world raised "bumper crops" in the western hemisphere and lost most of the harvest in the eastern.

WARNING IN SHOE SOLE.

Lookout Man Wears Copper Plate to Scare Electric Pusher.

Some of the dives about town that are under the ban of the police have ingenious contrivances for warning proprietors and patrons of the approach of a "bull" or any other suspected person. By the way, these places are never referred to by the vernacular as "dives" or "joints" for the vocabulary of the investors of slang changes as quickly as a word comes into general use, so a suspected place is now always referred to as a "shop."

Warning of the approach of a policeman or detective is given by means of an electric buzzer. Formerly the push-button connected with the buzzer was concealed under the edge of the bar or in front of or behind a wicker chair. This device, however, was discovered by the police, who thereafter on entering a suspected place kept a close watch on the barkeeper and gave him no chance to press the button.

Then came the snag device. This consisted of two small metal prongs projected from the side of the wall. When a man suspected to be a limb of the law entered the door the barkeeper carelessly placed a coat across the two prongs, thus making a circuit and causing the buzzer to sound in the rear.

This device was discovered, too, so now a lookout is stationed outside the door of a dive. He apparently is a loiterer, but he scans closely by a quick glance the face of every person who enters. If a man doesn't pass "all right" the lookout presses his foot, which has a copper plate nailed to the sole, to another small plate affixed to the surface of a cellar door or outside. This sets the circuit and causes the buzzer to get busy, so that by the time the "bull" throws open the door the occupants who are wanted by the police have had time to make their escape and those who remain are seated at tables harmlessly drinking beer or engaged in a friendly game of pinochle or whist. Everything is apparently "on the level" and the "bull" is forced to withdraw without having been able to obtain any evidence.

A PHILADELPHIA IDEA.

How an Ingenious Student Avoided a Tardy Mark.

A certain student at the Central high school hit upon a brilliant idea to escape punishment for tardiness in an established rule at the institution to detain all pupils one hour after regular dismissal for each case of tardiness, and if the same student is late three times in one month he is liable to suspension for one day, or less he is able to furnish a reasonable excuse. A suspension carries with it a forfeiture of examination in four and sometimes five studies. The student, to question, through some unavoidable delay, was late twice in one month. While going to school one morning, the car in which he rode was held up for about 30 minutes at Washington avenue by the freight trains. Fearing suspension through his chronic lateness the student tore a leaf from his notebook and asked his fellow passengers to affix their signatures to a note which declared that he was detained by the railroad cars. He arrived at school several minutes late, but on presentation of his note, signed with 20 names, he was excused by the professors.—Philadelphia Record.

Many of the china Bavaria imported "decorated" are only composed of a dye that burns and are not worth the price paid for them. FEW MARINE WRECKS

LAKE DISASTERS IN 1907 A MINUS QUANTITY.

Reason Not Yet Ended, However, and Record May Be Spoiled Yet—Navy Department Also Issues Its Usual Report for its Shelfe.

Marine men on the Great Lakes are quite among congratulating themselves and hoping that the remarkable record, with regard to wrecks, will continue to the close. Hitherto the same time they uttered whisper, one to the other, "Beware the Ides of November!" for Nov. 28 has yet arrived. Upon that fateful Nov. 28, 1905, the most spectacular and costly series of wrecks in the history of marine navigation in the world occurred on Lake Superior, when almost upon the heights of nearly all modern steel craft owned by the United States Steel Corporation, was wrecked, carrying the loss of numerous lives and—as cash is lost—$1,500,000 ($4,529,000) of which was on hulls, and the remainder on cargoes. It is with a shudder that marine men recall the idea disasters of Nov. 1, Oct. 30 and Nov. 28, 1905. In these storms most those fatal 116 persons were lost and about $4 total of 121 for this marine season. This tremendous loss of life on the lakes is one reason it is better understood when the following records are given. In 1906 the loss of life on the lakes was but 90; in 1907, 85; in 1905, 95; in 1904, 80; in 1903, 116; in 1902, 122; in 1901, 127; in 1900, 102; in 1899, 93; and in 1898, 89; and then came the unprecedented total of 116, more than, before any season, of which more lost than any other season, of which more lost than any other season. Marine men are hoping for the best this season, and thus far it has not been a serious loss in the lakes. Not a vessel of importance is the greater part of the year not gone out of existence, leaving the Atlantic coast and Gulf of Mexico and some inland waters out of consideration. In view of the immense amount of tonnage which goes over with every recorded vessel, it is regarded as strange that there is only a comparatively small number of lives are even touched by wreckers. In case of the commodious loss of numerous steel freighters on Lake Superior, in 1905, all but two failures and Modern were overhauled for salvage during the following season.

NEW HIGH EXPLOSIVE.

Greater Damage Can Be Done by Latest Discovery.

The Navy Department has adopted a new high explosive for use as a bursting charge for armor piercing shells. The basis of this new explosive is understood to be picric acid compound. This is one of the developments in the test conducted under the special ordnance board, which has been giving its attention during the last two years to powders, projectiles, fuses and other ordnance material. The board and Indian Head powder grounds showed that the new explosive effected damage beyond the capacity of other shells. The explosive is described as closely resembling the Japanese "Shimose." The adoption of high explosive is one of the most important steps taken many years under the Navy Department.

FINDS CITY OF UNKNOWN RACE

Prof. Saville of Columbia University Returns from Trip to Ecuador.

M. R. Saville, professor of archaeology at Columbia university, who has returned from a trip to Ecuador, said he had discovered the ruins of cities near the coast which contained many sculptures of a race hitherto unknown to present-day civilization. The professor's researches extended along the Pacific coast about fifty miles to the north and about the same distance to the south of the equator. Somewhere between these points and to a distance about 100 miles inland he found evidence of a city of antiquity. The city, he said, had streets lined with houses of a singular construction. Though the destroyed had been made of light material, a set of pillaster as sketch, they had been constructed evidently with a view of withstanding the shocks of the frequent earthquakes of the region and were intact. He said he believed the city had contained 2,000 or more people 500 years ago. In his opinion the race was one of the highest in civilization living in America previous to the coming of Columbus.

Statistics of Attempted Revolution In Russia Are Compiled.

Statistics regarding the revolutionary movement have been compiled by M. Tikhoshff, the noted statistician, and published by the Bourse Gazette. The total number of victims of the "pacification" operations is 47,020, of whom 15,141 were killed. It is further shown that 2,283 unknown persons were carried out, that 1,950 prisoners committed suicide, and that 21,406 persons were imprisoned. Of the 15,141 killed, 9,963 resulted from encounters with the soldiery and police. KILLS HER CHILDREN

FEARED HUSBAND WOULD TAKE THEM FROM HER.

Insane of Pennsylvania Sanatorium Strangles Two Little Girls—Searchers Fail to Find Trace of Any Land North of Alaska.

Strangled to death in their beds, Marie and Catherine Thomas, two small children of Miss Catherine Thomas, an insane of the Lawrence county almshouse, near Johnstown, Pa., were found. Shortly before midnight one of the inmates saw he heard one of the children cry, "Oh, mamma! mamma!" but thought the woman was screaming her children. In the morning the mother came down to breakfast and seemingly recalled that two of the children had died during the night. Mrs. Thomas admitted that she had killed them, but, it is said, afterward admitted the deed, saying that she was afraid her husband would take them from her. The children were 1 and 3 years old, respectively. Mrs. Thomas has two boys of 6 and 10 years, and it is said she tried to send them to her room, supposedly for the purpose of killing them also. The coroner returned a verdict against Mrs. Thomas.

SPECIAL SESSION

The Legislature Called for Sept. 7th to Correct Primary Law and Do Other Things.

In his call for the special session of the legislature, issued the 23d inst., Warner does not include any of the requests for close or district legislation, made to him from various parts of the state. Only the Mt. Pleasant Normal college situation and the "demand for primary election" are included in the call.

"At the last regular session of the legislature," says the governor, "the two houses disagreed regarding the bill making an appropriation for the maintenance of the Mt. Pleasant Normal college for the ensuing two years as well as for improvements at that institution. The contention was raised before the legislature's adjournment that the bill as signed by the governor was not the bill that passed the house and senate and therefore the college was without funds for maintenance and necessary betterments.

"The people of the state are almost a unit in demanding that all candidates for public offices who are voted for by the primary shall be selected by the people and under no circumstances by a delegates convention. At its recent session the legislature failed to make a number of changes in the changes in the law which the people of the state desire. These universally desired changes should be made before another general election is held in Michigan. The legislature can supply the needed remedies.

"Regarding the situation as demanding immediate action, I hereby call the legislature of the state of Michigan to meet in extraordinary session on Monday the seventh day of October, 1907, at 12 o clock noon of that day to consider such matters as shall be submitted by the governor by special message."

Publishing a Newspaper.

The man who publishes a newspaper may very worthily be content. He has a business, but he has something more. He has an opportunity such as is accorded to but few for doing good. The financial end of his business may be subordinate and incidental. His pen and his life may be used for the good of his followers. His opportunity is unique and if he be worthy the position he occupies he will leave the world better for his living. There are a great many things he will not see, and a great many things he sees he will not publish.

Manistee one remarked that Herbert Johnson's convention would have been more impressive at times had he thrown in an occasional flash of science. A newspaper can often best serve the public by now and then throwing in a flash of silence."

As some one has said, "There is so much good in the worst of us, and so much bad in the best of us, that it little behooves any of us to speak ill of the rest of us."

The best way to discourage evil is to commend the good. And if we are looking for it we can find some good in every one.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Boyne City voted down the proposition to bond for street improvement.

Manistee Nonpareil: Jerry Huffman has bought and shipped five carload of apples thus far this fall. This is the first time that the fruit was shipped from this station.

Rev A. Dental of Honor has been extended a call to the Congregational church of Northport to take the place of Rev. W. H. Hurlbut. Mr. Dental has not yet formally accepted the place.

Kalkaska county boards of the best roads in the state more roads constructed according to the specifications of the highway department than any other county. This year thus far $11,470.00 has been expended on the roads of the county and about five and one half miles constructed on which state reward will be drawn.

Boyne Citizen: T. C. Hunt, land commissioner of the D. G. G. A. has received an appointment to the Methodist pastorate at Northport, and will also have charge of Indian Mission at there. Although this will not be Mr. first pastorate it will be quite a change from his present duties and we wish him success in his new field.

Petoskey News; Judge A. E McCabe and wife left last night for Seattle, Wash., whence they sail on Friday next for the Philippines, at which home is cut short on account of the recent resignation of one of the seven federal judges in that country and all the judges now visiting in the states.

Petoskey News: Captain and Mrs Wilson celebrated their fifty one years ago on Sunday, and to honor of the event they met at the trip Petoskey to Toplinskie via the Inland Route as guests of Commodore A. L. Hamill, during the ride Captain Rose gave some of the other passengers many pictures on the early history of northern Michigan, which was his residence even before the war.

Elk Rapids Progress: Saturday F. S. Wilson received notice from the state game warden, Hon Charles S. Pierce, that (Wilson) had been appointed a deputy. His district comprises ten counties in northern Michigan. Mr. Wilson at once resigned his position with the Cement Company and assumed the duties of his new work Monday, leaving that morning to visit distrits of the territory to be covered by him.

Collection of school taxes from large property holders in a district where no school was held for several years is to be prosecuted at once in that county. Murphy & Higgins of Cadillac have paid more that $1,000 of such taxes in district 4 of Colfax township, where it was recently revealed that for three or four years no school was held. They will bring suit to get their money back if it cannot be obtained otherwise. The department of public instruction says that such taxes can be recovered.

The Indian Land Common wealth for boys at Boyne City has received over 1,400 homeless and neglected lads from the slums of our large cities since the work started. During the past year sixteen thousand and two hundred lodging and forty-eight thousand six hundred meals provided for these lads. The farm is receiving just the class that other institutions do not want and will not have. Such a boy as a really incorrigible boy is not a fact and so boy is to bad to be admitted to the full privileges of the farm. Boys are not admitted temporarily and encouraged in idleness, but are received permanently and helped into good useful manhood. This is not merely a charity, but the boys right and our privilege to lift them up and turn their faces toward the light.

Petoskey News: Rev. A. A. Darling gives a positive illustration of the fertility and productiveness of the soil in this part of the state. He rented one half an acre of ground from Chas. Lowain, planting the same to garden stuffs. He informs us that he has sold there from potatoes $21.72, corn, $15.05; beans, 80 cents, and the fodder for $10, making $57.57 from that small garden, besides the family supply and to dry some of the corn, and no little amount given to friends and neighbors. while the showing is remarkable it is no more than any family can do if this vicinity, which indicates that any of the lands in northern Michigan may be transposed into veritable garden spots by the employment of one's own time for a few years.

Boyne Citizen: The Rev. N. Z. Yoder of Concord Tenn, is present in the city and visiting at the home of of E. C. Dunn. Mr. Yoder will spend some days in looking about among the cut over lands of W. H. White and the Boyne City Lumber Company, in connection with the proposition of locating a large colony of Mennonites upon these lands. Some months ago a number of men were here on a like mission. All of these are highly pleased with the country and its opportunities and have reason to believe that the purchase of a large tract of land will soon be made and by another spring the actual colonization will begin this Yoder and Mr Stoltzfus, who has been here for some weeks, visited the Otsego county fair to view the products of the country, and some of the local farmers, and later in the week will accompany E. C. Hunt, the Land Commissioner on a journey among the lands of Hudson Township and also into Antrim County.

Press dispatches from Cheboygan report the explosion of dynamite there Sunday as follows. With a terrific detonation which blew out practically every window light in this city and covered the people who were attending church in the Congregational church with plaster from the ceiling. A warehouse belonging to the Post Hardware Co., which contained fourteen twenty-five pound packages of dynamite, exploded this morning killing Leslie Gent 18 years old; Herl Simmons, 18, and Richard Simmons, 17. The three young men had been hunting several days together and this morning left town and walked along the railroad track, shooting what ever game they saw. they reached the woods about a mile from town and nothing a small house, decided to shoot at it. The first bullet fired at it exploded the dynamite. With the shock of the explosion the entire population of the city rushed to the scene and were horrified to find the bodies of the victims torn to shreds and hanging from the limbs of trees in the vicinity.

Letter to Argo Milling Co.
Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sirs: Mr. N. Avery, Leibli, N. Y. had two houses exactly alike, and painted them one Devoe lead and zinc; the other barytes and zinc. He paid same price for both paints.

He used six gallons of lead and zinc, 12 gallons barytes and zinc.

He paid $18 for painting lead and zinc, $36 for painting barytes and zinc.

The total cost of the lead-and-zinc job was $27; the total cost of the barytes and zinc job was $54.

He didn't know he was buying barytes; the dealer told him that paint was as good as Devoe.

A fair example of how it generally comes out, when you buy "something just as good." Better go by the name; and the name is DEVOE.

Yours truly

NORWOOD NEWS.

Mrs. Grace Turcott who has been visiting at Mr. O'Morrow's the past 2 weeks left for Traverse City last Friday.

Mrs. Rew and Mrs. Nicholls left for Chicago last Tuesday.

Hey. H. E. Yost returned from Conference Tuesday, and will preach here another year. At a reception given him Friday night, there was about 50 present, and every one had a good time.

There was a shipwreck off Norwood Friday. Mr. Bigger of Manton, drew a boat he had been building across to Traverse City, and started to go to Boyne City. Friday morning during the gale they were discovered by Mr. Valentine making signals of distress. Mr. Valentine rowed out to them in a skiff and took off 2 boys wife, were with Mr. Bigger, and returned to the boat and took Mr. Bigger ashore and got a tow line on the boat which was then landed on the beach about 40 rods north of the dock. It was a close call for them for if they had passed here the way the wind was they would have been so far out they would not have been seen. They seemed to be lost and not to understand navigation any too well. Mr. Bigger wants to sell his boat.

NOTED FOR HIS PROFANITY.

Lord Thurlow, English Chancellor, Was Terrible Swearer.

Lord Thurlow, once lord high chancellor of England, was the most profane swearer that ever lived, and he lived in an age when swearing was regarded as an element built among the elite. He was keeper of the Conscience of George III. He took to swearing as a lad does who wishes to show that he has arrived at mental maturity. It was his ambition to be considered a swearer. With him everything was "damned good, damned bad," "damned hot" "damned cold," etc. "Damned" was his epithet for adjective and superlative his adverb. His judgment? To have deprived Thurlow of his "damns" would have been equivalent to shaving off his eyebrows or turning his great nose to a whisper. Sir Harry Campbell, lord advocate, arguing a Scotch appeal to the law in a very tedious manner, said, "I will make my lords proceed to my answer power." "Damn it, sir, I'll be the judge," cried Lord Thurlow, so as to be heard by all present; "this house is adjourned till Monday week," and off he scampered.

Easy Rest Cure.

The newest rest cure recommended is a most simple remedy, and cheap as flaxseed. It soothes, rests and rebuilds tissue the tired body and jaded nerves, as all the other cures exist sunlight and air, under either conditions, fail to do. Give Kodol a fair trial, take one teaspoon or other to any great extent one's ordinary mode of life to take it, neither is any special diet, any complicated preparation nor medical attendance or anxious drains required. The cure consists simply in passing every article of food through good only for a step further and advise as an even more efficient cure for the passing of all one's spare time in bed and as a perpetual preventive of sicktiness the clicking off this mortal coil and removing to the grave.

All the Difference.

When Robert Van Wyck was mayor of New York he was carried as to his personal habits, especially about the size hat time does he enjoy on the occasion of a visit to his hotel. Thus hospitable gentleman desired to set up something that would allow his good feeling towards the city he was visiting. Mr. Van Wyck neigred to be persuaded. If I should drink" he explained, "I might not be able to hold my job of mayor." "Faith," was the instant answer, "if I didn't drink I would be unable to hold mine."

"Jacob's Ladder."

Anyone the stair causes the world every none is so long or difficult of ascent as "Jacob's Ladder." This flight contains more than 700 steps, all thinn with the same lift, in the same direction. The steps rise at an angle of ninety 45 degrees. "Jacob's Ladder" ascends a steep hill at St. Helens. The steps are naturally the most direct route to the summit of the hill, and despite their great length, are utilized daily by wayfarers.

The Accurate Scot.

A Scotchman, stood on the platform of a little wayside railroad station in the south of Scotland. The distinguished characteristic of him was the perfect limitation he afforded of the studied carlessness of the average Scotchman. The station master fell into conversation with him, for they seemed acquainted. "And what did the doctor say to you?" he inquired. "Oh," replied the traveler, "he says there's ocht wrang wi' me, but to wee yersel' that I may dee for a' that!"

Cygnets.

As many as 20,000 cygnets are killed every year to be converted into dainty powder puffs, to say nothing of the innumerable young birds of the eider duck and wild goose tribe slaughtered for the same purpose. The bulk of these are imported—the geese and swans from the islands of the Baltic and from Norway and Sweden, and the eiders from the northern and land bound seas.

—In the evening of Wednesday, Oct. 9th, Col. T. W. Scott, the new provincial commander for Michigan and Indiana, Salvation Army, will speak at the M. E. church. Col. T. W. Scott has been a Salvation Army Officer twenty three years, and has done services in four different countries. For the past nine years he has held some of the most important positions in America, the last of these embracing the territory of four States with headquarters in Kansas City. On the occasion of the Colonels farewell from Kansas city the "Kansas City Star" in an editorial says, "Colonel Scott has been a good disciplinarian, a kindly minister and a resourceful manager."

—A neighbor of ours has a skunk that comes out from under the woodshed and eats off the cats plate with the cats. A friend of ours, who is, however, something of a liar, says he has seen the skunk gambolling about the yard with the cats. This facetiarity should be discouraged. We have a cat that is about the color of a skunk which we are in the habit of picking up in the yard as we return home in the evening before the street lights on the big town are set going morning. If! Well If! We have heretofore feelingly referred to this skunk question, and we do not now return to the subject with any desire to keep it even remotely connected with the present special session of the legislature. We merely desire to remind you that the legislature has made it a penal offense to kill a skunk—that is a fact. We believe the primary election law and the skunk law were both, very appropriately, passed by the same legislature.

TUBER BUYERS ORGANIZED

Farmers Will Be Benefited By the Society of Equity.

For several years there has been an organization among the big users of the potato buying world over to see that this year's schedule of prices had been made. This organization will meet with some resistance this season from the American Society of Equity. They laugh at the idea that this will enable the grower in marketing his produce at better prices. They insist that the farmer has got to sell, but seem to have forgotten the successful fight being made by the tobacco growers of Kentucky against the tobacco trust—The American Tobacco Company, the Imperial Tobacco Company and the Italian Purchasing Syndicate, since 1904 by united effort the farmers tactisms have been able to demand and receive twelve to fifteen cents for their crop where previously the trust forced the price as low as five cents per pound.

The society of Equity is not fully organized as yet, but is making itself felt in communities where its workings are understood. The buyers are merely proposing to meet and do in order to meet these position intelligently the farmers should keep well posted in the crop and market conditions. The law of supply and demand always rules a factor with the price of a perishable crop. The old supply will also be an item for consideration, that surplus on the side of the buyer.

The present price of forty cents is a good one for the grower. He can make some money of the crop at that figure. There is not much of the million bushel shipping through the mail of business, yet it might be well to remember that the great bulk of the potato crop is consumed by the people and middle class who are charged to pay per bushel at some time and a half times the price received by the farmer.—Cadillac Globe.

GREAT LAKES CHART.

Valuable Map Has Just Been Issued from Lake Survey Department.

The United States Lake Survey has just issued a chart of the Great Lakes region. It is printed in five colors on a scale of 10 miles to the inch and is intended for the use of navigators. The chart is big enough to show the whole lake system from Duluth and Chicago to Montreal, and can easily be spread 10 feet in small enough to fit in a master's chart case.

Here are some of the features shown in outline: Navigation and allied interests.

Primary sailing courses, with distances, are shown for any lake.

All water areas with 10 fathoms of water or less are shown in blue. The deep water is in white, with the 10, 20, 50 and 100 fathom depths separated by distinct contour lines. All land areas are in buff tint.

Lines showing the compass variations over the whole region are printed in red. Places where there is a local magnetic disturbance are conspicuously marked.

Curves are given showing the lowest and highest monthly mean levels of the water in each of the lakes from 1860 to 1906.

Tables are incorporated giving lengths, terminal points and basins with their dimensions of the United States and Canadian canals tributary to the Great Lakes.

Tables of dry docks on the lakes with dimensions are given.

Populations of cities and towns bordering the lakes are indicated by varied symbols and graded scales of lettering.

The law provides that these charts shall be sold at the cost of the paper and printing. They are now on sale at the United States lake survey office, 34 Chapin, building, Detroit, Mich., price 25 cents each.

Common Council.

At the annual meeting Monday night $1,212 was allowed on claims against the city. Other matters were unfinished.

W. J. Wenzel was appointed a policeman, and acting chief during the absence of Chief Jordan.

A curb and gutter was authorized on Newman street from the west line of the Charlevoix summer House grounds west to Allen street. The Summer House Association are already outlining the street east from that point.

It was ordered that Bacon avenue west of Bridge street be curbed guttered and paved with Macadam.

THE ELECTRIC SHORE ROAD.

The Proposition Has Reached a Stage that Insures Success.

That the trolly line from Traverse City to Charlevoix, and probably to Petoskey, is a certainty in the near future, seems evident.

Last Friday evening Mr. M. S. Sanders, representing the Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co., of Traverse City, and Mr. C. A. Deneen, secretary and general counsel of the Carter Construction Co., of Indianapolis, were here, and held a consultation with the officials of our board of commerce. The gentlemen, who proceeded to Petoskey Saturday, came not only to talk with us, but to secure data needed for the prospectus of the company, which will soon be issued.

That the Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co. has taken hold of the project, and heartily indorses it, means very much for the success of the enterprise, as this always conservative corporation never attaches its name to a wildcat proposition. It means that substantial responsibility underlies the electric shore railroad project.

This project means the early construction of the road next spring both from Charlevoix and Traverse City.

"Uncle Bill" Harris and the Apple Blossom.

There was a little spasm of journalistic and legislative reminiscence on the street one evening last week that had in it much of interest.

The writer of this was making down the street with Mr. Pirgitthons, the Detroit News staff correspondent, when Hon. Wm. Harris, of Norwood, came around a corner and loomed up in front of us. We were about to introduce "Uncle Bill" to the Detroit scribe, when the latter fairly fell into each others arms in instantaneous mutual recognition.

"Hello, Fitz," says Uncle Bill.

"Hello, old 'apple blossom,' says Fitz.

Pirgitthons was Lansing correspondent of the News when Mr. Harris was in the legislature of 1907, and the way Michigan politics and legislation had two years ago dissolved to the surface and impregnated the atmosphere was a better to shake.

CHAPTER X.

It was a long, tiresome ride for grandpa, from Hoosdale to Aikenside, and he accepted thankfully the doctor's offer to take Maddy home himself. With this arrangement Maddy was well pleased, as it would draw afford her the opportunity she had so much desired, of talking with the doctor about his bill, and asking him to wait until she had earned enough to pay it.

Quickly the morning passed, and just as the clock struck noon the doctor's buggy appeared under the hill. Up to this moment Maddy had been busy enough to avoid anxiety, but when, with her shawl and bonnet on, she stood waiting where the road turned into the woods, Hoosdale, and when she—on a near view of the sorrowful face at the window—saw the doctor alighted, she grew nervous and tired, and this helped to increase her anger toward the innocent girl. She would take Immediate leave of her, she thought, to put the spasm down, and the sight of Flora laying the cloak for Maddy suggested to her the idea of leaving Maddy her place.

"Flora," she said, "I rather can arrange the table for four. Have we company?"

"Yes, ma'am, ma'am, there's Mr. Ing, yourself, Miss Jessie, and Miss Clide, and Miss Fronsie," said Flora confusedly laughing; "because Mrs Clide's plate, ma'am, I thought, was generous to eat with them."

"Well, ma'am," and Flora hesitated, "she's very pretty, and ladylike, and young, and he Mr. Hubbock when he was here. He treats her as if she was good as anybody."

Meanwhile Maddy had put on her pretty hat, and taken her little dainty black silk apron, Mrs. Nash's gift, and with the thought that she was looking unusually well, started for the parlor in most bitter mood. Mrs. Agnes, who was also dressed for company, was alone when Maddy presented herself before her.

FINES WHAT MALARIA IS.

Scientific Discovery It Is Due to Millions of Blood Parasites.

The three chief types of malaria, the tertian, the quotidian, tertian and quartian fevers, with recurring attacks of from one to three days interval, are shown by Golgi of Pavia to be caused by three varieties of a parasite living a billion to each pellicul, all speculating at once in periods of seventy-two hours, forty-eight hours and twenty-four hours. Every parasite correts the vitiated blood corpuscle in which it is envloped and attacks another. The simultaneous onslaught of the million little animals causes the shaking and the burning fever.

Dr. Laveran, the French army surgeon, discovered the parasites, two and a half centuries after Dogwhat first described the specific that kills them of, was found by an obscure villager of Malaucine, near Lake, in Brescia. Pulmonary consumption is thus separated its essential affinity, quinine. This has saved more lives than have been lost in the battles of the civilized world. Koch and his successors discover that the natural antitoxic mechanism of the body sometimes subtoed to cerebro-spinal meningitis. If they survive the fever. Nevertheless, exact investigations since constantly increase the disease.

"The disease hangs like a cloud over the Campagna, preventing or slaying every year untold millions of human beings, especially of the young; crippling not only the native but the pioneer, the soldier, the traveler and the sojourner, and preventing civilization from the luxury of the most fertile tracts of the world."

An American, A. F. A. King, first suggested in 1883 that the infection is due to the bites of mosquitoes. Savage tribes, including the Congolese, had, it is true, substituted the theory centuries ago. Since 1883 the researches of Ross and Manson of Goh and of practical investigators like Higgins revealed the fact that the antitoxic or "bad air" of marshes cannot communicate the fever, but the amphibious mosquitoes, which rise from the stagnant waters. There is no other way for which malaria is spread, and the mosquitoes thrive the parasites from infected patients.

Trouble.

"More trouble," replied McNutty, putting on his coat. "If it ain't one thing it's another."

"What's the matter now?" queried his good wife.

"Stock labor troubles," answered McNutty.

THE REWARD OF FAITH.

By Rev. R. S. T. Willis.

Then will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee because he trusteth in thee.—Isa. xxvi. 3.

It is to be noted that man does not keep himself in peace, for in the sense of this, grace would, in fact, be impossible. But it is a gift. Jesus said: "My peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you," and again, "These things have I spoken unto you that my peace might remain in you." We have come in all by the road of toil and struggle, as cannot create in our walk ourselves into—and yet, however grievous we may feel ourselves to be we live daily with the peace of God passing all our thoughts. This peace is God, in fact, it is "the peace of God."

The great attitudes of nature and the solemn majesty of the heavenly spheres indicate to us the sense of man, but it is experienced only in the deepest recesses of the soul. And this peace of God will rule in the heart if we will permit it.

It is due to be noted that it is a perfect peace, for, indeed, God's peace could be nothing less; and it passes all human understanding. It is also graciousness, for whom it is imparted, it is inconceivable, and it is a little peace. It is perfect in its nature and perfect in its work, imparting a divine calmness and serenity of soul and a sweet heavenly rest that the world can neither give nor take away.

This peace does not occupy the world of material things; its realm is the heart and the soul of man. He is kept in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on God. The world promises, and tribulations, persecutions and afflictions, disappointments, heartaches and death, are coming, and life is at best a delusive, transient friendships bring danger and sorrow, and pleasure is a fleeting delusion. But God does not leave alone and unaided the soul that is stayed on him. He is in your present help in time of trouble. He gives and sustains and keeps in the midst of the fight that one can say: "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?"

For greater is he who abides in the trusting faith of God than the combined forces of the world, the flesh and the devil. The soul kept in perfect peace can say when it comes to the Valley of Shadows: "I fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

And what is the secret of this sweet peace, the gift of God's love to man? It is contained in one word—trust—"because he trusteth in me." Man is to live in faith in God, and God will take him at his word. It is that confidence of faith in God that we can and yields all unto Him in perfect confidence.

Faith, giving up all to God and the staying of the mind on God means three things—peace, confidence and happiness. There is no fear so free from care or so exempt from temptation as that of the child of God. Delight and enjoyment if we direct our thought in faith to God, and then through what may seem to be a "frowning Providence" to the "smiling face" of loving love and blessed peace.

CLEVELAND'S GREAT BROADWAY

A Beautiful Boulevard Which Will Border the Rockefeller Estate.

Marlboro road, when improvements begun yesterday are finished, is to be one of the finest thoroughfares in this section of the country, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Beginning at Euclid monument the highway, eighty feet in width, will run some miles east of the mile Cleveland heights village, paved with approval macadam like the city boulevards. A grass plot will run through its middle. Outlining shade trees at intervals of ten feet lies the entire drainage. When other contemplated improvements are made the road will be a practical extension of the Cleveland park system. John D. Rockefeller, who owns most of the south side of other property borders on the highway, is one of the most extensive landowners bordering in the vicinity of his Euclid road frontage, but has been instrumental in getting the improvements established.

So far Rockefeller has been loser in money and grading, and the contract for paving will involve about $20,000 extra. Rockefeller's share of the expense will be about $3,000 and he is going to be surprised if he does not get his money back in the form of increased value of his property, besides a degree of comfort that will be provided with the trees, and will be provided with a beautiful boulevard. The work of the road proper is to be a valuable and great gift, twenty feet wide.

The Cleveland Electric and Cleveland & Eastern railways have agreed to share equally in the cost of the road, and have agreed to share in the loss in part of which there are now only two obstructions, one a small grave and through the middle of the grass plotted roadway.

The improvements have been under discussion for the last six years, by property owners and others, and the work will be begun on the Cleveland road, coming with the Euclid road, and thoroughfare will be ready for fast ride.

DANGEROUS THINGS TO HAVE

Married Man Carried Too Much Ammunition in Pocket.

It probably never enters the minds of most people how perfectly inoperative the Bible would be if it were not open to explanation through so family and so simple a method. Take, for instance, the Book of Revelations, which is a great hodge-podge of this, says the New York Tribune. Its meaning is perfectly clear to any man who has ever had a family Bible and read in it. It is the family Bible of the Apocalypse, and it is in the tribunal of the fight that one can say: "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?"

For greater is he who abides in the trusting faith of God than the combined forces of the world, the flesh and the devil. The soul kept in perfect peace can say when it comes to the Valley of Shadows: "I fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

LESSON FOR SEPT. 29.

Review—Real Psalm 90.

Golden Text—The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy.—Psalm 103:8.

Why do we study so carefully these events that happened over 3,000 years ago, and that directly concern not a comparatively small people?

There is no need of more to claim our attention in these days of rapid travel when we can go to Palestine and that we have not time for unnecessary exertion, we should we not rather use those short minutes entirely to the New Testament?

Time was when man was unable to read or write, but long before that that the New Testament in manuscript which was then the only Bible was in the hands of every man of the nation to whom it was addressed. Its contents were made the rule of life and conduct of the people. Its teachings were incorporated by universal pain, from the alcoholic through the grave and high.

If you have mysterious pains, if there are indications of inflammation or fluxions, secure a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, right away and begin its use. The following letters should convince every suffering woman of its virtue, and that it actually does conquer tumors.

Mrs. May Fry, of 426 W. Colfax Ave., South Bend, Ind., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I take great pleasure in writing to thank you for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I also took the Blood Purifier in connection with the Compound. Your medicine removed a tumor from my side, which was very painful, and I am now able to do my work without any pain. I also take a wholesome or mild laxative when I feel the need of it, and I have been troubled with constipation for years. I shall always speak well of your medicine. It has made me a well woman, and I shall recommend it as long as I live."

Mrs. E. F. Hayes, of 40 Sagebush, Boston, Mass., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I have taken two different doctors' treatment for a long time without relief. Finally I thought I had a tumor, my abdomen was swollen and I suffered from pain. I wrote to you for advice, you replied and I followed your directions. I am now today I am a well woman. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an active ingredient in the tumor and strengthened my whole system."

Mrs. Ezra Hyers, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I was told by my physician that I had a fibroid tumor and that I would have to be operated upon. I wrote to you for advice, which I followed carefully and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am not only cured of the tumor but other female troubles and can do all my own work without any pain or suffering."

Mrs. S. J. Barber, of Scott, N. Y. writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Sometime ago I wrote you for advice about trouble which the doctors thought would have to be removed. Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to-day am a well woman."

Mrs. M. M. Funk, Vandergrift, Pa., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I had a tumor and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removed it for me after two doctors had given me up. I was sick four years before I began to take the Compound. Sometimes I wish I had Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my mear."

Such testimony as above is continually received that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound stands without a rival as the cure for tumors (fibroids) as well as other distressing ills of women, and such symptoms as fluttering, down sensations, flashes, weakness, nervous prostration, etc. Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that is curing so many women and restoring them to health, is the same druggist sells which he calls "just as good."

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for the kind and helpful advice which has been saving sick women from death and misery for twenty years, and before that she assisted her mother of sanitarium 40 years.

THE BATTLE-FIELDS.

OLD SOLDIERS TALK OVER ARMY EXPERIENCES

The Blue and the Gray Review Incidents of the Late War, and in a Graphic and Interesting Manner Tell of Camp, March and Battle.

April 26, 1862, the first public funeral of a soldier killed in the Civil War was held in Chicago. The soldier had impressive service was in honor of Irving Washington Carson, a brilliant and daring young officer who had had not his fate on the field of Shiloh.

Carson was almost famous as a scout, and had the admiration and love of General Grant and of Prentiss, the hero of Shiloh.

While carrying dispatches from Grant to Prentiss, who was holding "the Hornets Nest" in the center of the field, Carson was killed—struck by a cannon ball just as he delivered his message to the fighting general who, that first day of Shiloh, undoubtedly saved the Union forces from utter rout and confusion.

Carson was without family in Chicago, but the side got large-hearted recognition of his services, and he was sending his when he enlisted, remembered his comrades in the Chicago Light Guard, who had asked what should be done with Carson's body.

A public meeting was called, and it had been decided to bury the scout with military honors and to make his grave in a plot of ground to be purchased as the burial lot of Chicago soldiers.

The funeral was held in the First Baptist church, standing on the corner of Washington and La Salle streets, and the church was filled and more nothing was outside. Rev. H. Eddy conducted the funeral sermon to the accompaniment of the sobs of the sorrowing people who had gathered to pay the last tribute to a brave soldier.

With military pomp, flag-draped coffin, muffled drums wailing music and the tramp of soldiers, the funeral was that to rest the first of that great army of martyrs who gave their lives whose dust has been placed in mother's the sod in Rosehill Cemetery.

The good-natured Irishman scout was to be in his grave was selected by the Chicago Light Guard, and the Irishmen now known to many Chicagoans as Mrs. Jacob Kilbinky. It was over the soldiers' remains that the cannon sounds, but the spot is unmarked as it is the spot where Carson was killed, and also even point out the place where the wounded Grant was carried from the field of Shiloh.

The rose to the rank of captain and became Grant's favorite scout. All through the Western campaign, the winds of "Carson, Grant's own scout," were known to the boys in blue from North and South. His career was cut short at Shiloh, and so his grave was made with the Chicago dead, and the clutch of the later years of the war has been forgotten or dissolved.

At Shiloh, though, the young soldier was gallant and terrible fighting such as was not, probably, equaled in bitterness and in slaughter at any time during the war, except at the battle of Antietam. Powerfully rent the ashes of the brave on the slope at Rosehill.

Not all the Blue and the Gray are all around the place where he was taken, the day of the scout the flag he died for fires to all the four winds of earth, upon all the seas, and among all the nations under the sun.—Abe C. Swett, in Chicago Journal.

Old Age Handicap for a Joke.

During a convention at which took place in the summer of 1861 between President Lincoln and a distinguished Western Senator, the various legislative nominations for the Presidency then pending were discussed, and Lincoln said to "You," said Mr. Lincoln, moving his leg with evident gratification, "you Senator, the current seems to be setting one way." "It does, really, seem to be setting one way," was the answer of the Senator; "but, Mr. Lincoln, as you have told me several good stories since I have been here, permit me, if you please, to tell you one."

"I have always observed that the Atlantic ocean, at the Straits of Gibraltar, constantly pours into the Mediterranean with a tremendous current. The Bosphorus empties into it, at the other end, and there are seven contributing to its waters all along the coast. It was for many years the constant puzzle of geographers why the Mediterranean under all these seven sources, never got full and overran its banks. After a while, however, a curious fact was found out, namely, that a "channel in the center of the straits, which no one discovered before, ran the tremendous body of water on the surface was running inward from the ocean, and still more powerful body was passing outward, in a counter current, one twenty feet below."

"Oh, ah!" said Old Abe, seriously, and evidently emptied for the time his mind of any story I ever heard before."

The Only Way.

A gentle sense of humor was not incompatible with the digging of trenches and the throwing of bombs.

Among the Confederate commander of a volunteer military company reported to General Lee, in great agitation, that it would require some time for the 150 Bluebeck sharpshooters or marksmanship to be changed and blind for permission.

The general replied: "It is possible that the matter.

"Ah, sir, sir! I can see," he said, "to get out of your difficulty is to resign to Mr. Lincoln to claim the war out of three years."

National Soldiers' Homes.

"I am deeply interested in the Soldiers' Home," said a prominent veteran reader. "Will you please tell something about the national homes, how good they are and where they are, and how only soldiers they accommodate? It seems to me, you being so long past, the heroic usual begin to be thinking out to pension time.

March 3, 1865, Congress established the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, with provisions allowing for branches in different parts of the country as they should be needed. There was already the Soldiers' Home in Washington, founded under the hold of ten, Scott, for soldiers of the regular army.

The eastern branch at Togus, near Augusta, Me., was the first branch of the institution for volunteers to be opened. It was opened for use in 1866. It has 1,864 acres of land and can accommodate 2,500 members.

Central branch, at Dublin, Ohio, was the next branch into use, in 1867, and was immediately removed to Dayton, Ohio, this because the largest of all the homes. Its cost was over a million and a half dollars, and it can take care of 4,500 men.

The same year northwestern branch, at Milwaukee, Wis., was established, within its beautiful grounds are homes in comfort, in 1867. Eight members of Congress, at Hampton, Va., was the next home opened, in 1870, accommodating 1,500. Western branch, near Leavenworth, Kan., included in 1885, with room for 1,500. The last of the homes to be founded, with their orchards, Western generosity. It has 1,500 members.

In 1888 the government obtained the right to take over the homes by opening the Pacific branch, near Santa Monica, Cal. The 425 acres of this beautiful ground. The home can take care of 1,000 members. The Marion, Ind., branch was the last to open, in 1896. It can house and care for 1,000 members. The Danville, Ill., home was opened in 1898, and has room for 2,500 men. Monthly bonus, now $5 from 1 to 3 years, is now under construction. It is in use, and has been in use since 1897, though not entirely finished.

In addition to these nine branches there is now 500-bed hospital, at a cost of a million dollars, Battle Mountain sanitarium, at Hot Springs, S. D. Already pledges are received for the sanitarium, which is run as one of the national homes, and it is to be used for the benefit of the northwest system of homes for disabled volunteers and their families.

The officers of the national homes are the following:

Managers—Lieutenant General of the Army, president; Secretary of war, secretary; Surgeon General of the Army, surgeon; Mr. Alvin T. McMahon, president of the board of managers, Washington, D. C.; Mr. J. Mitchell, first vice president, Mr. Jones, Wis.; Mr. Thomas J. Rodgers, second vice president, Princeton, Ind.; Mr. Wm. H. Stout, secretary, Indianapolis, Ind.; Gen. Charles M. Anderson, Greenville, Ohio; Col. Sidney G. Yeoman, Kansas City, Mo.; Mr. Wm. H. Bonnell, Los Angeles, Cal.; Gen. J. Warren Keifer, Springfield, Ohio; Mr. Walter L. Brownlow, Jonesboro, Tenn.; Capt. Henry E. Palmer, Omaha, Neb.

General Treasurer—Maj. Moses Harris, F. & A. M., New York City.

Assistant Treasurer, General—Gen. N. M. Curtis and Gen. J. T. Richards, New York City.

Assistant General Treasurer and Assistant Inspector General—George H. Pawsey, New York, City.—Chicago Journal.

TUMORS CONQUERED

Overwhelming Proof that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Succeeds.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of women's dread Tumor.

The growth of a tumor is so insidious that frequently its presence is wholly unsuspected until it is well advanced.

So called "wandering pains" may come from its early stages or the presence of danger may be made manifest by excessive pain at certain periods accompanied by unusual pain, from the abdomen through the groin and thigh.

If you have mysterious pains, if there are indications of inflammation or fluxions, secure a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, right away and begin its use.

The following letters should convince every suffering woman of its virtue, and that it actually does conquer tumors.

Mrs. May Fry, of 426 W. Colfax Ave., South Bend, Ind., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I take great pleasure in writing to thank you for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I also took the Blood Purifier in connection with the Compound. Your medicine removed a tumor from my side, which was very painful, and I am now able to do my work without any pain. I also take a wholesome or mild laxative when I feel the need of it, and I have been troubled with constipation for years. I shall always speak well of your medicine. It has made me a well woman, and I shall recommend it as long as I live."

Mrs. E. F. Hayes, of 40 Sagebush, Boston, Mass., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I have taken two different doctors' treatment for a long time without relief. Finally I thought I had a tumor, my abdomen was swollen and I suffered from pain. I wrote to you for advice, you replied and I followed your directions. I am now today I am a well woman. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an active ingredient in the tumor and strengthened my whole system."

Mrs. Ezra Hyers, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I was told by my physician that I had a fibroid tumor and that I would have to be operated upon. I wrote to you for advice, which I followed carefully and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am not only cured of the tumor but other female troubles and can do all my own work without any pain or suffering."

Mrs. S. J. Barber, of Scott, N. Y. writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Sometime ago I wrote you for advice about trouble which the doctors thought would have to be removed. Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to-day am a well woman."

Mrs. M. M. Funk, Vandergrift, Pa., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I had a tumor and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removed it for me after two doctors had given me up. I was sick four years before I began to take the Compound. Sometimes I wish I had Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for mear."

Such testimony as above is continually received that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound stands without a rival as the cure for tumors (fibroids) as well as other distressing ills of women, and such symptoms as fluttering, down sensations, flashes, weakness, nervous prostration, etc. Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that is curing so many women and restoring them to health, is the same druggist sells which he calls "just as good."

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for the kind and helpful advice which has been saving sick women from death and misery for twenty years, and before that she assisted her mother of sanitarium 40 years.

KIDNEY TROUBLE

Suffered Two Years—Relieved in Three Months.

C. B. FIZER.

MR. C. B. FIZER, Mt. Sterling, Ky., writes:

"I have suffered with kidney and other trouble for ten years past. Last March I commenced using Doans and continued for three months I have not used it since, nor have I taken a pain.

I believe that I am well and I therefore give my highest recommendation to the merits of Doans Kidney Pills.

Persons For Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Ella H. Foster, Toledo, Ohio, writes:

"I had my back hurt for almost four years. I had kidney trouble, and, in fact, felt badly nearly all the time. This summer I got so very bad I thought I would lay down and die. I was so low and began to take Doans Kidney Pills.

I took only two bottles of Doans and was well. Nearly a year has gone by and I feel as well as I ever did in my life."

Relief in Three Months.

Mrs. Ella Hoagland, of Hampton, Va., was the next lady applicant, in 1896, with room for 1,500. Western branch, near Leavenworth, Kan., included in 1885, with room for 1,500. The last of the homes to be founded, with their orchards. Western generosity. It has 1,500 members.

MINERS' ETIQUETTE

STRICT RULES GOVERN IN THE WESTERN DESERT.

It is Not Considered Polite to Ask Where Any Man's Claims or Secret Water Holes Are Located.

"Never ask a man anything about his mine, he won't tell you if you do. It isn't etiquette to ask such questions on the desert."

This spoke J. Hellenman, late of Death, an old miner in Death valley in the Desert.

"You see, when one miner meets another on the desert they stop, talk and mix themselves. One will ask the other how he's getting along and he will say good or hard luck, but never about self. Neither asks for the name or where the other has his claims located. If he's mad where you to know he'd tell you without being asked. If not he won't tell you if you do ask.

The fact is that if a man has a good body of low grade ore that he can have a score of men to work and ship to the smelters he must report it. But if he has a rich spot with few and costly handled it is not any others and many times one doesn't even let live the world know about it. It pays exceedingly cunning in dig and conceal. It often leads to troubles and litigation, jumping and all that sort of thing.

If a property is in the mountains it is more necessary to record it for it is rather found. A man can be following in the mountains but never set on the desert. I would like to see the man who could follow one on the desert if I don't want him to. I'd give him a chase that will make him sore stick of the job. Of course in such cases he can move off and be peaceful if anyone should stumble upon it by accident. In such case you should not be miss points of the law.

That is to say one about claims has other about private secret water holes. You know some of these give little water that once known to the general public they would be of no use to those who want to use trouble finding them, so to speak, also every man, so they never tell. Let one who has such a place tidings find one in need he will share his water, and if necessary he will go and bring back water, but the other fellow doesn't know where it comes from. That's the Indian's secret.

Of course there are public water holes known especially where the stage or the Greaser camp. Some wells have been dug by "49ers" or companies who sell water. Lots of money has been expended in this way. The water problem in Death is a serious one on the beach.

All sorts of the camps water is hauled in tanks and sells for as high as nine dollars a barrel. People who don't know think that is a exorbitant price, but it really leaves a very small profit for the long haul and this time and feed of teams. Often much of the water with which one starts is used up the horses."—Los Angeles Times.

HE TOOK A REST.

But Got it in a Different Way Than His Neighbor.

As it is undoubtedly true that one man's mind may be an other man's poison, so to happiness so curious that what seems the work to one person is regarded as recreation by another. Not a good lecture on Alaska, didn't we, Mr.? asked one of Mr. Dodd's neighbors, if sailing him the day after the lecture. "To all those who were in the hall, we hope, listening this and off the 'Ill formation and seeing those pictures cast on the screen was a great rest for me, but not with considerable gas I be."

"It was a go on smooth talk," admitted the "ow d. ne a guessing time. The I didn't rest me any to speak between hearing to see stockmen whistling to sure to get in a word for the mortal hours and cross my neck looking at those shows. I was pretty tired when I got home."

"But I took the lantern out into the woodshed and in the time I'd spent with Alaska's tidings I felt kind of rested as I calmed down."—Youth's Companion.

Crushing His Ardor.

"They were seated on a bench in central park the other night.

"Suppose, Marguerite," said the young man, in low but passionate tones, to the sweet young thing by his side, "suppose I told you every time I looked at you my head swims, suppose I told you your eyes are deep brown wells, suppose I told you the scent of your hair fairly intoxicates me, suppose telling dreamy I told you you are the sweetest, dearest little angel in all the world. What would you think?"

An answer came out of the darkness clear and cool: "I would think you had a brain storm."

The silence that followed was of the density commonly described as capable of being cut with a knife.

Bound to Be Talked About.

"Mrs. Smith's hair didn't used to be that color," said one at the club. "It used to be yellow, didn't it?"

"Yes, it did," admitted the other. "She changes the color every little while to give people something to say about her. They'd lamore her entirely if she didn't do something to attract attention, she's so insignificant."

The British soldier is to be encouraged to learn stenography. It is to be an elective study for all parts ness which come under the surpless of the Society of Arts. Recently an examination of candidates for the horsehead course was held, and the results are said to be gratifying to the ministry of war.

A MECHANIC-PRIEST.

Cure Mends Motor Cars When Not Engaged in Holy Offices.

Near the northern coast of France, on a route much frequented by motorists, lies the village of Gouisnard. Here a beautiful little church is set high among the trees, with a tower reflecting tranquility in a lake that stands beside the road, and a cemetery lady lighting in reverie. Close by is the home of the priest, and around it is a strange litter of bicycles, motor cycles, automobiles, oil cans and tools, while the open door of an old building reveals on one side a kind of garage, on the other a repair shop. From this building, as the tourist approaches, comes a tall fellow, with the body of an athlete and the head of a scholarly, with brisk gaze and a grizzled beard, a kindly smile, and muscular arms bared in the chilly air to this the cure of Gouisnard or is the village mechanic. He is both. Times are hard, since the law expelling church from state went into effect, and the most live, explains the cure.

At le Cure is no carrier, however. His father was a smith, and he grew up with a passion for tools. When the bicycle came in he became an amateur specialist, and for 15 years he had been mending concerned tires and repairing broken pedals for his flock free of charge. Then came the motor car, with its mysterious life so powerful in its frail carcass. The motor car won the heart of the cure. He loves it, and thinks he understands it. He has even built a car and a motor cycle for himself.

And so the fame of the mechanical cure of Gouisnard has gone abroad throughout all the country, and at last he has decided, without any scruple to make a business of what had formerly been a pastime. He believes in his simple soul that he can be just as good a priest on admonishing the merchants and hear confessions just as well, while he earns his living with his two fingers.—New York Tribune.

PASTIME OF JOCKEYS.

Get Their Enjoyment Out of Humble Sports.

To the casual visitor to the race track around New York, who is quite as much interested in the human spectacle as he is in the race horses themselves, one of the elements that attract his attention is that of the jockeys. Irrevocably racing that it comes as a surprise to one and familiar with their ways to learn that one of the young men threatened to suspend his $25,000 rather if he did not consent to spending his afternoon in that of the jockeys. IGO KILLED GOEBEL.

SUCH IS CHARGE MADE BY INDIANA WITNESS.

Accused Man Now Dead—Alleged Accomplice in Crime Shot Heart of Out Him as Betrayed Him—Long Sheets to Curb Disease.

Turner Ign of Lafayette, Boone County, Ky., is charged with the killing of Governor William Goebel of Kentucky in an affidavit in Mrs. Julia Chenault's saloon in Indianapolis, Ind., on the night of Jan. 30, 1900. Mrs. Chenault's affidavit, which was sworn to in Indianapolis on April 12, 1902, in the law offices of ex-Governor W. S. Taylor of Kentucky, she says that her maiden name was Julia Wilkinson and that she has a cousin named Gertrude Long, who lived at Maysville at the time of the Goebel murder. Miss Long was at that time "keeping company" with John Sanford of Covington, Ky. Long was a friend of Goebel's and the two guys were in Frankfort, Ky. They wanted to open the state house to the use of anyone and were on the steps when Goebel fell. At the same time that Sanford was shot Goebel was in the house where they complained to Sanford. In a moment a second man came rushing out of the building demand "for a moment" and carrying a rifle. He ran to Sanford and said: "I got the man."

The man was Caleb Powers, who, she says, as her friend, Trailer Ign, Herb was one of the men who fled to a town where Sanford gave a part in their affairs in the murder. Powers had been shot in his hidden by them. The man then fled, according to the affidavit. He—the affidavit—says that Caleb Powers drove on to Jan. 31, 1900 (the day after the murder) to Lexington, Ky., and then on to Indianapolis, Ind., where he remained for 10 days in hiding at Mrs. Chenault's.

When the time reached the man he said: "Mrs. Julia, I'm sick." He could not confess his crime, and for a long time he suffered a common ailment. Hitch chances had to be made in the affidavit, which was sworn to in Indianapolis, Ind., on April 12, 1902, by the man herself, in company with Mrs. Chenault.

KIDNAPED BY GYPSIES.

Child Stole Decapes From Dead Mother Four Years' Confining.

The Home of the great South Chicago man with some the freedom which a few years ago lighted a thousand hearts in his home. After four years spent as a child slave of the wandering gypsies Stephen and Walter Cuthie found a safe haven under their parents.

The lad was kidnaped four years ago from South Bend, Ind., where his mother and his stepfather, Frank Cuthie, lived. Some time before he disappeared, a South Chicago woman had warned the boy against the wily and "so, children, beware of Egypt." A month later the mother married Cuthie and went with her husband and lived in South Bend. The couple had just settled on the outskirts of the Indiana city when the child Walter was stolen by a band of gypsies. No attempt to secure a ransom was made, and for a year the gypsies were only a charge to his kidnapers. They in can tought to earn for the leaves and children of the gypsies.

The band subsisted by horse trading and fortune telling and was commanded by the Chief Joseph Chanto. The captive was abused by the gypsy children, who regarded him as a interloper, and was attempt to recount their exactly had to more severe punishment than the other children.

The boy was compelled to sleep and eat with the dogs and was commanded to keep out of sight when visitors came to the camp. He was in a state of constant fear almost as dark as that of his captors, and because he endeavored to show he had forgotten all but a few words of his Chicago home.

Having at last his wandering the lad remembered the good-nature of Sunday School from the school of children. North Chicago in style and which light of the rich and brighter in the side school.

Walter came one day the gypsy band in their wanderings reached the vicinity of Kansas City and the lad decided to a town where Stephen gave a part in their affairs in the murder of Frank Cuthie. The man had his hidden by them. The man then fled, according to the affidavit. He—the affidavit—says that Caleb Powers drove on to Jan. 31, 1900 (the day after the murder) to Lexington, Ky., and then on to Indianapolis, Ind., where he remained for 10 days in hiding at Mrs. Chenault's.

GETS A LIFE TERM.

Chicago Jury Convicts Constantine of Murdering Mrs. Cronin.

Frank J. Constantine was convicted in Chicago Saturday night of murdering Mrs. Arthur Cronin and his sentence fixed at imprisonment for life. After building for two and one-half hours over the fate of the prisoner the jury delivered a finding of guilty, and fixed his punishment after the shortest murder trial in the history of Cook County.

Fonda Wrongs Said: "There was never any doubt as to Constantine's guilt, but owing to the circumstantial evidence the penalty of life imprisonment was agreed upon by the jury."

The verdict, it is reported, was a keen disappointment to those in the courtroom who had followed the course of the trial. They expected a death sentence. Constantine caused gun and said nothing when the verdict was read.

Constantine's story in the witness stand was the most dramatic the most sensational narrative ever recited in the courts in a Chicago court. He uncovered a story into a manifestly weak defense. He swore he did not kill Mr. Cronin. He swore he stood by while she cut her own throat from ear to ear. He swore that she had confided to him her unhappiness that she had begged him to take her away—to go abroad with her: that he had refused; that she slashed herself with a razor. He explained his flight by the fear that he would never be able to prove his innocence—by the panic that seized him when he realized he was all the circumstances pointed against him.

The story was too well rough, but Constantine made a poor impression as a witness. He contradicted himself several times on his direct, seemed greatly ill at ease in answering and was schoolcontradicting. A brilliant, he admitted himself to be, he still possessed from the actions sound that the blood of royalty in his veins.

And thus the curtain is drawn upon a tragedy the like of which Chicago has not circulated in many a year. It was one of such brutality as to shock and awe society. Constantine, almost a member of the Gentry family, who had represented himself to be the son of a millionaire in New York, when as a matter of fact he was a profligate eccentrick, deliberately slashed to death the woman who had left friend the end who had honor him and has his money. Then he fled.

It was a long and persistent hunt. Finally he was captured when about to sail for Italy, the home of his ancestors, where he claims some of them were members of the papal family. Had gone to Italy immediately after the commission of the crime, had been swept to the winds of hitherto and the remorseless—no of ghosts into other lands, and finally muscled by that intangible instinct that belongs to all criminals, had to return to the country of his crime.

Finding the police determined to take him, that the memory of that tragic January day had not been forgotten, fearful lest he be apprehended and brought back to the bar of justice, he was about to sail away again, when he was arrested.

Brought to trial in an effort to gain his liberty, he defamed the character of his victim, a bride of six months.

MILLIONS ARE SAVED.

Federal Scientists Do Not Patent Their Inventions.

Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture gave out the statement recently that millions of dollars are saved each year by scientists in the employ of the United States government. This for alone, he maintains, should show the public the value of the experiments now conducted each day. If the scientists succeeded their inventions, they might become wealthy, but all they get for their reward is the passing fame attained by reporting valuable facts.

Among the patents which have accrued without attention are in relation to the blighting of fruit nuts that have passed government inventions, the use of fertilizers made by fertilizers and the preparation of tannin and fiber wire and roofing of iron and steel generally.

Secretary Wilson estimated that the discovery of an ink which may be used in stamping currency and which will not stain, spread or penetrate the mark, will in itself save the government between $500,000 and $600,000 next year.

LABOR TROUBLES.

What Secretary Straus Has to Say on Important Subject.

Oscar S. Straus, Secretary of Commerce and Labor, has nothing to say concerning the status of the Independent strike, but in a letter to Mr. Straus, Mr. Mitchell plainly as not regards compulsory arbitration as the solution of difficulties between capital and labor. He believes that differences cause regular difficulties, and that there is no land and fast rule by which differences that arise between capital and labor can be adjudicated.

OSCAR S. STRAUS.

"The importance of establishing good relations between capital and labor," he says, "is recognized in all civilized lands. Economic conditions within a country, especially such as arise between industrial bodies, have a far reaching effect and are often the cause of embarrassing international relations. Much good has resulted from the efforts in this world arise from misunderstandings. Especially is that true when classes are concerned, such as are brought about through labor disputes causing out of disagreements between employers and wage earners. No one has recognized the importance of promoting industrial peace, both with a view of preventing continued losses at home and avoiding conflicts abroad, better than

WAR VETERANS CELEBRATE.

Only 520 of Gen. Scott's Mexican War Soldiers Are Still Alive.

There are in the ranks country just 520 veterans of the Mexican war, and these men celebrated the sixteenth anniversary of the fall of the City of Mexico in San Francisco. On that occasion the primeval warriors recalled the tragedies of the war, which was the sixth portion of her territory.

Major Edwin A. Sherman of Oakland, Cal., is the president of the veterans' association. The speaker of the Mexican war Major Sherman said:

"Gen. Winfield Scott, the American commander, fought and won the battles of Contreras, Churubusco, El Molino de

By the treaty that closed the Mexican war, a territory over 700 miles north and south and 900 miles east and west, or 530,000 square miles, were ceded to the United States, California, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico were added to what then was the United States, and Texas, which had been a British province, by sale for $50,000,000 to pay the Mexican debt.

"For these reasons as well as others the 520 survivors of the Mexican war celebrate the sixteenth anniversary of the treaty of our arms decided by our ancestors general, Winfield Scott, our, by which we fought and achieved such glorious results."

Candy and Alcohol.

Dr. A. C. Abbott, health commissioner of Pennsylvania, has advanced the theory that "the appetite for alcohol and the appetite for candy are fundamentally the same, the choice of one or the other being determined by the temperament of the individual." In support of this, the last is cited that there has been a falling off in the amount of alcohol consumed in the states during the past years, and a natural increase in the consumption of sugar in its various forms. It is further stated that chemically sugar and alcohol are similar, and their physiological action is in part, the same, and both in some extent supply the demand for a concentrated and quick acting fuel for the body. Much of the prejudice which formerly existed against the use of candy has disappeared, and it is now used, especially in the form of chocolate, by enlisted bodies men, and even by soldiers on the race of battle.

Life on Mars Confirmed.

Prof. Percival Lowell of Harvard, in a communication to Science, which is the scientific publication, declares that the observations made during the recent opposition of the planet Mars tends to establish the fact that the planet is at present the abode of intelligent constructive life. Sometime ago the observatory of the polar caps, which were begun three months and a half after the opposition, and were made possible to catch the south polar cap of Mars, disappeared, and it was the unknown event. Prof. Lowell is actively at work, and he has observed the next of the canal system in the earnest to and south temperate zone.

He was in as a direct conclusion from this that the planet is at present the abode of intelligent beings. He adds that the theory of such life was not on a project hypothesis on his part, but was the result of observations now fully confirmed, on the photographs taken already he has counted fifty-six canals, and it appears any certain that the position of points of the Martian topography are the realized. Three of the photographs are published in Nature and show the canals hitherto unknown to European astronomers.

AT PANAMA.

Work Progressing on the Big Dam and Water Main Canyon.

The work on the locks and dams at Panama has taken such shape that it may be possible to say something of their form. It is believed that the actual masonry work can be commenced at the Gatun locks within eighteen months. Four steam shovels are now digging out the sites for the locks, and construction can be begun after the excavation for the foundation of the flight is completed. Two steam shovels are preparing the site for the erection of the spillway, and the dam of Gatun dam. Railroad tracks are being erected across the line that will mark the inside and outside boundaries of the big dam, and from one of these dirt trains they are dumping dirt upon the site of the dam.

Preparatory to the installation of pipeline strainers, by which more rapid work on the dam will be possible, the Chagres River has been diverted from its main channel and dammed. The pipeline will be completed by the end of January 1, when the work of Gatun will be as actively in progress as that at Culebra. Preparations are made for the big masonry locks have been begun and, what is more interesting to the engineers, material for the manufacture of all the necessary cement has been found in the Culebra. It is hoped, however, that cement can be secured for such a price that the United States is to invest more satisfactorily present the needed supply there instead of manufacturing it on the isthmus.

The general features, designs and details of the Panama and other locks have been worked out, together with the general type and number of gates to be used. The survey of all the country to be controlled into the great reservoir has been completed and further work will begin this year with the 17 square miles.

Cost of Living in Ohio.

A summary of the report just out in Ohio shows that the average wages of Ohio, as which Charles P. Neill is the head, covering the year 1901, show the 20 cents of food were generally higher during each month of that year than in the corresponding month of 1900. Wyoming, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico were added to what was then the United States, and Texas, which had been a British province, by sale for $50,000,000 to pay the Mexican debt.

"For these reasons as well as others the 520 survivors of the Mexican war celebrate the sixteenth anniversary of the treaty of our arms decided by our ancestors general, Winfield Scott, our, by which we fought and achieved such glorious results."

Political Comment.

Tariff Revisions.

Unless all signs fail, the Hughes tariff of 1897 will remain in force until then the famous McKinley tariff of 1898. The leaders of the party in power have no intention of revising the tariff during the coming session of Congress. Should unforeseen circumstances not force them to change this purpose, the present law will survive till after the presidential election in 1908. This will make it eleven years old. The Walker tariff remained in operation eleven years. It is quite improbable that congress will undertake to revise the present tariff until the end of the year 1908. Should the work of Gatun and completed that the 13th could and be some a few years sooner than 1910.

There have been no signs that party leaders have changed their views materially from those of last session. Some of the leaders have gained several pounds in flesh and changed some minor details of their tariff plans, but the general outline remains. Sometimes they have added a few more or less of protected industries, but always maintaining the protective principle. When the Democratic party in power it was a general rule to lay down on duties and an elimination of all protection for fear of raising the ire of Which did Mr. Bryan or any other Democratic party leader say a word for protection?

Beyond any doubt the next Republican platform will speak with pride of the great success in all respects of the tariff of 1897. It is practically the same have more than realized all that was expected by the men who adopted it. As far as revenue is concerned the only Democratic Congress in office since the passage of the law, in general expansion of industry, no demand for the history of the government, or of any government, can be compared with the period of the present tariff. Of course, it is contended by the opponents of that, party that the prosperity of the country was due to the prudence, economy and wisdom of the Democratic Congress, which gave to the country a revenue tariff a small emphatic and enthusiastic endorsement, that refer to such modest, and, it may be added, timid, tariff as a matter for serious partial consideration. Even at that time, there is no majority of time, and that from time to time the tariff was not expanded.

Since the passage of the Dingley law was temporarily modified in one item, the Republican party has been compelled to revise to know how honest Democrats, therefore, are on this subject. During the great tariff revision, when Democrats are on this subject. During the great tariff revision, when Democrats are on this subject. During the great tariff revision, when Democrats

NEW LAWS.

Statutes Covering Various Subjects that are Now Operative.

A large number of laws passed by the legislature which were not given immediate effect became operative on Saturday, September 28. The most important, probably, are the resident fare law, the railway commission act, the law prohibiting bucket shops and the one regulating loan agents and pawn shops.

All the railroads of the state, as far as can be learned here, will conform to the new two-cent fare law, and have prepared new tariffs in order to give it effect. While in some localities its effects will not be apparent, in others it will result in a notable decrease in passenger rates. As an illustration, the fare from Lansing to Detroit, which has been 84 cts., will be reduced to $1.44, a similar reduction will be noticeable between most of the larger towns of the state.

The railway commission act will be given effect as soon as Governor Warner shall appoint the new commissioners and an organization has been effected. It is expected that the commission will be able to greatly benefit shippers under the provisions of the new law.

Other important laws which will take effect on Saturday are as follows.

To provide for the compulsory education of deaf children.

To regulate the carrying on of business under an assumed or fictitious name.

To provide for the assessment of money taxes for highway purposes.

Requiring corn buskers to be protected by an automatic feeder or other safety device.

To prevent the desertion, and abandonment of wife or children by persons charged by law with the maintenance thereof, to make such abandonment a felony; to provide for the care of the dependent wife and children and to repeal Act 39 of 1903.

To prohibit the free distribution of medicines.

Authorizing boards of supervisors to purchase and direct the use of voting machines in the several precincts of the county and to pay for same out of the general fund of the county.

Amending an act relative to the inspection of manufacturing establishment, etc., as to the employment of children under the age of 14 years.

Amending act to revise the laws for the protection of game and birds, relative to the open season for wild water fowl.

To provide a bounty for the killing of English sparrows.

Amending act relative to the fees of grand and petit jurors.

Act relative to the width of public highways and encroachments thereon and the setting of poles along such highways.

Act to license the use of firearms in hunting game birds and animals applicable to non-residents.

Amending an act for the protection of fish, making it unlawful to catch or capture for the purpose of sale brook trout, grayling, large and small mouth black bass and white bass.

To provide punishment for wife desertion in certain cases.

To prescribe the terms and conditions on which foreign corporations may be permitted to do business in Michigan.

Relative to the qualifications of jurors in justice or police courts.

Relative to execution of liquor bonds by surety companies.

Act to provide for the laying out of temporary highways.

Act to regulate and license pawnbrokers and loan agents.

Act to prohibit the maintaining of bucket shops.

Act relative to chattel loans, applicable to cities of over 20,000 inhabitants.

Act No. 178, relative to the sale of gasoline and benzine will be in effect November 1, 1907.

Out of Sight.

"Out of sight, out of mind," is an old saying which applies with special force to a sore, burn or wound that has been treated with Bucklen's Arnica Salve. 25c out of sight, out of mind and out of existence. Pike Inn and Hitchkiss Drugstore, Gifts for holiday influence. Guaranteed by F. G. Hinze & Co. Druggist, Etc.

"No Put-Up Office."

And now Traverse City wants to absorb all the rest of creation, not already absorbed, and establish an annual fair for the entire Grand Traverse region—to be held at Traverse City, of course. The first recommendation is in the direction of Leelanau county, which is already practically the Egypt of Traverse City, and Editor Campbell of Northport opens like a stuck pig. Of course there is nothing south of Traverse City, outside of its own county, that raises anything but shoal, and our neighbors at the head of the bay are casting their eyes northward.

The famous Grand Traverse Pentasmia pays tribute to Traverse City, and always will, solely for the reason that it is Hobson's choice. It has "the general coffers filled" at the head of the bay for many, many years, and the stream of golden dancats cannot be diverted.

But Antrim county lies across the limpid waters of East Bay, and Tom Bates' town has since made the "walk" from the Mecca of the south end of it, commercially and politically.

And now comes the electric railroad project, with a whole cyclopedia of meaning in the proposition. It is a proposition that every good citizen between Traverse City and Charlevoix should encourage and assist to the limit of his ability. The road will be built, sooner or later, and we think the day is not far distant.

But—

When the Czar built the Siberian railroad from Moscow to Vladivostock, it was for the extension of the empire. But it cut the empire in twain and nearly sealed the doom of the Romanoffs. The St. Petersburg of the Grand Traverse region is at the head of the bay. It will doubtless always be the chief metropolis of this favored region. We love old Traverse City, because, as a boy we were there launched into the troubled sea of journalism. We shall not long remain, and we prophesy.

There will be another metropolis at the northern boundary of the region, and its name will be Charlevoix. In the extension of the Michigan Central from the eastward Traverse City has nothing in common with us, only that it will give the electric shore road project more backbone, in that it will give the latter direct eastern connection for local traffic. Therefore, in the light of these probabilities, it need not be considered a secret that Charlevoix will at least meet Traverse City half way in reaching out for "spheres of influence."

With the Michigan Central which is certain, and the electric shore road, which is now probable, Charlevoix will be in a position to contest for honors with its bay neighbor.

A Great Lecture Course.

The citizens of Charlevoix are to be congratulated on the quality of the attractions which have been engaged for the Lecture Association's five number. The Royal Hungarian Orchestra, is worth the price of the season ticket. The Company is composed of eight men, all of the artists in their line of work. Louis Lipsky, the conductor, is one of the ablest violins in his country, and Mr. Nicholas Molnar, the cymbal soloist, is a marvel. No one should miss this superb attraction. Dr. Geo. E. Vincent, of Chicago University is one of the most brilliant and fascinating lecturers in this country. Many people who consider lectures dull are delighted with his lecture as an entertainment. He has the power of putting important truth in such a form as to entertain as well as instruct. Those who enjoy a humorous lecture will not be disappointed in Ralph Bingham. Monroe Markley gives his hearers a popular lecture, W. B. Millard, of Ireland, Ill., says that he never heard anyone captivate all the people the way Dr. Marley does. The final number of the Course is another feature that is worth the price of the course ticket. Leland T. Powers is recognized as the most talented impersonator in the world. No other impersonator claims to be his equal. His rendering of David Copperfield, David Garrick, or of Lord Chesbley furnishes an evening of such delight as never to be forgotten. Such an array of talent has never been presented in Charlevoix before. It is the belief of the managers of the course that the people of Charlevoix appreciate our best talent and at large expense they were purchased a course that is unexcelled in the state. Tickets are on sale at the drug store and at both banks at $1.50 for the entire course. Single admission 50c except the entertainment by Mr. Powers for which single tickets will be sold at 75 cents.

The sale of course tickets will be limited to 450. Positively the sale will stop when that number is reached. As that is not a large number for a place of the size of Charlevoix, it is expected the sale will not last long.

HAD NOT FOUND HAPPINESS.

Therefore Workman Returned to Benefactor with Another Request.

A man of extreme wealth, tired of taking care of his money, went to a secluded spot on a river bridge and jumped off. He was not aware that lifesavers always frequent secluded spots, and that the best place to commit suicide is on Broadway, at noon. And, sure enough, a poor workman leaped in after him and pulled him out, cold and shivering.

As he stood there, dripping, it occurred to the wealthy man that what he had needed was not eternity, but just a cold bath. And he waxed grateful.

"I am rich beyond telling," he said, "I will grant you any wish—will make real your wildest hopes."

The poor workman replied instantly: "Then give me $1,000,000."

"A million dollars?" sneered he whose life had been saved. "That is the easiest thing in the world. But stop a moment—consider. It was money that made me try to kill myself. You had better go slow."

"A million dollars," repeated the poor workman stoutly.

"Very well, you shall have it. But since you have saved my life, I will make this further offer: If at the end of three years you are not satisfied with your bargain, come to me, and I will do whatever you wish."

Three years passed, and the former poor workman came to his benefactor's door.

"Aha, I thought so!" exclaimed the man of great wealth. "I knew you would come back. You know now how little sure money means. Now, what can I do for you?"

"Aha! I have found how little happiness can be got with a million," was the sad reply.

"Aha, I knew it!" exclaimed the man of extreme wealth. "And since you have found how little happiness can be got with $1,000,000 what will you have me do for you next?"

"Give me another million," replied the former poor workman.—Judge.

A Question of Privilege.

A well-known Harvard professor was one day traveling by trolley from Cambridge to Boston, when he desired to call upon a friend. He asked the conductor to transfer him to the city card at a certain point.

Soon afterward the car stopped and the Harvard man, on looking out of the window, was surprised to see the very friend he was seeking. He started to leave the car, but the conductor stopped him.

"You can't change here," he said brusquely.

The professor passed him, making no response.

"You can't change here, I tell you," persisted the conductor.

By this time the professor was on the rear step. "Here, you old jay!" exclaimed the conductor, "haven't I told you that you can't change here?"

At this the good man flushed. "Well, I can change my mind here, can't I?"—Lippincott's Magazine.

America's Babel.

This upper corner of Michigan is a show ground of the people of 20 nations at work, side by side in peace and comfort. The native-born is outnumbered as a basis of one American to 100 foreigners.

The Cornwall and Finnish miners lead in numbers, followed by the Irish, Scotch, Welsh, German, Dutch, French, Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, Colonizers, Russians, Hollanders, Greek, Swiss, Austrian, Italians, Negroes, Slavs, Bohemians, with a scattering about ground of Chinese, Arabians, Persians and one family of Lapanders.

There is an amazing medley of races, to which the American seems fairly innocuous. Among the local newspapers are the Weekly Gleaner, the Daily Pathfinder, the American Scimeter, and La Sentinelli.

Even the leading American newspaper publishes for the benefit of its subscribers a daily column in the dialect of Cornwall—Outing.

Queer Dock Titles.

"These old books," said the antiquary, as he pointed to a dingy upper shelf, "are curious for their titles.

"Here is a volume of sermons printed in Salem in 1792. Sermons in these is its scornful name.

"Here is a book dated 1743 that is called 'Look to It, or I'll Stain Ye.' It is a treatise on polygamy.

"This is a pamphlet by a spinster against the young men of the seventeenth century. Its title is 'A Description on the Pirtiness of Our Youth in General, Especially Such as Are Trained Up at Tea Tables.'

"A return blast to that dissertation is this other pamphlet of the same year—'Quipes for Upstart New Fangled Gentlewomen, or, a Glass to View the Pride of Vainglorious Women.'"

On the Links.

Bunker—Miss Woodby is so eccentric in her golf playing since her return from Paris.

Miss Niblock—Is she, really?

Bunker—Yes. Indeed. When she foozles now, she invariably exclaims, "Hot mon Dieu!"—Bradley.

Boldness as a Success Factor.

There is something about boldness which sometimes borders on naturally that commands respect, if it is based upon real resourcefulness, a consciousness of power, and not upon egotism. There is something sublime about a strong man who can neither be cajoled, rattled nor stampeded—Orison Swett Marden in "Success Magazine."

Hand Weaving by Cripples.

Consul Albert Halstead reports that a number of charitable people in Birmingham about five years ago started a small handloom factory to provide a useful and remunerative employment for crippled girls. Many of the delicate fabrics are artistically hand woven in silk, crape and flax, and the results are most attractive. The product of the factory, which is also a school to hand weaving, is acquiring a reputation for artistic merit and quality, and the enterprise is now paying its way. It seems to the consul as if this Birmingham charity should be of interest to people in the United States who desire to help in making cripples self-supporting and at the same time in procuring textiles of an attractive kind.

Bats in Belfries.

"Bats in belfries are a frightful nuisance," said a young clergyman "in the belfry of dear old Saint Jude's they are so thick at times, and I don't know how they do get in—they must eat the cobwebs, you know, the community cloths, the vestments, the incense, the mullions, and they even drink the consecrated wine. Strange it is to think of bats doing that, isn't it? A strange bat diet, truly—sandwiches, canapes, chopped vestments and holy wine. I have tried to smoke out the pests by burning sulphur, but they appear rather to like those fumes. For a sure way to rid my belfry of its bats I'd gladly give two dollars."

Letter to Mr. H. S. Hanlon.

Charlemoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: Mr. N. Avery, Delhi, N. Y., had two horses exactly alike, and painted them: one Devoe lead and zinc; the other barytes and zinc. He paid same price for both paints.

He used six gallons of lead and zinc, 12 gallons barytes and zinc.

He paid $25 for painting lead and zinc, $20 for painting barytes and zinc.

The total cost of the lead-and-zinc job was $27; the total cost of the barytes and zinc job was $24.

He didn't know he was buying barytes; the dealer told him that paint was as good as Devoe.

A fair example of how it generally comes out, when you buy "something just as good." Better go by the name; the name and the name is Devoe.

—Mrs. Geo. F. Brown and daughter Jessie left Saturday for Tampa Fla. They expect to spend two months at Atlanta, and then proceed to their winter home at Daytona, Fla.

—Mrs. Fred Cox, of Toronto, and Mrs. D. M. Perry of Woodstock, Ont., notice and sister respectively of Mrs. H. P. Dorkins have been guests at the Parmelee home the past week.

—The SENTINEL has orders in the type foundry for another good increase in its job department equipment. It is the purpose of this office to keep its job outfit fully up to date in all respects.

—Ex Governor Joseph Fifer, of Illinois, one of our most distinguished summer residents, likes it so well here that he delayed his departure for home until last Sunday,—leaving on the Missouri.

—The real estate agency of D. N. Gregory last week effected the sale of John Hitchcock's farm near Hesbine, to Jos. Reid. Mr. Miller takes the Reid house and lot on the south terrace as part of the consideration.

—Mr. N. Follett, Fabiet, who has so long managed the Chicago Club in this city, has leased the winter Hotel La Plaza, at Zaal's Ville, Fla., and has gone there. Mr. Fabiet will return to the Chicago Club next summer.

—And now the potato harvest begins. The always necessary but not always profitable potato promises this year to be reasonably lucrative. Indications are that tubers will not go below forty cents, and the price may reach fifty. We still hold to the opinion that one year with another, potatoes are a profitable crop for this section. Potatoes at 25 cents are fairly profitable, with a good year. The forty and fifty cents years come often, and when they do, the crop is rather.

—Chas. Moody, of Pellston, was in town over Sunday.

—"East Lynne" at Charlevoix Theatre Friday evening, Oct. 11. A great event.

—Dr. E. A. Stripp went to Detroit this morning to witness the championship ball game.

—Mrs. Orson Burlingame of Boyne City, has been the guest of Mrs. W. A. Smith this week.

—Mr. and Mrs. Bloomfield of Iowa with Mrs. Madison of East Jordan were guests of Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Madison Wednesday.

—The SENTINEL erred last week as to the date of the meeting of the board of supervisors. The date is Oct. 14th—next Monday.

—The annual Marion plowing match will come at Marion Center, near the grange hall, Oct. 17th. The usual prizes are offered, and the event promises to be a success.

—Capt. Geo. A. White, of New York, visited his sister, Mrs. F. J. Meech, a few days last week. Capt. White is general manager of the Hudson River day line of steamers.

—The steamer Gordon navting tug, Capt. B. J. Gellick has accepted a berth as first mate on a steel trunk boat, for the balance of the season and left for Conneaut, Ohio yesterday.

—I. T. Sullberg, with two assistants, is doing a fine work's job of repainting the lighthouse property on the north pier. The work embraces repairs on the beacon, the elevated walk, and railway 7-8 pier.

—The new $2,000 boiler for the tug Parmelee is here, and Ed Stafford has the job of placing it. The boiler and rebuild will cost the owner $1,500. When the Parmelee goes into the water again, she will be practically a new boat.

—Next week will mark the beginning of the sugar beet harvest—if it don't rain. The crop, where properly cared for, is satisfactory to the sugar factory people, and should be the source of a good big bunch of money for the farmers.

—Judge Mayne is holding court in Ionia this week.

—Masonic school of instruction at Masonic hall, afternoon and evening of October 18th.

—E. B. Ward went to Grand Rapids this morning to attend a meeting of State grange deputies.

—It turns out that the schooner Aldrich spoken of in these columns, turned up all right at Harbor, some the worse for wear.

—Geo. H. Van Pelt writes us that Mrs. Van Pelt and daughter Mary will arrive in New York from Europe Saturday of this week. Mr. Van Pelt will meet them in New York. The W. C. T. U. will meet with Mrs. Maggie Arnold, on Dixon avenue, Friday afternoon Oct. 11th. Topic, "The Mother's Hope the Home." Leader, R. A. Wright will talk on the subject. Other readings All welcome.

—This is the time of year that the grocery men's shoot will be coming to him. It is especially true in our close business of the necessary enlargement and improvement of our "grocery shop." Therefore, kindly call in or count, and save us the trouble of sending statements.

—Last Saturday evening at 5 o'clock a very pretty wedding occured at the home of the bride's mother Mrs. W. J. McGeagh, on Antrim street for Sunday evening, Rev. H. B. Wilkinson of Chalmersburg, Tenn. officiating. The contracting parties were Mr. Frank B. Brown of Norwood, and Mrs. Lillian Chaver of Charlevoix, both well known and highly respected. They have the good wishes of a large circle of friends.

—Every one has seen "East Lynne." It's a story that never grows old. Raymond & Doree's Company has produced this play for four successive seasons, and by conscientious study and constant rehearsal are able to give a presentation of this immortal drama as true to nature as though the action of the play were a reality of every day life rather than a portrayal of characters in fiction at the Charlevoix Theatre Friday night Oct. 11, '07.

—For seven days, beginning October 12, every piece of mail that goes through the local postoffice will be counted and the revenue therefrom computed, the whole being put in a blank prepared for that purpose and forwarded to the postoffice department. This is in addition to the weighing of the mail which has been going on since July 1. This order means that every letter, every postal card, every newspaper, every package, every official letter, in fact everything that goes through the office must be counted.

—In a letter from Rev. Dr. Putnam, who is in Hillsdale, that popular and able pastor says. "We find that all the Methodists and southern portions of the State, have been much more severe than in the north" (Of course, Doctor, of course. We have been telling them so for years, for many years, but people down that way have a way of thinking that this is the place where Warner Wallman is located for the north pole ski ship expedition. It is always so, Doctor. The maximum low temperature here last winter was twelve degrees, and nothing can lower it, but the presence of Vice President Fairbanks.

—Miss Rose Taylor who plays "Lady Isabelle" in the Raymond & Doree "East Lynne" Friday night, wears more diamonds than any living actress, they are her hobby. Her entire collection of precious stones will be on exhibition in the display window of the Ivy Drug store between the hours 3 and 5 p. m. on the day of the performance. The Company's famous famous Zouave band will give two street concerts, at 12 noon and 7:30 p. m. Their own orchestra plays for the production. Note this and be strictly free class and have a production of this grand old drama that will please every one. Heather the date.

—Two Charlevoix freshmen at Ann Arbor, Frank Campbell and Mason Hose, report high "juks" in the freshman and sophmore class rushes. The freshmen advertised their declaration of war by posters, and the sophs did likewise. Hose was caught by a bunch of sophs, and when they got through with him his hair was plastered with molasses and flour. Campbell was caught pulling down sophs posters, and was covered with paste and plastered with posters from head to foot. Frank writes that the term this far has been strenuous—he has proposed to two girls and climbed sixteen trees. Lee Scroggie, later a freshman, got his down to good shape also.

—Mrs. F. A. Hatfield is in Saginaw this week as a delegate to the Grand Chapter O. E. S.

—Geo. D. Smith and wife, left Monday for the south. They will spend the winter in Tennessee and Georgia.

—The war on rice throwing and chalivaris, as adjuncts of wedding ceremonies, begun by a good priest at Harbor, and approved by Archbishop Messmer, grows apace. The latest warrior to enter himself on the side of common sense and decency is a Sheboygan, Wis., priest, and it is to be hoped that his example may help others to see the light and give this timely movement their assistance. The very best than can be said of the rice throwing, this throwing and charivari accessories of present-day weddings is that they are a last remnants of a barbarous age, and yet modern society stops to mess with a toughness that beggars description and admits of neither excuse nor explanation.

Approaching Another Milestone.

This issue of the SENTINEL marks about the middle of the ninety-ninth year of its existence. Almost forty years! It is a great age for time to run on and yet we reckon years, yet to be left a day.

Good, bad or indifferent the SENTINEL is a permanent fixity here in Charlevoix. It was born with Charlevoix as a town, and as matter what befalls the men who guide it, the SENTINEL will go on, doubtless forever. What chance of Charlevoix would have it otherwise?

Had the SENTINEL been bad, or even indifferently good, it would not be here today; for it has weathered more storms, climbed more steep hills and traversed more dark valleys than any newspaper published in Northern Michigan today, and the men are not yet dead who stepped with it, side by side, in times that tried men's souls.

The present publisher may easily be mistaken, and he may not. But whether he does or not the SENTINEL will reach it, and look ahead toward another. What of Charlevoix would have it otherwise?

But sentiment alone avails little in this practical age. The SENTINEL has not always pleased everybody, and we are glad of it. If it had, the great world long since have been growing over its grave because it would have been a milksoppish weakling—an abortion. It has been, if not brilliant, at least consistent. It has at least, had the courage of its convictions.

We believe the SENTINEL has yet to earned the loyal support of the Charlevoix people. We believe it will receive it in the future as in the past, with men who may come or go.

File of Norwood

The store of Chas. H. Ferguson, at Norwood, was destroyed by fire, together with all its contents, at eight o'clock Tuesday morning. Partially insured.

The fire is supposed to have caught from the stove, while the clerk was at dinnertime.

O. E. S. Election.

At the last meeting of Charlevoix Chapter Eastern Star, the following officers were installed: W. M., Mrs. F. A. Potter; W. P., Chas. E. See; Asst. M., Mrs. H. W. Bates; conductress, Mrs. L. Giddings; assistant conductress, Mrs. Ella Bennett; treasurer, Mrs. F. G. Hinze; secretary, Mrs. A. F. Young.

The Largest Pile.

The largest wooden pile in the world is to be found at Chehopeak, Va. It measures 1,000 feet long, 750 feet wide, 9,000 feet in circumference, ranges from 20 to 30 feet in height, and covers twelve acres of ground. It is the accumulation of one lumber company since 1877. Early in its history the company tried to burn the pile, but the outside only would burn, the inside refusing to penetrate the closely packed interior. Since then chemical one have arisen by which the end, and the huge pile increases year by year, providing coke also into charcoal, ethyl, alcohol or wood tars, the latter refining to further the market is found as bright as the day it was placed there.

WHAT'S BROKE LOOSE?

Question Asked in Regard to Record Convictions of Fishermen.

For several days past there have been announcements of convictions of men from Detroit for violations of the game and fish laws, the one lately making the eighth. In reply Justice Krieger informs the Evening News that there has been much illegal fishing done along the shore of the straits, which C. N. Smith of East Tawas, deputy state game warden, and J. B. Eddy of the Soo, general state deputy game warden, have resolved to break up. Their investigations have developed that tons of undersized fish have been taken by men in that vicinity, some having been captured by the officers when an attempt was made to sell them at the Booth Company's packing house and others taken in boxes in which the little fish had been salted down and were to be marketed in that form. The owners had the cases brought to this city in order to get the men away from any local prejudice that might naturally arise when so many arrests were to be made. The eight cases were tried before Justice Krieger, resulting in conviction for each and the fines amounting to $100 and the costs to $109.50, so far, and that is not all. The officers are determined to do their duty and will camp on the trail of any and all offenders of the law which they are bound to enforce.

Historical Society.

The Historical Society began its year's work with its annual meeting at Mayor Greens' last Tuesday night. A large number of members listened to a very able paper on "The important events of the last five months" by Hon. I. T. Merriam, and the regular annual business of the society was transacted.

The Executive Committee had ready a Year Book of 1907-1908. With program for all the meetings of the year, besides the constitution and bylaws. The society was organized 18 years ago this fall, the same year the village of Charlevoix was incorporated, and has had in all 400 members, of which number 40 have passed on to the great society above, and 108 have removed from town or dropped out of the society, leaving at present 252 active members with 48 dues paid and $313.17 in the treasury. They also have 200 fine reference books in the Historical library in Mayor Green's office.

On account of the large membership the society voted two important by-laws changes. First the dues were raised from 25c to 50c per year, to provide for the issuance of a Year Book each year, and 2nd the attendance was absolutely limited to the membership of the society, excepting out of town friends and a limited number of invitations to be obtained from the Executive Committee. This was necessary as the Society meets at the homes of its members and there are no homes in Charlevoix capable of seating many more than 100.

The next meeting of the Society will be held this week Friday evening with George and Annie McCartney. Mr. F. H. Hubbard has the Current Events, Mrs. John Hunn a Reading, and Miss Mary Jones take Prof. Edes' place in a map study of The Orient China, Japan and the Phillipines, which are the subjects of this year's study. The program, is this year entirely confined to the membership of the Society, with no lack of good material, and the society generally will never in a more flourishing condition.

East Jordan Enterprise: The East Jordan Furnace Co. which is putting in the big iron furnace plant for the production of charcoal iron at this place, have purchased a fine plant that is now being gotten ready for shipment to set up here. It will require from fifty to sixty cars to transport the material from Maryland here. Meanwhile the work of grading the grounds and preparing the shore for the necessary dock work is in progress here.

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.)

"Ah, good morning. You are Jessie's governess, I presume; she and Jessie are distantly, and pretending not to notice the loud whisk Middy immediately extended toward her. 'Jessie speaks well of you, and I am very glad you will be with her. You look a pleasant lady, I think!' Here Middy was so full and her manner so serious that Middy's sense of the ludicrous which often, not to say always, overcame her in all quiet ways, was entirely lost in her wonder and astonishment. Middy was not a bad looking girl, but she was very unlike her father, Mr. Alfred, if she resembled her face as white as a lily and quiet, she could be very quiet when she chose, and in her dress and manner there was a certain air of refinement and aristocracy about her which Middy always admired. I don't remember exactly what I did say to this Clyde girl, but I thought it would be pleasanter for her, governess or no, if she was to have her always around, if I made Middy my friend, so I said, such as I did, and I guess I did pretty well, for I made Middy my friend, or rather, I made her like me, and Mr. Clyde, too, I think, for the first time in my life I felt that I was pretty, because he was kind to grandma and to me when I was sick. Yes, I did like Clyde at."

"And how is it now?" Guy asked, wondering who in the world she thought was. "How is it now?"

"I guess it's wicked to find such things out, Sunday, but, sometimes, what she said keeps making me think of what I know I have her, and I guess I hate Mr. Clyde."

This was Middy's answer, spoken deliberately, while she looked up at the young man, who, with a troubled expression about his mouth, replied:

"I am like Mr. Clyde."

"Yes, you do. I can't tell why I will do." and Middy sprang up as quick as as if feeling an electrical shock.

"Mr. Clyde's eyes were always in your lap, and Guy's eyes half her back, which he asked her where she was going.

"Anywhere out of sight where my eyes never see you, I hate you, I hate you, I hate you!" Middy had reached the door, and her father's voice was heard in the hall, when she paused one moment to say, what do you think of me, Guy?"

"Nothing, but I love you, Middy, and will bother you when I can, but I shall be busy for a time, and I shall be away from home, perhaps for some time. Do you think I love Jessie? I am fond of her, but I love you, Middy, and I want you to be treated other than a stranger by my father. I am sure he will be kind to you, you and your mother, if you thought I sometimes spoke of you, and I shall be right, I think, Middy, I do love, and that is the intention I have had that you were to be treated other than a lady. I am sorry for Aikenside, but Mr. Agnes, who shall be made to understand it."

"Oh, please don't quarrel about me. Let me go home, and then I will be well." Middy cried, frightened at the prospect, more drawn to saving Aikenside than she very much; more indeed than any person I ever knew him to have," and Guy's eyes glanced curiously at Middy to witness the effect his words might have upon her. But Middy merely answered:

"Yes, I think he does like me, and I know I like him."

Mentally chiding himself for trying to find in Middy's head an idea which evidently never was there, he began to speak of her proposition to leave, saying he should not suffer it, Jessie needed her and she must stay. She was not to mind the disagreeable things Mrs. Remington had said. Then, as he ere signs of yielding in Middy's face, he continued:

"How would you like to turn scholar for a short time each day, I being your teacher? Time often hangs heavily upon my hands, and I fancy the novelty of the thing would suit me. I have books I will appoint your lessons and the hour for recitation."

Guy's face was scarlet by the time he had finished speaking, for suddenly he remembered to have heard or read of a similar instance which resulted in the marriage of the teacher and pupil; he knew that, it would subject him to so much remark, when it was known that he, the fashionable and fastidious Guy, was teaching a pretty, attractive girl like Middy Clyde, and he sincerely hoped the school would decline the offer Middy had made upon impulse. With her beautiful eyes full of tears, which show like diamonds, as she lifted them to Guy's face, she said:

"Oh, I thank you so much. You could not make me happier, and I'll try so hard to be a good scholar. They don't teach such things at the district school, and when there was a high school in Hoosdale I could not go, for it was three dollars a quarter Uncle Joseph needed help, and so I stayed at home. When may I begin?"

"As soon as I am rested from my journey, or sooner, if you like, and I hope you will, please, when in this Eden Jessie and I are alone."

"Uncle Joseph is grandma's youngest brother," Middy answered, "and he has been in the asylum for years. As long as he has little property leased, and has been paid, but now they keep him from charity, only grandma helps all he can, and buys some little new things which he wants so badly, and sometimes gives him a dollar. I joked terribly at first, but I guess I'm sorry for him, and I'm glad I can do something for him."

"Yes," Guy said, and he thought of the poor, pale face, which was so different from the rosy one he had seen in the asylum, and he resolved that the dinning, passed on each side of it, and came together again, forming, but the only disturbed one.

Two Months' Absence.

"But, my poor man," said the kind hostess, who had given the Tramp some stimulant and a stamp in write friends in the East, "why do you state it our delivered return after a 'Dear Brother' Sunday, it wasn't take state days for the letter to journey to New York?"

"The Tramp smiled.

"No, indeed," he confided, "it couldn't take more days to get to New York, but I will be shaky this a because I am be able to receive it. You see, mam, I expect to come two months in the worst house."

The Funny Doctor.

"Wonder," growled the fussy old bachelor, "round use of eggs—"

"Must be handled with care—is that the answer?" queried the very young man.

"No," replied the f. o. b., "one can never tell their age by their looks."

The Popular Pulpit

THE PEACEMAKER.

By Rev. Henry F. Cope.

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."—Matt. 5:9.

How simple are the gateways that open into the most sublime moral and spiritual privileges. The great teacher says that if any would be known as the children of the Eternal they have but to learn to be peacemakers among their fellows. The ordinary virtues commonly are the conditions of the extraordinary beatitudes.

If the teacher were given by some potent, bodiless power, and shop there was a time when the people of the world would not lay claim to being called the children of God, they were at peace with their own selves and willing to be at peace with the world if only they might continue to sleep undisturbed.

There are those who counsel or use other precedents, like those who attempt to pacify wailing babies. If there be any in the only children of God the family is a world and by no means a homogeneous one. You may have little to do with the good, orderly, obedient, quiet and still be a true peacemaker if you are willing to be continuous and relatively great calm and more perfect harmony.

They are peacemakers who have the spirit of the family, of the greater family to which we belong, and who are willing to live in unity and peace with the providence, be well thoroughly amicable, minded. But the people have always had a tender feeling for him, partly because he was so much like the rest of us. Nothing is more striking in the life of Jesus than his affection for the common people. The publicans and sinners, the outcasts and relatives great calm and more perfect harmony.

There is a better way. Sympathy—we can do more for them than our sermons on their lives. Love for the best in them and you will find things better than our sermons. There are flower beds as well as garbage cans, and we can make the world more, spots where seeds of the fairest flowers of heaven may be sheets.

You do not have to be a fool to have faith in your fellows. You do not have to be a fool to have faith in your house; but you do need to take them off your heart. There may be those in your circle who are fearful of you, or you to kill, but it is a greater wrong to withdraw from them your kindness. You can show them that you believe the best instead of the worst in them.

The great teacher said men that he came to seek and to save the lost. His followers have too often occupied themselves solely with condemnation and then wondered that their sermons wated none. Every soul knows its own sorrows, what it needs to feel is that God and all good men are with it, helping it to work off that sentence, to arise and resume the place of honor and joy. Instead of all things conspiring to keep a man down, there is a band of men joining him on, a mighty chariot of sympathy lifting him up. And there is nothing any man can do of greater worth to the world than so clever on another by his faith in him, his high expectation of him, his wise kindness. Nothing is so contagious as the contagious enthusiasm of a man who believes in his fellows. Nothing so quickly opened the gates of heaven, that is coming with the kingdom of perfect harmony to earth, and the kingdom of God is a great house that all this experience of life is and joy should be, and the lesson of living is peace and it is now and forever.

Fair words start fraternity easily, are spoken and soon forgotten; it is a good deed under a generous peace that it is to practise it. Its day never will be over, and its effect never ceases, even the is to get about it every time. It never will come until we fully see that Jesus spoke wonderfully more than a pretty figure of speech when he called the peacemaker the fatherhood and the human brotherhood.

What should there not be the same, strong, unselfish, and loving in a family? Homes are overrated and underrated in a little before. It is over the most dreadful calamities I ever witnessed. The very air is enough to shake under my feet. At midnight the tingling suddenly ceased. In the morning I could see the great drops of blood. Entire crops were ruined, buildings were carried away, trees were down, and great excavations now in the ground.

Long aisles were noticed on the mountain sides. One had the appearance of having passed over the spot where we had just left. We went down the Valle and there our road which winds would not point the same more avoid this was the reality. Enormous masses of granite were torn from their foundation, crags had fallen, and thousands of trees were down.

A traveler, Harker, brought the news of the Valley tragedy. He was passing down the road and noticed the house the doors being open, he entered, but could find no one. The coverings of the beds were thrown off, and the appearance of the family was being alcoved. He did not know their fate, but he could guess. He came on to "Crawford's" and left what he feared.

A search was immediately instituted, and the bodies of the unfortunate family discovered. If they had remained in the house they would have escaped. The avalanche separated just before it reached the dwelling, passed on each side of it, and came together again, forming, but the only disturbed one.

TRACK OF THE STORM.

Eighty-one years ago on the 26th of August occurred the terrible storm and earthquake in the Crawford Notch which stripe the Willey family out of existence. Every one who has been over the road which runs along the steep mountainside has looked down the deep ravine in the Fifth white house which marks the scene of the catastrophe, but the story of that night's work are covered now, and the grass stops suggest to tragedy. It takes the written words of one who was actually involved in the storm of the storm to inspire upon the mind of today the reality of that sad heart-rending tragedy. The New Hampshire Historical Society has published an account of the storm, written by one who survived with it.

On the 28th of August occurred the most remarkable flood of rain ever known in the vicinity. Our camp was in the side of Mount Washington. For several days showers had been frequent, but on that morning about 5 a. m. rain descended in torrents.

Climbing a guardail oak a few rods from the camp, during a temporary suspension of the storm, I could see for three and thirty miles in every direction and the bare rocks sending, as it were, from the violence of the stroke. The very summit of the mountain seemed to shake.

It became impossible to keep up fires, and at 4 in the afternoon we left the camp. After great exertions we arrived at Crawford's a little before 9. It was the most dreadful calamitous I ever witnessed. The very air seemed to shake under my feet. At midnight the tingling suddenly ceased. In the morning I could see the great drops of blood. Entire crops were ruined, buildings were carried away, trees were down, and great excavations now in the ground.

IMMUNITY FOR THE ALTON.

In Resenting Slur on His Court Standard Oil Is Hit by Landis.

Another broadside was directed against the Standard Oil Company by Judge Landis in the United States District Court at Chicago Monday. Although immunity was granted the Chicago and Alton Railroad by Judge Landis on recommendation of Attorney General Bonaparte, both the railroad and the Standard Oil Company were scored from the bench and a sidepoint was issued by the court for James A. Moffett president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

Mr. Moffett was directed to appear before the special grand jury that was to have investigated the Alton case and "make good" changes made by directors of the New Jersey corporation. The court's latest action is regarded as one of the most drastic moves that have been made against officials of the oil corporation during the entire litigation.

Judge Landis' denunciation of the tactics employed by the directors of the Standard Oil Company in disposing of a portion of the $29,240,000 line on the Chicago, Cincinnati and Louisville, resulted in immunity being granted the Alton and Allan Hallinan by Judge Landis on recommendation of Attorney General Bonaparte, both the railroad and the Standard Oil Company were scored from the bench and a sidepoint was issued by the court for James A. LESSON FOR OCTOBER 6.

Joshua, twenty-four chapters.—Joshua 1:1-11.

Golden Text.—"Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only."—Jas. 1:22.

If you were asked who ruled the Israelites during the first few hundred years after they had settled in Canaan, what would you make? Would you say, Moses, Joshua, or the Judges? That would be a partially correct answer, but a very incomplete one. It was God who was the ruler of His people until the time when Samuel became old and his sons were wicked. Then the people, instead of looking to God to supply them with another holy leader, decided to demand that they would be like the nations round about and have a king. When Samuel complained of this choice before the Lord, "the Lord said unto Samuel, Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me, that I should not reign over them."

Many times God had warned them by God to act as His representative, to receive from Him instructions and give them to the people. The people on their part undertook to be ruled by God. They knew that God had planned their escape from Egypt, and they knew that He also delivered them and had paved the way in the wilderness for their food. He had talked to them from Mount Sinai and had made Himself formulated the laws by which they were to be governed. They knew in short that God wished them to look directly to Him for direction and for protection.

This had been made plain at the time of God's choice of Moses as the leader of the people, and it was plain at the choice of Joshua. It was made plain that God is a God of order and that He acts in God's representatives.

Moses, as we say, was the chief lifting of more about both Moses and Joshua, yet God had given them to rule His people, qualified them for the work, and supported them all through it. The Lord knew that a man was far at that time as He has had upon many occasions, and that it was a terrible fact also in some cases horribly necessary, that God should take a man to do a sacred thing It is only because of the infinite pains taken in preparing it. The value of any man's life either to himself or to humanity or to God depends upon what he make of it.

Many good plagues were by God may destroy the country the Israel and God's people. Yet it is a fact that it is being persecuted rather than the death of the people, which God is concerned with the question as to how men are to be made ready for God. And we must remember this in reading of the Old Testament, that God's ideal for Israel was the kingdom of God, the brotherhood of man. This is what Mr. Moffett has been given an opportunity to picture.

Women Avoid Operations

When a woman suffering from female troubles is told that an operation is necessary, it of course frightens her.

The very thought of the hospital, operating table and the knife makes her nervous to an extreme degree.

It is quite true that women sometimes very much a usage when an operation is the only means of relief, but great many women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after an operation has been decided upon as the only means of relief.

MRS. ROSE MOORE

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Dear Mrs. Pinkham: Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured me of the very worst forms of female trouble and I wish to express to you my deepest gratitude. I suffered intensely for two years so that I was unable to attend to my duties and was a burden to my family. I decided and discussed with only temporary relief and I decided to undergo a Female Compound. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cured me of the terrible trouble and I am now in better health than I have been for many years.

This and other such cases should convince every woman that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has always been the best remedy for women's ailments. Yours truly, Mrs. Rose Moore, Ashland, Ohio.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly consult Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised.

MEMORIES OF THE WAR

MRS. ROSE MOORE

In an article published in your paper entitled "Stories in Savannah," says "Memories of the War." I read the story of your correspondence writer of this beautiful old-fashioned southern city with its innumerable public parks and public squares, its open spaces carpeted with soft green and shaded by centuries trees, etc. And again. This is a simple grandeur. Digitized by Google

In reading the tribute to Savannah's attractions remembrance of that city in the spring and summer of 1864 will in my mind

The dust and heat and turmoil of camp life in the rear of Sherman's army for years, time day I found myself in Savannah, Ga., and I remember the rapture the night with myself. We were pitching our tent on a journey from Plymouth, N. C., to Savannah and Ma. rom. Ga. There were some 1,800 of us, some of our crippled Plymouth "pilgrims" in the process of the South as we journeyed toward what has to be our free destination, Savannah, Ga.

Confederates

What a distinction on the part of our copper to us or was a "display than Sherman's army was to make of us. As a cut class of troops we were stationed at Sawyerville, where apparently good supplies were in abundance, followed by our scouts, and the Confederates were driven out of our vicinity, and we were left to our own devices. We were brigaded, and people came by carriages on Sunday's and to see us. It was a most entertaining sight to see these people, ladies and gentlemen, predominating of the men probably being wounded or on furlough.

There was a slight alleviation to our ardent attempt like to our side of the Black. A few southern land on within the bounds. We were remarks as good looking a lot of soldiers as could be found, for the most part well-to-do, or at certain state of more than a year. Our equipment, our clothes, were good and we were fully clad which is apparent in marked contrast with soldiers made prisoners, in the guise of an active campaign.

The people hemmed us in with unalloyed curiosity and kindness. We were the first Union prisoners that had been exchanged, and we were fresh from the Confederate prisons. We were a most interesting lot of men, and the people were all in a state of excitement over our coming. We were treated as good friends and welcomed to our homes. We were invited to dinner, to tea, to parties, to balls, to dances, to picnics, to rides, to drives, to everything that could be thought of to entertain us. We were treated as if we were the heroes of the day, and we were the heroes of the day. We were the heroes of the day, and we were the heroes of the day. We were the heroes of the day, and we were the heroes of the day. We

TAFT FAR IN LEAD

Chicago Tribune Poll Shows Overwhelming Vote For Chicago In Middle West and New England.

First Choice In All but the "Favorite" Son States and There the Secretary of War is Given a Tremendous Second Choice Vote.

Eleven Mid Middle West states for Taft.

New England for Taft.

A compilation of the Chicago Tribune's poll, taken recently in these northern states, shows that Ohio's candidate for the presidency is far in the lead in the prospective Central West and in conservative New England. A close analysis of the vote shows the Ingalls-Foraker-Taft Republican ticket in the campaign for the presidential nomination. In each the Middle West and in New England states Taft touched more favorable votes than the other candidates combined.

An Overwhelming Lead.

The New York Herald, the famous Bennett system, conservative and impartial, a week ago published a review of the Middle West vote.

The Herald said:

Inquiries were sent to editors of Republican newspapers, Republican Congressmen and legislators, and other political leaders of the party in eleven States of the Middle West including Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. Four questions were asked. Do you approve the progressive policies of the President? Do you prefer a candidate of the progressive school for his successor, or a man of more conservative views? Of the following eminent southern Cannon, Fairbanks, Knox, Hughes and Taft, which are your first, second and third choices? Have you any other candidate in mind? More than seventeen hundred replies were received, and of these only sixty-five were cast in the first question. Almost as many failed to answer the question, but 1,435 expressed their indorsement of the President's policies. A slightly smaller number want a progressive successor, but still the preponderance is overwhelming, 1,435 to 177. In the vote for first choice candidates the result is no less noteworthy. Secretary Taft leads for the first choice with 904 votes, with Senator La Follette—although his name was not mentioned in the list prepared by the Tribune—second at 238, Speaker Cannon third at 181, Governor Hughes fourth at 154, and Vice-President Fairbanks and President Roosevelt nearly tied for the fifth place at 129 and 123 respectively. The votes credited to Mr. Roosevelt, says the Tribune, "are from persons who observed in the form of the third question, and referred to some any other candidate" than the President.

"Favorite Son" Vote.

Mr. Taft not only is the leader in his entire section, but is the first choice of eight of the eleven States. Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin each being loyal to a "favorite son"—Cannon, Fairbanks and La Follette, respectively. On this basis the Tribune calculates that Mr. Taft would have 159 delegates to the National Convention, Mr. Cannon 58, Fairbanks 30, La Follette 26.

"The outcome of this canvass is significant as indicating that whatever may be the attitude of Wall Street and the great industrial and financial interests of the country toward the president, the Republicans of the powerful Middle West are strong in their approval of his policies; that they want as his successor a progressive."

Relics of a Great Composer.

Among the largest trophies in the line that often befalls the manuscript of a genius. Of no one is this truth more of Beethoven. When this great man of composers was alive he was incessantly in financial difficulty. After his death all his manuscripts were sold at auction—over 200 of them there were—yet they brought hardly a pittance. This would be at the rate of about $2.56 apiece. The other day the manuscript of his 5 major sonata for violin and piano, written in 1812, was sold by a man in Leipsic to a man in Florence for $2,562 marks, or $18,200.

Growth of New York City.

New York city is now growing twice as fast as London, and it is estimated that the city now contains 4,500,000 persons in the immediate district depending on the metropolis there are 6,200,000 persons.

Knowledge from Babes and Sucklings.

A physiological expert writes a long, learned article on "When to Quit Work;" when every office boy knows it is when the boss shuts down his desk to catch the train.

Color of the Eyes.

So far as science is concerned there are only two kinds of eyes—those which are blue and those which are not. But in the matter fancy of the eye; all the other hues, dove-red as hazel or gray, green or violet, are due to freaks of nature, which we superimposed on the blue tint; and science roundly dubs them brown.

Chinese Etiquette.

When a Chinaman asks you his pals on his hat. When he talks with you he keeps out of step. When he wants to be polite he asks your age and income. When he sees a melon he throws away the pulp and eats the rind. When he wants to show his regard for you he sends a codfish.

STICK TO HAM AND EGGS.

Why Drummer Made Breakfast Dish His Great Standby.

"It's funny how a man will get into the habit of eating something that is good enough, but nothing to rave about, sure. I have been traveling many years, and I have seen the fine and mouthful and have had in mind to be some pretty and bonnie. The result is that I have fallen into the habit of eating ham and eggs and one much else, about twice a day and sometimes three times a day. I never used to eat eggs at home and I never could stand for any salt meats but I've got ham and eggs now and I order ham and eggs when I have an elaborate meal in front of me at a big hotel. The reason is simply that it is still ham and eggs are about the only things you can offend to take a chance on. It is seldom that you get packed eggs, because fresh eggs are cheap enough in small places, and then, no matter how inexperienced the cook, he can fry or boil you some eggs. They ought always have good ham. Occasionally I add baked potatoes to my small boiled dinner, and they can hardly give you the worst of it on ham, either. But ham and eggs are the standby."

TAFT FAR IN LEAD

Chicago Tribune Poll Shows Overwhelming Vote for Chicago in Middle West and New England.

First Choice in All but the "Favorite" Son States and There the Secretary of War is Given a Tremendous Second Choice Vote

Shows Big Middle West states for Taft

New England for Taft

A compilation of the Chicago Tribune's poll taken recently in these northern states that Chicago candidate for the presidency is far in the lead in the progressive Central West and in conservative New England. A close analysis of the vote shows the international Secretary Taft polarizing the candidates for the presidential nomination in both the Middle West and in New England states left received more favorable votes than the other candidates combined.

An Overwhelming Lead.

The New York contest, the famous melting pot for conservative and fair, yielded a most comprehensive review of the Middle West vote.

The Chicago poll

Thousands were sent to editors of Republican newspapers, Republican congressmen and legislators, and other political leaders of the party in eleven States of the Middle West, including Illinois, Indiana Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. Four questions were asked. Do you approve the progressive policies of the President? Do you prefer a candidate of the progressive wing of the party? Do you approve or disapprove of a man of more conservative views? (if the following suggested nominees Cannon, Fairbanks, Knox, Hughes and Taft, which are your first, second and third choices? Have you any other candidate in mind? More than seventeen hundred replies were received, and of these only sixty-five said no to the first question. About as many failed to answer the question, but 1,350 expressed their indorsement of the President's policies. A slightly smaller number want a progressive successor. Of the preponderance in overwhelming 1,435 to 176. In the vote for favorite candidates the result is no less noteworthy. Secretary Taft leads for the first choice with 944 votes, with Senator La Follette—although his name was not mentioned in the list prepared by the Tribune—second at 208. Speaker Cannon third at 191, Governor Hughes fourth at 184, and Vice-President Fairbanks and President Roosevelt nearly tied for the fifth place at 125 and 123 respectively. The votes credited to Mr. Roosevelt, says the Tribune, "are from persons who objected to the form of the third question and refused to name any other candidate" than the President.

"Favorite Son" Vote.

Mr. Taft, not only in the lead in the entire section, but in the first choice of eight of the eleven States, Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin each being loyal to a "favorite son"—Cannon, Fairbanks and La Follette, respectively. On this basis the Tribune calculates that Mr. Taft would have 105 delegates to the National Convention, Mr. Cannon 54, Fairbanks 50, La Follette 38.

The outcome of this canvass is significant as indicating that whatever may be the attitude of Wall Street and the great industrial and financial interests of the country toward the presidency, the Republicans of the powerful Middle West are strong in their approval of his policies; that they want as his successor a progressive Republican.

Your Nervine cured her. I could cross myself. Both of us owe our lives to your Nervine. We have told many the benefit I have received from your Nervine. Nervine has saved my life. Slave in Connecticut.

The Blacks are colonizing Connecticut valleys and Hadley is said to be fast or there, occupying the colonial farmhouses up and down the tree-shaded streets of that beautiful New England town. Some tenements, four or five families to a house, and even big factories in Industry in their watchword, you hear the cry of the farms that the New England stock is abandoning. They write a lower standard of living. This is to be expected. Nature, it is said, that they are making the New England farms pay and so they get rich, they spend more and live better—Springfield Republican.

One Girl's View of Beauty.

"Beauty in some ways is a handicap," she added, slowly. "Do you know, Jerry, that it seems to me almost as humiliating to be loved for one's beauty as for one's money. And it gives false values for a short time. Money, after all, doesn't touch the core—good looks, with others, then is to make what one will have left, when one's beauty goes?"—The Century.

Stuck to Ham and Eggs.

Why Drummer Made Breakfast Dish His Great Standby.

"It's funny how a man will get into the habit of eating something that is not good for him," remarked a drummer. "I have been travelling up and through small towns for the life of my mouth and have had to put up at some pretty bad hotels. The result is that I have fallen into the habit of eating ham and eggs and am much relished by the time I get to a town or city. I order ham and eggs almost three times a day. I never used to eat eggs at home and I never cared much for any salt meats, but I've got the habit now and I order ham and eggs even when I have an elaborate meal in front of me at a big hotel. The reason is, I guess, that in small towns ham and eggs are about the only things you can afford to take a chance on. It is serious, too, you see, packed eggs, because fresh eggs are cheap enough in small towns and, anyhow, matter how inexperienced the cook is, he can fry or boil you some eggs. Then they nearly always have good ham. Occasionally I add hotel potatoes to my small hotel menu, because they can hardly give you the worst of it on them, either. But ham and eggs are the standby."

Color of the Eyes.

So far as science is concerned there are only two kinds of eyes, those which are blue and those which are not. Blue is the natural color of the eye; all the other hues, deserved a hazel or gray, green or violet, are due to flecks of pigment in the superimposed on the blue iris; and science roughly divides them brown.

Chinese Etiquette.

When a Chinaman returns you he puts on his hat. When he talks with you he keeps out of step. When he wants to be polite he asks your age and income. When he eats a notice he throws away the paper and eats the newly. When he wants to show his regard for you he sends a coffin.

JOLIET MAN KILLED

WEALTHY RESIDENT IS MURDERED AND ROBBED.

Fifty Donations, Usual Year Round Books, Makes Over-Season Statement—Elections, Canadian and British Stocks for Mexico.

Somewhat to Chase Indeed and half to a stranger was found murdered and robbed, 10 miles south of Joliet, Friday morning. Discussion and theories abounded in this town where he was well known, and had many friends. Mr. Mason left Joliet Wednesday afternoon, ostensibly for Chicago, and was last seen in Joliet at about 5 o'clock Friday morning. Mr. Mason was a wealthy retired farmer, and had been in Joliet for the past two years. He was married, but his family were not located at the Joliet home. Mr. Mason had been in poor health for some time, suffering from a complicated disease, and which undoubtedly had unbalanced his mind to a certain extent. When I was walking on the Rock Island road, about 1 o'clock Friday morning, I met a man who I thought was Mr. Mason. He was walking toward Joliet. I did not speak to him, as I was in a hurry to catch a car. The man had a grip in his hand

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT.

One Fault That Our Site Lands Are Not Troubled.

The editor of an aggressive, agricultural paper has been making a trip through northern Michigan. He has seen the riches with which nature has so liberally endowed the soil, and he has also seen the vast acreage as yet untouched by the plowshare.

His observations call for serious thought on the part of every loyal citizen. He says our greatest need is progressive settlers. Very well, now what we get them?

It is known that thousands of settlers, sons of the right stuff, pass by annually, giving to northern Michigan little if any thought.

West and north they go, eyes lifted to high farm the agricultural wealth at their very feet.

Surely this condition should appeal to those of us who sat idly by last spring and allowed the proposed immigrant bill to come to an early legislative death.

Why, we ask do not more highgrade settlers come to northern Michigan?

Simply because no effort is made to get them.

Michigan and its surrounding states, strike like storekeeper who does not believe in advertising, and who is convinced that electric lights in his store window are a useless extravagance.

So Michigan sits idly by watching with mystifying air the progress of Genuine newcomers into the states which bid them welcome.

Minnesota spent five thousand dollars in the last year of its successful campaign for settlers, and the authorities of the state says that the sale of state lands were increased during those first twelve months to the enormous amount of a half million dollars.

Here is material for deep thought on the part of every Michigan legislator, for herein lies the opportunity to turn into profitable farms the acres throughout the state, both north and south of the straits.

If, as has been tactfully suggested the private land owners benefit in their farm sales by the advertising proposed to be done by the state they should be made welcome to the benefit, for they may make but the one profit in land sales while every year thereafter Michigan makes money from the new producers and producers.—Sao Ste ing News.

Citizen's Lecture Course.

The concert by the Royal Hungarian Orchestra at Temple Friday evening the 5th inst. This is unquestionably the finest musical attraction that has ever visited Charlevoix. The manager of the Course have no fears of stating the contract strongly when commending it to the company. The New York Herald uses language in describing the work of the orchestra that should make our citizens feel that a rare treat is offered in this attraction alone. The Herald says: To speak of the playing of the Royal Hungarian Orchestra in such terms as it deserves would be to use expressions that have the appearance of extravagance. If the great public knew how seldom musical performances merit unqualified praise, it would appreciate how great a pleasure is afforded the musical reviewer in listening to efforts that merit only approval. The above is one of the most perfect tributes paid a musical company. If we were to hear such a concert in one of the great cities we would probably pay from 75 cents to $1.50 for a seat, but by purchasing course tickets we can have the privilege of attending five entertainments of as high an order as will be given in the state of Michigan since. Such a privilege as are confident our people will appreciate. One important feature of the course is in choice dates. The management has refused all Saturday night dates. Monday, Tuesday and Friday evenings have been selected. These evenings will be satisfactory to the majority of our people. It is hoped that the people will engage their tickets early and enjoy the benefit of the entire course. The total cost of each entertainment by purchasing course ticket will only be thirty cents, and it will purchase entertainments worth several times that amount. Number of tickets limited to 450.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The Special Session and the Primary Election Law Now Has the Center of the Stage.

Public interest is now centered in the special session of the legislature, and the fate of the primary election law.

Governor Warner's message to the legislature, was promptly followed by the first direction in both houses of a primary bill embodying the governor's views, and of a bill providing for licensing professional lobbyists. The bills were referred to committees.

The governor resented the imputation that he had worked for the 50 per cent clause in the old primary bill, and declared that the people have now shown conclusively that they want the nominating of all state officers in their hands without resource to a delegate convention. The governor recommended the extension of the primary law to provide for the selection of delegates to the national conventions by direct vote.

The governor wants a law licensing lobbyists to "free this state from the corrupting influence of the profession of lobbying."

He also called attention to the necessity for providing for the Mount Pleasant Normal, which has its annual appropriation through a defect in the appropriation bill.

Rep. Hanson, of the second Ingham district, on Tuesday, introduced a bill to repeal the entire primary law now on the books. Hanlon is one of the house leaders. This is the most sensible thing proposed yet.

Hard Times in Kansas.

The wolf is at the grasshoppers and drouth are almost forgotten in the prosperous Kansas of to-day although a dozen of Uncle Sam's hard "blanks" has not yet forgotten a hard time to remember. Voice of Experience.

A young girl recently went to her doctor on a most serious occasion. She confessed that a gentleman was coming to see her.

"I am so in love now," she sobbed, "and—and I think he loves me so much, I don't like to ask mother how I should act under the circumstances, but—"

"Do you like him?" interrupted the aged matron.

"Very much," observed her niece.

"Enough to marry him?"

"Time get blasts of and replied in the affirmative.

"Then," said a wisp, with an air of philosophy, "don't let there be any shilly-shallying. Down on your knees, turn red and faint down at the carpet. Just throw your arms around his neck, lock him fast in the back and begin talking about his furniture."

A Romantic Romance.

A romantic little story comes from the Clark San district, says the Rose Daily Times. One of the residents having died of illness, his only wife declared her intention of killing herself. Attempts that it was not right for a woman to remain alive after her husband was dead, and that she would be far happier if she followed him she put her plan into execution and committed suicide the same night. She was only 20 years of age.

CALLED JUDGMENT OF GOD.

Thief's Death at Hands of Child Whose Parents He Had Robbed.

The New York Sunday World's correspondent in Budapest sends the following account of a recent tragedy in one village of Kapovar, Hungary:

James Varga, a stock farmer, sold some cattle for 500 crowns and concealed the money in his house. Florient Gal, a neighbor of the village, knew of this transaction and determined to get the money. He watched the house until he saw Varga and his wife leave it. Then he entered and had no difficulty in finding the money, which he pocketed.

As he was about to leave he noticed sitting in a corner, staring at Gonda and intently at him, the Vargas six-year-old daughter. Realizing that she had watched his theft, he determined to get rid of this witness without him. He threw a rope over a beam in the ceiling and tied a noose in one end of it. Picking up the little girl, he tried to persuade her to put her head into the noose, saying it was a nice game.

"How?" she asked.

"It's show you," said the robber, laughing.

And put down the little girl, drew up a chair, stood upon it and put his head through the noose.

"Like this," he said, again laughing as it it was a game he was playing with the girl.

The child pulled the chair away suddenly, the robber fell, his neck in the noose and was strangled to death.

The child watched her victim's death struggles until they ceased, then went outside to await for her parents. When they returned she took them to the room where the dead thief still dangled and told them in great glee what had taken place. The 500 crowns were found in the pockets of the robber and the whole village knew the terrible fate of the village, where the event is called a "judgment of God."

New Orleans Cities of the Dead.

New Orleans has several miniature cities within its boundaries, and they are the cities of the dead" said Louis M. Lemarque of the "Crescent City."

I mean," he explained, "that every cemetery in New Orleans is a miniature city. They are built above the ground and laid out in streets, just as the larger city. Every house is of marble and some of the tombs are miniature. In them are buried many men who won fame under the double eagle of Spain and France in them, too, are to be found inscriptions that tell of sweet Creole romances, such as that of Jeanne Lachaise, the popular singer of scarce a century ago, who died of a broken heart.

Certain songs are set apart, according to the dead. French Catholic custom for visiting these miniature cities and on those days they are crowded all day long. As they were built so long ago there are now in the center of the city and at night low wailing Indian. Long ago it was found necessary to build the cemeteries above the ground, because of the fact that the water table is below the level of the Mississippi river.

Dog Outshines Royalty.

A little yellow dog took it into its head to show the way down the Strand and Fleet street the king and queen of Denmark as they proceeded from Buckingham palace to the Guildhall to lunch with the lord mayor.

In the middle of the road ahead of the mounted police, gentlemen ushers, and the Life Guard, the dog sedately trotted along, unmoved by the shouts of the crowds on the sidewalks, apparently completely absorbed in the discharge of the important duty he had assumed.

The sensation he caused quite overshadowed that caused by the royal visitors from Denmark. Everybody cheered the dog, and only a few showed the royalists whose movements he had undertaken to supervise.—London Cor. N. Y. Times.

Time in European Nations.

The German empire has a uniform time, adopted April 1, 1905, the central European time, so called, which is one hour faster than the time of the Greenwich meridian. The same stand is in use in Austria, Hungary, Italy, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway and Sweden.

The west European time is the time of the Greenwich meridian, and is used in England, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg and Spain. France, out of national vanity, holds to the time of Paris, both for herself and for her colonies in Algiers and Tunis, nine minutes faster than Greenwich time.

The east European time is the same as the time of St. Petersburg, which is 2 hours 1 minute and 13 seconds faster than Greenwich time. This standard is used in European Russia, Turkey in Europe, Roumania and Bulgaria.

He Blew the Violoncello.

"Gentlemen," recently said a German professor, who was showing to his students the contents to the system, "this man suffers from delirium tremens. He is a musician. It is well known that blowing a brass instrument affects the lungs and throat in such a way as to create a thirst thereof, which has to be allayed by weakness indulgence in strong drink. Hence, in the course of time, the disease you have before you."

Turning to the patient, the professor asked:

"What instrument do you blow?" and the answer was:

"The violoncello."—Cleveland Leader.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Boyne Journal: Sheriff McWain was called to East Jordan yesterday on a piece of official business and has just returned this morning with Sen. Madden, who accompanied him. The sheriff was summoned over there to help investigate a matter in which a young man named Lewis R. Lick came to grief. He has been engaged in Dr. Warne's drug store for some time past and when the store was recently sold he was continued in the position of clerk. Suspicion soon attached to the young man and traps were laid for him which proved, it is alleged, that he was guilty of pilfering. He was confronted by the sheriff and the proofs of his guilt soon convinced him that he had "sat coon fee the music thing. He finally compromised the matter by paying Dr. Warne a thousand dollars, nearly all of which he had on hand which he had kept up. There will probably be no prosecution.

Local News.

—W. F. Gill, of Harbor Springs, was in town yesterday.

—A son at the home of Wm Coates yesterday morning.

—Mrs. Will N. Moore, of West Branch is here visiting her mother, Mrs. Fapinau.

—W. J. Ferguson, on his Hayes farm this fall threshed 204 bushels of wheat from 7½ acres.

—Grand concert by the Hungarian Orchestra Friday evening, the 18th. This is the first number in the lecture course.

—Frank Glassford began work Monday morning rebuilding the Jud son Harmon cottage, on the Chicago Club grounds.

—W. J. Ferguson and wife, landed at the Ferguson House Monday afternoon and assumed the management of the House Tuesday morning.

—Lawrence Ackert, who has been home on a vacation the past week, will go to Detroit next week to accept a good position in a drug store.

—The Hungarian Orchestra has been secured at large expense, and offers a musical feast that is rarely given in towns of the size of Charlevoix.

—Worshipful Master W. H. Miller, has been notified that the Masonic school of instruction booked for Charlevoix Oct. 18th, has been indefinitely postponed.

—Dr. and Mrs. Armstrong will leave soon this next week for an eastern trip that will take in New York, Washington, and the Jamestown exposition. While in New York Dr. Armstrong will attend a course of lectures.

—His associates on the board of supervisors are busy this week congratulating supervisor Jake Graf, of East Jordan, on being a grandjun. White Jake does not dispute the soft impeachment he declares that he is over 32 years of age, and the matter is being looked up by a special committee.

—Mr. Emerick Oak one of the Bohemian beet workers brought in by the Sugar Co. has purchased the farm of Mr. Kemsida and expects to put it a good acreage of sugar beets. There are also two more of the Bohemians who are thinking of either buying or renting farms. This may be a nucleus that will bring in many more new settlers.

—G. G. Williams and son Daniel, formerly of the local factory but for the past three years in business at New Bedford, are back here again, Mr. Williams, who was a most estimable lady, and a zealous church worker, died in New Bedford, July 8th of this year. Williams and son have bought the Pearson and mill plant, at Boyne Falls, and will put in an electric light plant. They are now engaged in taking the machinery from the old Charlevoix factory, which has mostly remained there since they left, and will later manufacture bowls at Boyne Falls.

—Every man in the Hungarian Orchestra is an artist.

—We call your attention to the new ad. of the Bentley Hardware Co. in this issue.

—James Dumbry, of St. Jamis, was here Tuesday to meet his wife, who arrived from Chicago that evening.

—Buy a course ticket, and secure the privileges of the best lecture course in Northern Michigan, and the equal of any in the state.

—The ladies of the Congregational church will give a Halloween supper at the church parlors Oct. 30th. 11tf

—Antoine Richards and W. F. Shafer have bought a restaurant and saloon in Detroit, and left here today to take possession.

—Mrs. J. M. Clark, who has been spending the past two weeks with friends in Lansing and Grand Rapids, arrived home Friday.

—John M. Lloyd has purchased the Hon. Yettaw "Little Tavern" restaurant, near the Hotel Bartlett, and will run it in connection with his pool room.

—There is danger of a mistake being made. Charlevoix is full of supervisors, many of whom are strangers to our people. Don't kill them while under the impression that they are picture frame fakirs.

—The Sugar Co., expect to open their beet sheds for receiving beets on Monday the 21st if the weather continues favorable for ripening the beets. The beets now show a very fair sugar per cent but a few days of sunshine will increase it.

—The county Soldiers' and Sailors' Commission, composed of J. W. Rogers, of East Jordan; J. L. Handy, of Boyne City, and E. H. Hodge, of Chatcherts, held its annual meeting here yesterday, in conjunction with the annual meeting of the board of supervisors.

—Sunday's dispatches say the restaurant, bakery and lunch room of Mrs Mercier, on Mackinac Island, burned Monday entailing a loss of $10,000 with very little insurance. The Mission Hill of Cheboygan, who were visiting Mrs. Mercier, narrowly escaped with their lives and were carried from the burning building just a moment before it collapsed.

—Look out for the picture sharks that are about in the world. Don't be bombugged. The game they are playing is a disreputable steal. Several Charlevoix ladies who were victimized by them recently called on the grafters with the prosecuting attorney yesterday, and made them return photographs that had been secured under false pretenses. If a traveling picture frame or picture enlarger calls at your house get after him with the tea kettle or the poker.

—The SENTINEL is pleased to be able to announce one of the greatest clubbing offers it has ever made. To every new subscriber, and to every renewal of one year in advance we will send the SENTINEL and the Inland Farmer for the subscription price of the SENTINEL—$1.50. The American Farmer is a monthly, published at Indianapolis, was established twenty-two years ago, and is one of the best monthly farmers journals in the country. It is a great offer. Come in and get a copy.

—We do not believe in the circus method of advertising a newspaper. "The greatest show on earth" system don't pay in the end. "Conceded to be the best advertising medium," etc. sounds well as an ad., but the best way for advertiser, be they farmers or mercants, to investigate. Talk is cheap. The SENTINEL can get into a newspaper directory with 3,000 circulation if it wants to, and not by advertising either, but it won't. Advertisers are welcome to call and satisfy themselves as to the circulation of the SENTINEL.

—Petoskey News: Local Agent I. C. Burns of the Northern Michigan Transportation Company states that their line of boats will be kept running until Dec. 6, which time the last trip will have been completed. The freights are very heavy at present, indications pointing to a continuance of this business. Apples form a large part of the shipments from northern ports. The Arnold Line steamer City of Kalamazoo has been chartered by the N. M. T. Co and will be used for the remainder of the present season on the north end of the run from Chicago, from Petoskey to Mackinaw City, Mackinac Island and Cheboygan, while the Sterling and Missouri will look after the Chicago end of the route.

—Sept. 1, D. Gaither, of the Ferry Seed Co., growing department was in town Friday.

—In the Allegan Farmer advertisement on the first page of this issue occurs an error which we hasten to correct. The subscription price is given at $1.50 per year. This should read $1.50.

—The concert to be given on Friday evening is one of five superb entertainments in the lecture course. It is only in a Citizens' lecture course that such entertainments are possible at the low price of admission.

—Married, Oct. 9th, at the home of the bride's parents, in Evanston, by Rev. H. A. Wright, Mr. Robert Knudson to Miss Minnie Erickson, both of Evanston. The marriage was the occasion of a happy gathering. A wedding repast was served. Mr. and Mrs. Knudson will reside on the Peddock farm in Evanston.

THE SUPERVISORS.

The Board Hard At Work On County Affairs This Week.

Roads, Bridges and Piers—Burnett, Winder, Redfield.

Rejected and charged back Taxes—Karcher, Olin D. Smith, Ilye.

KILLED BY AUTO.

Miss Mary Miller, Daughter of Capt. Harrison Miller, Killed in Accident.

The many friends of Capt. and Mrs. "Tip" Miller, of Frankfort, were shocked to read in a Grand Rapids paper of Monday, that their daughter, Miss Mary, had been killed in an automobile accident in that city Sunday night.

The young lady was visiting a friend in Grand Rapids and was out riding with other friends, when the machine overturned. Another lady was very seriously injured.

The body of Miss Miller arrived here last evening, for interment in Brookside cemetery.

Death of Luke Hallett.

Honest old Luke Hallett, the Frankfort sailor of the four seas, died at his home in this city early this morning, after a long illness.

There was no more familiar figure on the streets of Charlevoix than Luke, and few had more friends than he. The faithful old horse "Donald," the vegetable wagon and Luke "at the helm" as he was wont to say, always drew a warm greeting all along the street.

Luke Hallett was born at Chennies, England, and would have been more than sixty-four years age. At an early age he went to sea, serving six years in the British navy, and afterwards for many years in the merchant service. He was a perfect type of the fine, frank blunt, honest old "salty."

For a few years he sailed on the lakes, coming to Charlevoix twenty-four years ago. He sailed out of this port a few years after locating here.

He leaves a wife and one son—J. J. Hallett, of this city. The funeral will occur from the home Sunday afternoon.

Charles Petersen aged 50, a sailor on the Mississippi River, was drowned just as the boat was entering Northport harbor last Friday. Petersen was single and his relatives live in Milwaukee. The boat was just inside the point and the sea was running high when the accident happened. Petersen was over in the jib boom taking care of the jib and it is supposed that a line broke allowing him to fall into the water. He managed to catch hold of a line but the vessel was going so fast he couldn't retain it and was swept off.

PROBABLY FIFTY CENTS!

Potatoes Promise Well for the Farmers This Fall.

Not like "thirty cents" but fifty cents is the way the price of potatoes for this locality look for the near future—perhaps better than fifty cents, says the Cadillac News.

Judging from reports from all parts of the country and considering the country's entire crop as a whole, this year's potato crop will be far smaller than that of last year, and it is reasonable to suppose that prices this fall and winter will be above the average. However, dealers do not think the price to consumers will be so high as to put a check on consumption of the tubers. In the east the crop is very poor in some sections, and only normal in others. In the central states the crop is short. In Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the Dakotas the conditions are about as last year, while in the west and the south the crop drops below last year's figures considerable. In the far west the acreage is somewhat ahead of last year. It is argued in Michigan that this state will be called on heavily to help make up the deficiency in other states and that the demand on the farmers must be met with a good price. White potatoes now bring but thirty-five cents in the local market, but that is accounted for mainly by the fact that the sales of late have been heavy and the potatoes unripe. The operations of the American Society of Equity, which is strong this year in the potato sections will also tend to raise the price. It is claimed that organization urges farmers to hold their crop for fifty cents a bushel, and there seems to be little doubt that the great few who will see the buyers paying that price.

EVANS RESIGNED.

Captain Well Known Here. Will Study Law.

A Ludington special of the 9th says: Capt. Irving H. Evans, of Baltimore, Md., for the past two years master of the United States dredge General Gillespie, operating on the east shore of Lake Michigan, has resigned his position to take up the study of law at Ann Arbor.

He recently declined the offer of master of the biggest dredge in the United States, the Delaware, operating at Philadelphia.

Captain Evans, 31 years old, Capt. Evans has seen 15 years of sailing, 13 of which have been spent on the sea. At the age of 22 he obtained a master's license.

He served as pilot on the battleship Missouri on her trial trip during his command of the dredge Gillespie, the cost of dredging has been brought to the minimum price paid by the government for such work.

The Rain Bought.

The Evansville (Ind.) Journal, of recent date gives the particulars of a large electric rain project at Indianapolis. The rain is to run between Indianapolis and Evansville, and is being built by the Xarier Construction Co., which is at the head of the Traverse City and Charlevoix proposition.

Incidentally the Journal says that the Co. has bought enough miles of rails for the Traverse Bay road.

At Indianapolis the North Michigan road is considered not only a good thing but a most promising venture.

Boyne Citizen: The big dam of the Boyne River Power Company is completed. On Saturday at about o'clock the streets of Boyne City were lighted from power furnished by the machinery at the new dam. The editor of the Citizen raised the gate that let the water into the big tunnel that feeds the wheel and turns the machinery in the power house, setting in motion the big dynamo that generates about 200 horse-power. The same hand turned the wheel at the power house that started the machinery in motion, and Miss Irene Hobes, at the company's building down town, turning the switch and the circuit was complete.

AIKENSIDE

BY

MRS. MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The Cuckoo Clock," "Homestead on the Hillside," "Lena Rivers," "Rose Mather," "Tempest and Sunshine," "Marie," etc.

CHAPTER XII.

It struck the doctor a little somewhat that one of God's saints should allow his own school teacher, but Maddy was so glad that he was glad, too, and thanks Lord Aikenside. How he wished that she was there now to Mrs. Grey and to speak for him as she could, for he was in Grey's library, the community now so covered, that nothing could be said or done with no witness.

"Well, Maddy, what do you think of Lord Aikenside?"

"I think he is very good and very kind."

"And do you think I ought to let you go with him to Europe?"

"Do you mean, Mr. Grey, that I may go? Why, you know I promised to take care of Mrs. Grey, and I can't leave her. She would die if I should go, and I am so happy now that I can do for her everything I can, and she is so good to me, and I love her so much, and I can't leave her."

"But he needs Mrs. Grey, and she needs you, and I think it would be best for you to go with him."

"Why, Mr. Grey, do you mean that I must go?"

"Yes, Maddy, I mean that I must go."

"Then I will go, if you think it best, for I know I can trust you to take care of Mrs. Grey."

"Yes, I will take care of Mrs. Grey. When do you think of sailing?"

"The first week in June, I believe, and I want you to be ready to go with me."

"Yes, I will be ready."

"And do you think I ought to let Jack go with us? Will it be too much for you?"

"Oh, no, I shall be so happy to have Jack with me. I love him so much, and he is so good to me, and I shall be so happy with him."

"Well, I will write to Jack and tell him to come home. I think it will be best for him to go with us. I shall be lonely without you, and I want you to be with me as much as possible. I shall be busy with my patients, and I want you to be my companion when I am not with them. Do you think you can be happy with me?"

"Yes, I think I can be very happy with you, if you will let me be your companion. I shall be so happy to be with you and to do for you everything I can, and I am glad I can go with you. I love you very much, and I am so happy that I can go with you."

"Yes, I am glad you are going to go with us, and I think we shall be happy together. I love you very much, and I want you to be my wife when we return from Europe. I want you to be my wife, and I want you to be my companion for life. Do you think you can love me enough to marry me?"

"Why, Mr. Grey, I love you very much, and I think I could love you very much more than I do, if you should ask me to be your wife. I love you so much that I should be very happy to be your wife, if you think I can be a good one."

"I am sure you will be a good one, and I am very happy that you will be my wife. I love you very much, and I am very happy that you will be my wife. We will be married in June, and we will go to Europe for a few months, or a year or more. You know it does not seem good to marry a widow in Paris. Write to your friends of your intention."

"Mr. Grey, I shall be happy to do so. Shall I write to Mrs. Aikenside?"

"Yes, I think it would be best for you to write to her and tell her that I have asked you to be my wife, and that you have accepted me. Tell her that I want her to be present when I marry you, and that I want her to be your friend and mine. Do you think you can do that?"

"Yes, I think I can do that. I will write to Mrs. Aikenside to-morrow. I am so happy that I can do anything that would please you."

"Yes, I am very happy that you will do anything I ask you to do, and I am very happy that you are going to be my wife. Now, Maddy, I want you to go to your room and lie down and rest, for you look very tired, and I want you to be fresh and well when we go to Europe. We will be married in June, and we will go to Europe for a few months, or a year or more. We will be very happy together, Maddy, and I want you to be my wife. Do you think you can be happy with me?"

"Yes, I think I can be very happy with you, if you will let me be your companion and do for you everything I can, and I am very happy that you have asked me to be your wife. I am very happy that you love me so much, and I am very happy that I can be your companion and do for you everything I can, and I am very happy that you have asked me to be your wife. I love you very much, and I am very happy that I can

A TAFT TRIUMPH

Ohioan's Trans-American Tour Abounds With Tremendous Crowds and Hearty Welcomes.

Sailed on Sept. 12th on Epoch-Making Journey Around the World—Cities of the West Vie With Each Other in Receptions.

One great, triumphant trip. Secretary of War William H. Taft, met with unbounded enthusiasm at every stage, has completed the trans-Asiatic portion of his epoch-making journey around the world, and is now in the orient about his country's business.

The magnitude of the ensemble of the Ohioan speaking plaudits line the line that the different cities were vying with each other in their demonstrations in the excellence of war. Record-breaking meeting in Cincinnati was the word the wise carried over the entire world upon the occasion of the secretary's previous speech. Lexington and Kansas City demonstrated great in the entertainment of the Ohioan. Again, Fort Springfield, from Oklahoma City, from Joplin from Denver, raise the same note of unusual triumph. In this far northwest, Portland and Seattle poured out to welcome Secretary Taft.

Sailed on 12th.

The official party departed from Seattle on the ocean liner Minnesota on Sept. 12. The next news will come from Japan

The first stage of the trip has been a truly triumphal progress. Great masses of people have gathered to greet him and to hear him, and have exhibited their regard for him as a man and their purpose to support him as a candidate. As for the party itself, they have been handling the Taft bandwagon in Alaska and his trip has brought assurance that he will have the delegates from every one of the states in which he has spoken.

His initial triumph at Columbus was the greatest ever won by a Republican leader. He came from Cincinnati to Lexington amidst greeted him at every station. There it was that he gave the sound for his success in his chief. "I realize," he said, "that an honor which amount of prestige it may have been my good fortune to attain in the Middle West, it is all due to my association with the Roosevelt administration and to my efforts to carry out his policies."

Democratic Approval.

So universal was the good will of the Kentuckians displayed that the Lexington Herald the Democratic organ, urged the Republican leaders to "ask for our battle-blinded consent to the Taft bandwagon, saying "If the Republican organization in Kentucky had this courage it would have already committed the state to Judge Taft for the presidential nomination."

The Lexington leader, the Republican organ, take this assurance. Kentucky has heard of Mr. Taft. Report has wafted of him nothing but good. Seriously, we can today. Throngs of her citizens will listen to his exposition of the beneficent claims of honest government. The seed will fall on fertile ground. Kentucky is for the Taft column. It will be there with other states in the national convention of 1908, and she will be one of the commonwealths that will make up the Republican victory roll on the morning after election day."

At St. Louis Taft held conferences at which every element of the party was represented. The St Louis Post-Dispatch said: "That Taft will be the choice of the Missouri Republicans for the presidential nomination now seems overall."

The St Louis Times after telling of his trip around the world, said: "Returning to his own country through the New York gateway, the secretary will step ashore as the nominee of his party for the presidency."

Greeting at Springfield.

At Springfield, Ill., 15,000 people heard him speak. Here he was greeted by the assist West Point Taft Hobby club—Taft for president and Hobby for governor

At Oklahoma City there were delegations from all parts of the territory, and the convention hall was not big enough for the crowd.

Crossing Kansas, at Fort Scott, a huge dinner pail, appropriately inscribed, was presented to the secretary, and at another stop the fairness filled it with peaches. A railroad accident and the temporary loss of his voice from the strain of speaking almost continuously were incidents.

At Denver Taft was hailed as the "Secretary of Peace." He addressed a big open air audience from the state house steps in a stirring talk. But the crowd stayed. Here is one of the audiences they heard as a reward for getting drenched.

"We are glad to have stocks high—If they are worth the price. We want the water squeezed out of them."

The Denver Republican took the cue and described him as a Hamlet quotation, saying: "There is something about Mr. Taft when seen at close range that gives confidence. Open eyes and heard, the enunciation and pronunciation of Wall street fall on deaf ears. He could not be otherwise than an optimist and an idealist. The battle he would punish, not because he was bloodthirsty, but because it was his bounden duty to do so. Mr Taft is not a chronic kicker. He does not grow fat on other people's misfortunes."

Pledges For Taft.

Numerous papers in Colorado, and as well as in all the other states through which he passed, took the occasion to come out for Taft if they had not already done so, the first in the mountain state being the Pueblo Chieftain.

The Denver people were especially enthusiastic over the coming of Taft because they are working tooth and nail to secure the great Republican national convention, and the first state which has been platted by Denver is Ohio.

The trip through the Yellowstone, following the visit to Denver, organized the head of the war department with that immense conversant. At Portland and at Seattle the reception tendered the secretary more than mobbed the reputation of those two growing cities of the far northwest. Tremendous enough greeted Secretary Taft and he walked on the gang plank of the Minnesota to the cheers from thousands.

KANSAS BANNER TAFT STATE

Flood of Letters to Campaign Manager Shows Sunflower Country Overwhelmingly for Ohioan.

That Kansas is one of the banner Taft states is shown only by the flood of letters which A. I. Vorys, the Taft manager is receiving from the "Sunflower" state. There are no "IFS" and "ands" in the position taken by Kansas Republicans in loyal support of Ohio's candidate for the presidency. For instance Mr. Stockton, a physician of Grinnell, Kan., writes Mr. Vorys the following terse, yet comprehensive statement of the situation as he sees it:

Grinnell, Kan., Sept. 12, 1907.

Hon. A. I. Vorys, Columbus, Ohio:

Dear Sir: I am for Taft, and everyone of my acquaintances is for Taft. When I say an overwhelming majority of all of my acquaintances I know that the sentiment of the state is the same. Kansas is for Taft. Very truly yours,

M. L. STOCKTON.

Here is another letter of the same character which Mr. Vorys received from H. L. Mickel, publisher of the leading Republican paper at Soldier, Kan:

"Kansas people take to Taft like a duck takes to water. It it depends on Kansas he is already elected for two terms."

TAFT AND HIS JOURNEY.

(From the Washington, D. C., Post.)

Secretary Taft is now on the Pacific, beginning his second tour of the world. Since he left Washington, on Aug. 16, he has met with remarkable demonstrations of popularity in Ohio, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Oregon and Washington. He has made many speeches, on select subjects, and they have been received with emphatic approval by the inhabitants of the West. When he reaches the Pacific coast the welcome accorded to him was so cordial that it vaulted with most enthusiasts in the lessons of other aspirants for the Republican nomination. The city of Portland could not have greet of President Roosevelt or President McKinley with greater warmth than it displayed in its entertainment of Taft. His principal speech was heard by 5,000 persons. It dealt with the construction of the Panama canal and with the civil and commercial relations of that war-way. His reference to the voyage of the Oregon elicited great applause, and when he spoke of the combined visit of the battleship fleet through the Straits of Magellan and the future elimination of such a voyage as a necessity for the popular approval of his expressions was unanimous and emphatic.

There is little mystery in the popularity of Secretary Taft in the west. His great activities, touching nearly every public question, and the spirit with which he attacks such heavy burdens as the Philippine and Panama canal strike a responsive chord in the realms and expanding west. There is something appreciable in the Western American in the idea of a physically burly and mentally powerful man grappling with difficulties and resolutely mastering them. Secretary Taft's jolly presence and engaging smile are greater gifts of fortune than rights or gold. The unanimous welcome in his popularity in the west and the anti-Taft elements of the Republican party.

While he is absent, Secretary Taft will be able to perform at least two important duties. The day that called him to the Philippines will be efficiently covered, doubtless, because of his familiarity with Philippine questions, and because of the confidence reposed in him by the Filipinos. He will be able to remove their misplaced ideas of immediate independence, while reassuring them of the intention of the government to increase their local self government as rapidly as they are capable of administering it.

The other errand leads Secretary Taft to Tokio. It will be in his power to convey a message to the Japanese emperor and his advisers that ought to convince them of the pacific attitude of the United States. It may be that he can accomplish a much more difficult task—that of reaching an understanding with the Japanese which may lead to the making of an exclusion treaty. If Secretary Taft should find a way to remove the friction between the two races that front the Pacific, his journey will rank among the most important of the embassies relating to that ocean.

Name Sounded Familiar.

I was turning over the leaves of a magazine one afternoon and my little brother, three years old happened to be standing near. As I turned one page I stared on a lovely painting of Joan of Arc. "Do you know who she is, Ralph?" I asked. He looked at it for a second and then he said: "Oh, yes, I know; that's—that's—oh, you know—the gentleman who killed the deaf ears. He could not be otherwise than an optimist and an idealist. The battle he would punish, not because he was bloodthirsty, but because it was his bounden duty to do so. Mr Taft is not a chronic kicker. He does not grow fat on other people's misfortunes."

Pledges For Taft.

Numerous papers in Colorado, and as well as in all the other states through which he passed, took the occasion to come out for Taft if they had not already done so, the first in the mountain state being the Pueblo Chieftain.

The Denver people were especially enthusiastic over the coming of Taft because they are working tooth and nail to secure the great Republican national convention, and the first state which has been platted by Denver is Nicknames of American Cities.

A purely western distinction is that of Duluth as the Zenith city of the United States given as it from its situation at the head of the waters of Lake Superior. Another city which derives its name from its situation is South Adams, Mass, called the Tunnel City, from the fact that it is at the end of that "great bore" the Hoosac tunnel, which was so many years in course of construction and is length of almost four miles was completed. Peoria, Ill, resident in the city of the Celestial City, from the fact that it was owned by the capital of the Chinese empire. Racine, Wis, is known as the Reef City, from the nature of its settlers made there. The Lowell City is Lowell, Mass., for a like reason as is Hopkins, in the same state, the Paper City.

World's Birth Rate.

The average birth rate of the world is one baby at every beat of the human heart, or one and a fraction every second, or every minute, 150 every hour; 100,000 every day, and 36,792,000, or equal to nearly half the population of the United States, every year.

Literary Note.

"What's the matter?" asked the proprietor of the book store, seeing all his coarse features toward the front. "There's a lady there who wants to buy a volume of poems" the book-blower called back as he hurled four more to have a look at her.

French Duel Test of Courage.

The only circumstance which will take the trouble or notice in modern French duels is that they seldom draw blood. The fact which is curious in the French mind is the alert with bugles are that, whether a duelist come off by any manner of good or not, a gentleman take part in a duel without deliberate risk of his life. His act, though probably only conventional, may turn out to be fatal. And even though, in general, it amounts to a mere formality, it involves, on the part of all concerned, a brave acknowledgment that anyone who pretends to belong to civilized society must hold himself responsible for any deeds his from the code of conduct which its traditions prescribe and which its existence involves.—Scribner

They All Say That.

"I met Hamlet's father yesterday, typical baldheaded man, isn't he?" Typical! How do you know?" "Why, I hadn't known him ten minutes before he was telling me how his mother used to whip him because his hair was so thick he couldn't keep it combed."

Each one passed soft reverently hung in her knitting to describe the kind of burial she would like and the place where she would like to be buried. A recent but popular comer, who is connected with Irving been born in the Emerald Isle, wasted enthusiastic over the cemetery she described with fond tonight for herself, she described the beautiful flowers she had seriously planned the time in attractions she had given to the cemetery gardener. She has gotten every thing in readiness, and could die at any time, knowing her grave would be all right. "Why," she wound up, "when I die all I have to do is to walk out there."

"The Devils Bible."

The volume which is called "the devil's bible" is in the library of the royal palace of Sweden. It is a huge copy of the Scriptures, written on 300 prepared asses' skins. One report says that it took 160 years to complete it, and that it is so large that it has a table by itself. Another tradition says that it was completed in a single night by the assistance of his Satanic majesty, who when the work was finished, gave the monk a portrait of himself for a frontispiece. The illuminated initials of the devil still adorns the front page of the work. The volume was carried off by the Swedes in the Thirty Years' War from a convent in Prague.

Tongue-tied Talkers.

How many educated people there are who have no more than a peasant's vocabulary. They do not use the words that a peasant uses, but they do not improve upon them. Difficult Breathing

Short breath, fluttering, palpitation, sinking spells are symptoms of a weak heart, struggling to do its work. It must keep the blood in circulation to carry nourishment to make flesh, bone and muscle, and remove the worn-out particles. When it cannot do this, it must have help. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure gives strength to the heart nerves and muscles, and increases the heart action.

"I was troubled so that I can so much imagined a health. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure helped me from the first. I can now walk or climb stairs without fear of pain or distress. I can do what Heart Cure has done for me." Mrs. Ada Ind. "As I would be at liberty, I had difficulty in walking. I could not walk a block without stopping and I thought I was dying. Another to live without relief. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure helped me from the first. I can now walk all morning without fatigue and sleep all night. I feel like a new woman. I shall always bless the day I had heard of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure." Mrs. Ada Ind. Sold by druggists. "Look at All the Ugly Men!"

Senator Charles W. Fulton of Oregon was a stunner when methods were as effective as Delilah's. He would begin something like this: "Well, I must say I'm disappointed at this crowd! Look at all the ugly men! Look at those ears! Look at the hair! Look at those noses! How does it happen that such a fine collection features on the masculine side have been able to attract so many beautiful female partners! Here I've been a bachelor for 60 years; but if I had known you fellows could do as well as you've done I'd never been a bachelor for 15 minutes. Why, my this heart-to-heart method he plays himself on the feet of terms with his hearers and then turn a lot of pointed questions. The idea of it all was appealing to an audience in which there were 1,000 men to large one woman. Nobody ever thought that it has a table by itself. Another tradition says that it was completed in a single night by the assistance of his Satanic majesty, who when the work was finished, gave the monk a portrait of himself for a frontispiece. The illuminated initials of the devil still adorns the front page of the work. The volume was carried off by the Swedes in the Thirty Years' War from a convent in Prague.

MICHIGAN BOY A HERO

UNABLE TO SAVE BROTHER AFTER HERCULEAN EFFORT.

Eighteen-Year-old Youth Attempts Wife with William Falcon, Professional Hangman Out of Job in New Jersey.

William Falcon, 18-year-old son of William H. Falcon, the hangman of Sing Sing, who was drowned in the Grand River, Michigan, on Sunday, July 14, while attempting to save his brother, Frank, from drowning, is a hero, according to the story told by the survivor, Frank Falcon, who was saved by his brother's efforts. The story of the young hero's death, which was received in this city Monday, July 17, by his father, William Falcon, who is now in Sing Sing prison, awaiting the result of his appeal from the sentence of death for the murder of his wife, William Falcon, who was a well-known character in Hudson, Lake County, Michigan, where he was known as "Dutch" Falcon, and Jennie Fox, a young Indian woman, who was known as "Indian Jennie."

The story of young Falcon's death, as told by his father, William Falcon, is as follows:

William Falcon, Jr., and his brother Frank were bathing in the Grand River, near Grand Rapids, Michigan, when Frank, who was a poor swimmer, got into deep water and was drowned before William could reach him. The boys had been warned not to go in the river by their father, who was a professional hangman, and had been ordered not to return to their home in Hudson, Lake County, Michigan, because of the death of their mother, who was hanged by their father for the murder of their father's second wife, Jennie Fox, a young Indian woman, at Jersey City, New Jersey, July 7, 1903.

William Falcon, Jr., was a hero in every sense of the word, according to the story told by his father, who was a professional hangman, and had been in the employ of the Sheriffs of Essex County, New Jersey, for many years. The boy was working on a farm near Hudson, Michigan, when his father, who was then living in Jersey City, New Jersey, with his wife, Jennie Fox, wrote to his son William, and told him that he was out of a job, and that he was going to Hudson, Michigan, to live on the farm with his son William, and that he would be home in a few days. The boy met his father at the station in Hudson, Michigan, and they went to the farm together, where they lived happily together for a few days, when the father's second wife, Jennie Fox, came to the farm and induced the father to let her son Frank come to live with them on the farm. The father consented, and young Frank came to the farm to live with his father and his brother William, who was known in Hudson as "Dutch" Falcon.

The father's second wife, Jennie Fox, was a woman of bad character, and she had been married several times before she married William Falcon, Jr., and was married to a man named Frank Fox, who was a brother of the Indian Jennie Fox, who married William Falcon, Jr., and who was known in Hudson as "Indian Jennie." Jennie Fox had left her husband, Frank Fox, and had married William Falcon, Jr., and had lived with him for a few months, when she induced her husband to let her son Frank come to live with them on the farm.

HIS GREATEST DEED

EVANGELIST TELLS OF VICTORY HE PRIZES.

Story of a Woman with a Sword, and Two Souls Brought to Grace—Chief Flower of His American Campaign.

Gipsy Smith, the English evangelist who sailed for home recently, professes to a reporter in Australia, with the story the same as before he left all a slower given in his home, of the greatest conquest, in his opinion, he had made in this country on his tour of seven months.

He said he had preached 450 times, had answered innumerable calls of anxious souls and had gone thousands miles to profess a Christian life. The convert of whom he was most proud was a fashionable woman in a Missouri city, who had come to the meetings with a sneer. But was not that sneer on her face when she came out? The woman was not one of notable beauty, but a pronounced one. Her face was expressive of marvelous vitality. It was not the beauty of the Madonna, but the spirited face that attracted her to my meetings.

Her husband was anything but a man for God. At the first meeting she attended she was startled when the organ began and the alarm sounded. Her husband was a gambler and gunslinger of hard fame. There was a woman telling little girl in attendance on the woman who begged her husband to stop swearing.

The girl had married the man had been converting a great sorrow and the child also had gone to worship at the altar to pray for her father. The woman was mind she should do.

"How long I have put my husband!" she asked. "I may destroy my home if I can help it."

"Where is your husband?" I asked.

She told me he was in Chicago. "Do that I may! I would talk to that woman of the church that then attend at Chicago."

She then told a long story. He had the woman to telegraph to her husband to come home at once. She did so and he responded. She put him with tears in her eyes but a smiling face for she had kept her promising to pray, and asked him to come to her meetings.

He was surprised at first that he attended, so called home for such a purpose, and was not inclined to like it. He saw that his wife was working in ways he knew not and resolved to be vexatious to listen to the behavior he knew he had made his husband. He attended half a dozen meetings and in the end repented him and he became a real convert.

"If his enthusiasm he asked if there was anything he could do to make life right.

"Yes," he said, "Sally."

"Sally was great lack the practice with the woman who had ruined her husband. Sally was in service as if her heart would break.

"Why, he asked, let us take the woman home with us and see that right. I have placed in the same was converted. I thank God for this day."

Gipsy Smith said he had been "Home is a happy household and there is no place in the world where there was secret, and love where there was doubt and suspicion. The reunion of that couple in a little girl in blind cotton Sunday School, I feel that it is not a true soldier of God reconciliation only weakens life arms."

USED BIBLE AS CIPHER.

Verse from Solomon Told of Marriage Engagement.

When she left her home in the small town to come to New York to take up a special course of study, her pet sister was fast reaching the crisis of a love affair, like the little sister. The pet sister was a great who whose young lady, and had long kept a goodly train of suitors watching. Was this affair to be the grand of fair? The elder sister hoped so, for she liked the young man cordially—thought he was just the sort to make a proper brother-in-law.

But the weeks passed and not a bit of definite news about the progress of the affair that the older sister receive in her city boarding house. She became anxious. Louisa she thought must not go on unknowingly trifling in such important matters.

Then one night about ten o'clock just as she was going to bed, came a telegram. The servant brought it to the elder sister who was sleepy enough to be thoroughly refreshed by the late nap. Mechanically somehow, How curious it looked! At length she gathered courage to open it. This is what she read:

"Solomon six three. Louise Robinson six three. Whatever is that? Oh, why you stupid it of course means the Song of Solomon, sixth chapter, third verse. But—and her cheeks flushed with shame—she had no Bible.

There was a great scurrying about the boarding house to find a copy of the sacred book. The girls were excited too in vain. On all sides the cry arose: "Who's got a Bible? Just think of the sister trying to write that to her without knowing what that verse was!" It would have been true like a woman to be down to pleasant, dreamy content to know that she could easily her curiosity in the morning.

The faithfully, good soul, came to the rescue. She was in her bedroom when the call for a Bible. Up to her room with it! How she laughed and how she teased "Harriet!" and laughed for the verse was.

"I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine."

An Embryo Genius, Surely.

A little urchin, not long shoes on, stumbling down the stairs of a house who on suddenly is destined to high rank as a Tammany Boss, now the Sun. Tells this boy was summoned to remain after hours and write an essay of 500 words on Bribe. This is what he wrote.

"A bribe is little birds, for in the room long when I am trying to take a nap they keep me awake with their twitterings. (Millions, twittering, twittering twitterings twittering, twittering, twittering, twitter.) And so on to the end of about 25 words more. And when I got mad and turn over and try to get to sleep they will continue to chirp, chirp, chirp, chirp, chirp, chirp, and so on as before. Bribe, too, are useful sometimes. Thus I won't do nothing all day but fly around and peck, peck, peck, peck, peck, peck, peck, peck. And so on until the reputation of being the worst boy ever played.

The Real Obstacle at Panama.

The white man at Panama must learn that which he cannot endure. We have proven that he cannot allow mosquitoes to live him, and now it is generally acknowledged that he cannot allow the sun out to strike his head and live.

We eliminated the mosquitoes, but we cannot eliminate the sun. The soldier who deliberately and unnecessarily exposes himself to bullets when he could use cover is put into a fool, but he is not a true soldier. Our fatal recklessness only weakens life army.

The engineer who can work all day in the mine in Michigan or New York should not do it in Panama, writes an army engineer in Bull Chariot E. Wood, chief, in Harper's, and he attempts to explain why the work instead of helping it slows.

STRENUOUS OCCUPATION.

Fish and Game Wardens Find Plenty of Work to Do.

C. N. Smith and I. D. Eddy, state game and fish wardens, who have been in this section quite a little of late, went to Traverse City where they gave out an interview to the Evening Record telling of some of the details of the work that is being looked after by the department. We give it for what it is worth.

In regard to the fishing industry the wardens have their hands full to cope with the fishermen. They report to all kinds of underhanded means to try to fool the wardens. One of the greatest crimes of the fishermen is the keeping of the No. 2 grade of whitefish. The No. 2 grade is the fish that have not matured, usually weighing under two pounds. These are confiscated in great quantities and fish taken by the wardens are sent to such institutions as the asylum here and other state institutions.

For instance, on a catch of 2,000 pounds as were found only 500 pounds of fish that were legal to be taken. Over 1500 pounds were taken on the east shore from the Sho shown to Frankfort in one trip made by the wardens a short time ago. On the Manitou Island there were found 4700 pounds of No. 2 fish.

When one realizes that the wardens are not able to catch every offender the quantity of the young fish that are caught are sold each year must crowd up to the millions of pounds. This matter not only is a source of trouble to the state, but it cuts off the fish supply for the fishermen himself. All the small fish that they do not dare to ship some of the fishermen salt, and when a sailing vessel comes along they load her hold with the salt fish and put on a covering of hemlock bark and sail to Chicago with a supposed load of the bark. This is only one of the many ways that are used to market these fish illegally.

The wardens are handicapped due to the fact that they are not provided with means to do more efficient work. They need fast boats to overtake the fish boats. At present the movements of the wardens are known in many cases due to the fact that they are not provided with means to do more efficient work. They need fast boats to overtake the fish boats. At present the movements of the wardens are known in many cases and in times is not to let the fisherman along the lost know of their coming. This gives them time to hide fish, or hide their illegal catches and salted fish so when the warden turns up there is nothing doing. Many times, however, the wardens find the hidden fish then the hardest part follows. It is almost impossible to get a conviction. They are, however, sometimes able to convict by taking the trials to other counties. There is much trouble in getting evidence, and strange to say, the local people aiding a fellow citizen are slow to offer any assistance to the state wardens.

A new act to regulate the license of commercial fishing has now come into effect. All boats engaged in the fishing industry must be registered and pay a fee of from one to twenty-five dollars, according to the boat used. Row boats pay one dollar and the steam tugs are required to pay twenty-five. Tugs not owned by residents are much higher, being as much as $200 in some cases. This fund is turned over to the state game and fish warden.

The inland fishing and hunting illegally would make another interesting story by itself.

The freight rate on suckers shipped in New York last year was $10,000, showing what an enormous business the lake fishermen do in that line.

Boyne Citizen: For several weeks rumor has been persistant in Boyne City that the largest employers of labor in the city, the W. H. White Company, contemplated selling all their holdings here and were going to Lake Far West. These rumors had it out day that Cobbs & Mitchell of Cadillac were to take over all these possessions, another day some other concern were going to take hold of the destinies of this thriving town. Some rumors traveled around the business people, the working people, and all classes, and as they traveled, like the rolling of a huge snowball, everybody added a little more to it, until some people were getting scared, many saying Boyne City would soon be on the decline. A representative of the Citizen interviewed W. H. White just before he left Tuesday on a business trip to Chicago, in regard to these rumors. Mr. White was very emphatic in denying these many rumors, saying the W. H. White Co. had never thought of such a thing as selling out their interests here.

Petoskey News: The statement that there was a deal on by which there was to be a change of ownership of the Continental House of this city was verified Tuesday by the transfer of the title to the property of W. L. McMannus, Jr., who takes over the hotel and its business, together with the plumber block and the ground facing Mitchell street from the present structure to the alley next to Dibble's plumbing shop. The consideration for the same is given out as $100,000 and the deal is all closed and Mr. McMannus has practically assumed the management of the place, although it may be several days before Mr. and Mrs. Cushman vacate and Mr. and Mrs. McMannus move in. When asked for information as to his future plans Mr. McMannus stated that he had engaged the entire corps of employees who have been with Mr. Cushman'and for the present, at least, there will be no change whatever. Later he expects to make some changes in the house itself, but the fact that the old management has succeeded so admirably in pleasing the public is a strong argument in favor of retaining as many of the employees as possible.

THE MORAL OF PORT ROYAL.

Something We Can Learn from the Teachings of History.

It is possible to crush and destroy that which was reared in the mind of God to be a power for good in the church. And it is possible for a sinner, hard, for lucre and noble souls to make monkeys and to be overwhelmed in admiration by the power of truth, he forget that the whole is made up of the parts and that the whole body must be fully formed and kept together in order that that every joint supplieth." If the body is to be built up in love. There is only the WHOLE we must neglect than the teachings of history; there is nothing which will at once so chase and so warm as to those teachings. In a work the value of which is out of all proportion to its size, an eminent professor of ecclesiastical history has told us how to make those teachings. The diverging tendencies of spiritual thought alike "arising from the fewness of our Lord himself. They are not avoidable, but complimentary; they are both necessary to the church. When shall we learn this lesson, when will those who keep the Christian creed whole and undefiled recognize that it is always good that heresies come? The Pauline, the Catholic, so as it is so well put in Dr Hugh's book the mystic and the Calvinistic, will always be found side by side in the Christian church. The Port Royal is the story of these divergent tendencies in theology—Jesuits and Port Royalist represented two tendencies. The seventeenth century was not ripe for toleration, Port Royal was crushed and crushed because it stood for what was unworthy as against the worldly world.—From "The Story of Port Royal," by Ethel Romanes.

BIG FORKS FOR ESKIMOS.

Table Implements That Had to Be Made to Order.

Six hundred and forty forks, silver plated and each a foot long, formed a part of the baggage of E. Tunnell Lyon, who left Philadelphia recently for Point Barrow, Alaska, says the Philadelphia Record. Each of the forks weighed a pound and a half and the whole accordingly weighed nearly half a ton. The forks were in packages of 10 each, 64 packages in all, and the whole divided into two bales of 32 packages each. Mr. Lyon takes them to Point Barrow, the most northerly point in American Alaska, as presents to the chief Eskimo tribe there and their members, to pay for some of a promise made two years ago. Then the forks of a visiting Russian party continually interested the natives, who watched their use with deep interest. Some curiosity having been offered to the small size of the fork, which, perhaps, suffered by comparison with a walrus harpoon, Mr. Dyer had those made to order. He left for Seattle on his way northward and expects to return with a large supply of walrus ivory. Timing his return trip with the "open water" of 1903.

—Subscribe for the SENTINEL and get the American Farmer—both for $1.50.

—Mrs. McCrone and daughter, of St. Ignace, are guests of Mrs. Capt. Finucan.

The Sugar Company will take in beets next Monday, and expects to start the factory Monday, Nov. 4th.

—The best harvest has begun and a number of tests have been made which show up well in sugar percentage.

—The editor has been quite ill four day this week, and is here to-day for hearance on his friends for the short time he is able to be out of the SENTINEL.

—Frank Snyder and wife, of Atlanta, have been here the ten days visiting their son, O. C. Snyder, foreman of the SENTINEL office.

—Harrison Bedford left Monday for Bayside, N. Y., where he will remain the coming winter, in charge of his lumbering interests there. Mrs. Bedford will join him later.

—Petoskey Record: The Charlevoix Sentinel is in the middle of the 20th year of its existence, and is as young, lusty and vigorous as when it started, with all it has learned from experience added. Its editor, Willard A. Smith, seems well and good for many years of usefulness.

—Dark assume was the scene of a lively fire Friday morning. The house owned by Hon. John Nemesh and occupied by Peter Olsen, caught fire from a defective stove pipe, and before it was discovered the entire upper story was enveloped in flames. The furniture on the ground floor was saved, but the clothing of the family was all burned. Hall house and contents were fully insured. The house will be rebuilt.

—Under the head of "Engineers Come to Cuba on Pleasure—May Stay," the Havana Post says: "H. L. Francis, of Charlevoix, Mich., and Nelson Greer, of Norfolk, Va., arrived in Havana yesterday. They expected to go to Mexico, but have been offered employment by the department of public works, and expect to remain in Cuba. Recently they were employed on the extension of the Florida East Coast R. R. from Miami to Key West."

—The American Society of Equity of North America, which held its state meeting in Traverse City a few days ago, is a new society distinctively for farmers and is growing rapidly. There are about 3,400 members in Michigan and large additions are being made weekly to the membership roll. At the meeting of the state delegates were in attendance from all parts of the state. The objects of the society are declared to be: To promote the welfare of the farmer; to obtain profitable prices for all products of the farm, garden and orchard; to obtain equitable rates of transportation; to obtain new markets and enlarge old ones; to establish institutions of learning for the sons and daughters; to improve the highways, and for each any movement for the betterment of the farmer.

—Chas. Emery has accepted a position in the store of Frank Gelken, at Pellston.

—Chas. A. Hetshart, of this city, has purchased a farm near Lansing, and expects to remove there this fall or winter.

—The Upper Peninsula railroads announce that they will not carry hunters' supplies free this year. Only true baggage can go free.

—Capt. Ira Morehouse writes us that he has arrived at his home in Maine. On his way east he went into Canada on a bear hunt and got his bear.

—S. M. Sie and Sons have a new funeral car that is a very marked improvement over the old one. It was used for the first time Sunday at the funeral of Luke Hallett.

—The report of the Soldiers' Relief Commission to the board of supervisors last week showed a disbursing over $200 dollars paid out the past year and expenses of over $1600 to their credit. The commission recommended that the Supervisors make no appropriation this year for them. This report is little but unusual and ought to make the taxpayers feel that their money is being spent judiciously.

—State Superintendent of Public Instruction Wright reports that there are now thirty-eight normal training classes in Michigan, for having been established this year. About 6000 students are now being instructed in these schools. As a result of the new system of training teachers in these schools it is announced over 20 per cent of the teachers in the rural schools of the state are trained teachers. The system was inaugurated four years ago when not more than 5 per cent of the teachers had received normal training of any kind.

—Last Wednesday the County Normal Class, in response to an invitation, visited the board of supervisors at the court house. Not to be outdone in courtesy, the board invited the board to visit their room, which they did Friday afternoon. The board took with them as a token of their gallantry, a blue leather upholstered chair, which was presented to the class. Supervisor Gallagher, of Peaine, being the only bachelor member of the board, was accorded as special honors by the class, much to the chagrin of the other twenty one members of the board.

—The following is from the Charlotte, (Eaton county) Tribune of Oct. 18, and ought to satisfy the farmers of the grand Traverse region that this is a pretty good section, for our people have had none of the discouragements the Eaton county farmer mentions to contend with: at least we had no frosts at that time: "Pretty near an off year," said Mr. Conger (farmer of Bellevue, this morning as he reviewed the bean prospect. "Wheat mostly a failure, corn frozen, with very little ripe, and now beans only fit for hogs. Not a glowing prospect for the American farmer." The point seemed to be well taken.

—When the delegates to the next meeting to the grand lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, assembled in Jackson this week, they were given their first glimpse at the new home for aged members of the order, their widows and orphans. A handsome building of pleasing brick, which will cost nearly $60,000 when it is completed, is almost ready for occupancy. Six years ago the order purchased Cooley park, of eighty one acres, forty of which is woodland, the rest farmland. At the last meeting of the grand lodge it was voted to build a home to accommodate eventually five people, and it will be one of the principal objects of interest of the meeting this year.

—Northport Leader: The Charlevoix Sentinel is meeting its fifth milestone and is still guided by that veteran editor, Willard A. Smith, who has worn more shoulder pads and harness callouses than any editor in northern Michigan except brother E. L. Sprague of the Traverse City Eagle. The Sentinel has always been a "do something" newspaper. Editor Smith has put his pen to gall and worm wood and often his editorials have stung with hot stuff. He has made enemies and he has made friends. This is necessary if a newspaper would live to a good old age. A do nothing, know nothing policy has its place only in the green structure. We hope brother Smith will continue on and on and on till Charlevoix can point to him with pride as the lick that connects a great city with a wilderness, and that the thorns that Willard has been strewing along the pathway will spring up roses to bless him with their fragrance in his declining days.

THE ELECTRIC ROAD.

Officials of the Company Here in Conference With Board of Commerce Officials.

Messrs. Saunders and Hennessy of the Carter Construction Co., having in charge the Grand Traverse Railroad project, were here Saturday in consultation with our board of commerce officials. The Company has issued its prospectus, which is in the form of a booklet, and contains some very excellent views of Charlevoix and Traverse City.

The prospectus treats that portion of the project north of Elk Rapids as follows:

"The Grand Traverse Railroad has offered to the people of Charlevoix, and the region intermediate to Elk Rapids, $200,000 of first mortgage bonds, for subscription at par—the money to be payable to the construction company on completion and operation of a line of road between Elk Rapids and Charlevoix. The total issue would be for the initial construction and equipment of the road between Elk Rapids and Charlevoix, to be $1,250,000."

Cedar Operations.

It is not expected that cedar operations in the Lower Peninsula this winter will be as extensive as usual, says the Bay City Tribune. The cost of supplies and labor is so high that small jobbers will not be able to get money to operate with. A large portion of cedar cut is by small operators who take contracts from owners of timber to put in lots of cedar. At the present prices of supplies of all kinds and the high wages it is a serious proposition for a small operator to do any business. The price of cedar, however, is an incentive to operators to put in all they can.

Cedar railroad ties are first at an increase of 10 cents, and those of the Straits they are bringing 8½ cents.

Ties are 10 and 11 cents, and poles are sold according to location. Short poles are not moving as freely as the long ones.

The lighter prices obtained for shingles will not be realized. The output of other cedar products as timber owners will put every avail able stick into cedar ladies.

Why Should Not the Farmers Organize.

Yes, why not?

The Grange is right in its way, but it has never yet presented a proposition that would protect the interests of the farmer successfully. The Grange as an educational and social agency has been a grand success, but it has never been a militant power. The farmer is conservative, in the sense of the "big stick" doctrine.

About every industry in the realm of national activity has its union. Even the doctors combine. The printers tried it in Charlevoix county, but overshot the mark by trying to correct the board of supervisors. In many towns even the merchants have combined. The reaper that the farmer owns was bought from a combine. The barbed wire in his fences is made by a trust. When he goes to his market town with the produces of his farm or garden he sells them, in most cases to people whose earnings are fixed by a labor union, from which there is no appeal.

And yet the farmer is under and above them all, in the economy of industrial life. The opinion board of trade in the metropolis, the banker between the grated windows and the cash vault, are but the commercial agents of the men who reape the grain. Yes, even the Harrimans, the Goulds and the Hills are but mock drivers for the farmer.

There have been strikes, strikes, strikes, but who ever heard of a farmers' strike? The farmers are told that "like law of supply and demand" governs the price of farm products. This is true, unquestionably, but there is another law—the law of equity—that has always been in this unwritten code but Charlevoix Board of Commerce Entertains the Board of Supervisors.

A most pleasing and praiseworthy function was the entertainment of the Board of Supervisors by the Charlevoix Board of Commerce together with forty of the representative business and professional men of the City, gathered at the hospitable board of Mine host, Bartlett. The tables were arranged in the form of the letter T with the chairman of the Board of Supervisors, our old and genial friend, George Bailey, in the center and the fellow supervisors filling the table leaking the top of the letter, the committee with Ex-Mayor, Harvey L. Hadley, at the bottom. The cards of invitation announced it as an oyster supper but the spread included several messes in addition, besides beautiful supplies of various sideishes, a relish etc., gotten up and served in a manner to delight the eye and palate of an epicure.

At 6:15 the guests were seated and after a short time the viands began and disappeared at an hour when eyes crossing vivacity. When the fables were cleared and the cigars lighted, the president of the Board of Commerce, Mr. F. E. Trawell, in a few short but well chosen remarks, welcomed the guests and introduced Ex-Mayor Hiddings as toastmaster. And right then the fun was unbridled, which continued to flow throughout the evening. Mr. Hiddings was at his best. His gallies of wit and humor got everybody at ease and heightened the feeling of fellowship which prompted the function and characterized it throughout. Mr. Hidding's references to his own political career, and particularly to his experience as a supervisor which was cut short by his township slipping out from under him, were Birthday Party.

A very pleasant social gathering at which about 50 participated, was the double birthday party on Tuesday evening, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Bellinger.

Mrs. Clara Dennis and Miss Celia Wilmar, whose birthdays were celebrated, received many delightful and useful and valuable presents which consisted principally of china, cut glass and silverware. The evening's entertainment consisted of games, vocal and instrumental music, in which master jaists took the cake, after which very dainty refreshments were served by the young ladies, and at the midnight hour approached all left for their respective homes wishing the young ladies many happy returns of the event.

Gov. Warner and the Legislature.

The special session of the state legislature called by Governor Warner to pass a workable primary election law, ended at midnight on the 18th. A primary law was passed, but it is so far from being such as the governor demanded that he denounced some of its provisions in vigorous terms in a special message to the legislature. He will sign bill, because it provides for a single primary day instead of several and because it permits an expression of the voters on the election of United States senators. He denounced the law because of a provision which restores the caucus system in many counties, and the election of delegates to conventions, and because of the retention of the 40 per cent clause governing the nomination of candidates for governor and lieutenant governor.

The primary bill was drawn by the "boss" senators, who offered it with the stipulation that the bill must be passed as drawn or no primary legislation would be enacted.

CHAPTER XVII

In the course of an hour Uncle Joseph came as was arranged, and on the day following Medly and Lizzie made the box, lining it with a rail, generously built upon changing under twelve of nearly twenty, and fully warranting all Mrs. Nourse had said in its praise. He seemed interested, pleased and astonished, though when we were assembled at Mr. Hemmings, Medly noticed that in his surprise he did not forget to take off his hat. Lizzie thought he looked very well in his Sunday clothes, and Medly was quite as much pleased with his appearance as he was with the box, which he at once proceeded to fill with the old clothes he had brought with him, and which, when he had finished, he locked and put in the wagon, saying he would take it home with him and distribute the clothes among his poor relations.

Uncle Joseph seemed to enjoy Mr Nourse's joke, and when, after the box was given to him, Medly asked him if he had any more "Mr. Nourses" to send out, he laughed long and loudly, and said he guessed not, but he would do the best he could with what he had

IS LABOR'S FRIEND

Secretary Taft Is Defended Against False Charges by Frederick Judson, Counsel to Labor Unions.

There Is No Foundation For the Suggestion That Judge Taft Was Unfriendly, in His Employe Summary in the Matter of Injunctions.

"There is no foundation therefore for the suggestion that the decisions of Judge Taft were in any sense unfriendly to labor."

This is the summary, designed with all emphasis, with which Frederick Judson, the eminent attorney of St. Louis, closes his article, "The Labor Decisions of Judge Taft," in the Review of Reviews.

This defense, in answer to the repeated allegations by circulars in the interest of "administration and Secretary Taft's candidacy, that Secretary Taft was responsible to organized labor when he set aside Judge Jenkins' injunction against the Bucksteve case of 1907, practically from the name of counsel issued.

Frederick Judson for years has been in the employ of labor unions as chief counsel. He has appeared for several of the railway brotherhoods, usually when other labor unions were doing so, involved. He has won legal decisions for them and has gone down to defeat with them. Therefore, the foregoing defense of Secretary Taft has amount to beyond a defense by organized labor.

Analyzes His Decisions.

In his article Mr. Judson goes over the judicial career of Mr. Taft and analyzes in order all of the cases involving labor questions he has passed on.

The first case was in 1893, when Judge Taft was on the superior bench of Cincinnati. A tobacconist sued an editor for inducing his employes with whom it was in dispute, declared a secondary boycott against another firm because it sold tobacco to his employes. The question of involving innocent third parties in labor disputes is now generally conceded to be illegitimate labor unionists. In 1895 Judge Taft in this time on the federal bench, enunciated practically the same doctrine in the Toledo & Ann Arbor railway case. The brotherhood engineers of the Toledo road went on a strike. The employes of connecting railways also members of the brotherhood, acting under rules of the brotherhood, refused to receive from, or deliver car, cars to the Toledo road. The court said that while it was the privilege of the engineers on the connecting railways to quit work or collectively, so long as this were employed in interstate commerce they could not combine to refuse to perform a duty incident to interstate commerce such as the delivery of cars to another road. The Brotherhood rescinded their 12, and since that action the organization has prospered more than before. It is now acknowledged that the rule was an irritating one, and that the effort of enforcing it was a mistake. The third case was the enjoinment of Debs, during the Debs insurrection, for contempt in 1894, when he failed a restraining order forbidding illegal interference with the business of the Cincinnati Southern railway, this in the month of a receiver appointed by the federal court. In this case Judge Taft made the following lucid statement of the rights of the labor organizations, after quoting by attorneys of labor unless, when sued by other, judges to dissolve injunctions.

Rights of Unions.

"The employes of the receiver had the right to organize into or join a type of Unions which would take action as to the terms of their employment. It is a benefit to them and to the public that laborers should unite for their common interest and for lawful purposes. They have labor to sell. If they stand together they are often able, all of them, to obtain better prices for their labor than dealing with each single employer, because the necessities of the single employer may compel him to accept any price offered him. The accumulation of a fund for those who feel that the wages offered are below the truthfulness market value of such labor is desirable. They have the right to appoint officers who shall advise them as to the course to be taken in relations with their employers. They may unite with other unions. The officers they appoint, or any other person they choose to listen to may advise them as to the proper course to be taken, both in regard to their common employment and if they choose to appoint agents, to may order them on pain of expulsion from the union peaceably to leave the employ of their employer because any of the terms of the employment are unsatisfactory.

Recognition of Labor.

There is a definite recognition of the rights of labor to organize, to strike in concert, to take counsel from unions with other unions and to accumulate industrial war funds. Officers they appoint or any other person they choose to listen to may freely counsel with them. Even the watching Colorado is held within the law when he orders men to leave their employment on penalty of expulsion from the union if they refuse.

Upon the publication of the Judson article, the officials of a large number of different labor organizations have expressed from it and commented upon it most favorably.

The Limit of Athletics.

"Of course," began the athletic girl, "I am accomplish, fleecy accomplish tests by now. I can climb a greased pole, dangle from the curtain rod, handle the dumb bells and turn a double somersault without landing on my head every time, but what I am trying to do now is to enter a surface-water speed-race, walk along a vacant seat set take it gracefully before the footlights and signaling pick of the car starting can lead me in the lap of a fellow passenger."

TAFT LEADS IN WALKAWAY

Los Angeles Times' Straw Vote Shows Astounding Vote for Choice Candidate.

At the heels of the Chicago Tribune poll, which showed governor William H. Taft to be the choice for the presidency by an overwhelming vote which foretold more than the votes of all other candidates combined came the result of the straw vote conducted by the Los Angeles Times, which more emphatically in the Republican favor. Votes from every ward of city responded to the request from the Times, which made an effort to secure the sentiment in every district. The accompanying result follows:

Taft	2431
Hughes	329
Fairbanks	18
Cannon	6
Cortelyou	193
Lafollette	47
Foraker	85

And this remarkable endorsement of President Taft and the Republican administration after the numerous reports that a Democratic administration sentiment existed in California.

SECRETARY TAFT.

(From the Seattle Wash., Times, Democratic.)

William Howard Taft, at present secretary of war, has been in Seattle twice within now for the year of Seattle to form an opinion of him. Most of us have had an opinion for several years, which was not at all to his discredit, but the opinion we had was one of that kind we are apt to form out of newspapers and histories which sometimes fail to give the inimate, personal touch which the American public demands of a man before it is really willing to take him to its heart and accept him as its own. In this respect the people of Seattle are really fortunate in being able to know Secretary Taft.

It is not exaggeration to say that there has never been a man of his national importance in Seattle who has made the intimately pleasing personal impression which has been made by Secretary Taft. This includes even Theodore Roosevelt. The visit of Mr. Roosevelt, a little more than four years ago, created more of an impression because of his position and the things for which he stood and is this respect, of course, his visit overshadowed that of our present guest. But as far as the man is concerned, the opinion is decidedly in the favor of Taft. This is not the opinion of a few, a dozen or two of the few who have talked with him in private, but the unanimous opinion of all of those who have seen him on the streets or on the platform of all those who have even near him audible.

Even if he is geographically just when he talks to us, and the little touches of local color in his speeches indicate the result of intimate contacting upon the part of those who have sought to arrange his dates of works as well as his hours of eating and sleeping, he has not struck a single discordant note. Even if he has done dared a bit, the result has brought no more than an indulgent laugh. The spirit of the whole thing—the unaffected effort to do something that would please us—has been too apparent. We have seen a man who has taken his work a whole lot to do to recent years in figuring out the distance between Manhattan and footlags and Bangkok and Sulu Sulu to be as well point of a timber cutter upon the forest lines of Puyallup and Puyallup. Neither can we expect him to distinguish of local among Snohomish Sky-komish, Swinomish and Samamish. Having been in public life for about 20 years Secretary Taft seems and assures us that they must be agreeable beautiful, and he does it in such a way that we see the sincerity of what he says for such opinions and like long for the way in which he gets out of such alleged prejudiced.

Aside from the fact that there never was a living man whom about strangers and not enlarge a little but when he was referred to as the next president of the United States, Mr. Taft has been extremely reticent upon the subject of the next national election, and the session public has seemed to reason he has politely in that respect. His position has been realized here because the people of this section are so thoroughly for Roosevelt if Roosevelt will accept. The northwest does not lightly set on one that so entirely overturn it for another. Secretary Taft is in the unfortunate position of an idol whose pedestal is at present occupied.

But if it is not Roosevelt, the north west seems to be in favor of Taft.

Two More for Taft.

"Virginia and Kansas are decided firmly in favor for the secretary of war," said Congressman Campbell Slemp of Virginia recently. "Although the contest between Taft and Bryan in Virginia. Secretary Taft will receive the vote of the delegates from that state in the next Republican national convention. The people of Virginia want a man who will do more than any other candidate to carry down the policies of Roosevelt and that man is Taft."

"Virginia and Kansas are decided equally emphatic as to the situation in the state. The people out our way are solidly all for Taft," he said. "I am in favor of Taft and believe Kansas will send a delegation that will vote for him."

FIGHT WITH SAVAGE LION.

Adventurous Hunter Paid for Sport With His Life.

From the Sudan comes the report of a fierce fight between a wounded lion and a government engineer which ended in the death of the latter, an Englishman named C. H. Salmon. Salmon, while on board the steamer Metemmah, between Fashoda and Atbara, in the White Nile, discovered a lion among the bushes on the shore. Taking a gun, he will deliver among them on board not to follow him. He shot twice at the lion, one bullet taking effect in the lion's shoulder and the other in the abdomen. After a struggle of a few minutes, which seemed to be his death agony, the lion lay motionless. Salmon approached and the lion pounced upon him, and threw him to the ground and began to maul him. The unfortunate man was weak and endeavored to draw his revolver but was unsuccessful. The lion had bitten his thigh and crushed his foot. He gave a loud shriek of the eyes. This infuriated the animal which seized the man's hand, nearly lacerating and crushing it. The pain of the terrible ordeal, however was too much for the man and he died before he reached the crew of the steamer had arrived upon the scene. They killed the exhausted lion with much difficulty and carried the unfortunate hunter to the hole, which they sailed with all possible speed to Fashoda, where he was taken to the hospital and received medical attention, but his wounds of his injuries when removed to Khartum.

OLD WALL USED AS A SAFE.

Vermonter Finds Purse and Coin Hidden Nearly a Century Ago.

While Louis Granville of Bridgewater, Vt., was tearing down an old wall of his house, he came upon an unmarked a purse hidden in a small hole built for the purpose between the stones. The purse was tied with an old and soft green as some as hinded, but the coins inside were as it contained were as bright and fresh as on the day they left the mint. The newest coin in the lot was struck off 18 years ago and the structure was built about 1812. It is believed that the purse has lain in its vault three quarters of a century. The money found in the old wallet included 17 silver dollars, ranging in date from 1812 to 1832, and another dated 1776. These were also three dimes coined in the 20s. Mr. Granville would not part with his souvenir at any price.

Not Too Simple.

John Simple, 14 years old, of Dallas, Tex., not so simple as his name might think from his name. He saw a black man in uniform at the bars and acting in a suspicious manner, and not a big bear trap where he thought he had caught a big game and then got up next morning to find that he had bagged his pals. The man had entered the bars to steal one of the barrens, but he did not take it instead he turned out to be a nine dollar a week detective, and all the trouble Simple had was getting the man out of the jail and bailed out.

A Convincing Argument.

"Permit me to inquire," said the man who found attorney after the decision in favor of his client, "what has been bandy down, 'So thank you but seem to assure you I was highly gratified to note the close attention you gave me while I was making my argument.'"

"Yes, I was deeply interested in your talk. You convinced me that it is impossible for a man to feel and to be right."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Spasms

St. Vitus' Dance

Many persons who suffered untold agonies from epilepsy, fits, spasms, and St. Vitus' Dance are to-day well. The strengthening influence of Dr. Miles' Nervine upon the shattered nerves has fully restored them to perfect health.

I suffered agony that words can not express. My nerves were in a terrible condition. I doctored with a physician for a year without any benefit. I was so nervous I could not walk a block without stopping to rest. I could not sleep nor do my work. I had spasms every minute for two hours, and I was so nervous that I had to be watched every minute for fear I would injure myself. I had taken three bottles of Dr. Miles' Nervine and I was well. I have been well ever since.

"Our little boy had fits, spasms for three years, and although we spent hundreds of dollars with doctors, he was worse when we began giving him the first dose of Dr. Miles' Nervine. The fits stopped and he improved every day. He is now a healthy boy, growing fat and hearty. Dr. Miles' Nervine has saved our boy's life."

62,000 TONS OF CURRANTS

Britons Seem to Be Exceptionally Fond of This Fruit.

Our great grandmothers, although they had to pay a very high price for dried currants, considered them quite indispensable in the compounding of puddings, fruitcakes and florentines which were the pride of every housewife. Economic running soon became an arduous undertaking in those days, for currants and other dried fruits were not to be procured out of London except once a year, at the annual fair of the local market town. The royal dish of plum porridge, which was the prerogative of the archbishop of Canterbury to serve to a newly crowned sovereign, was so full of dried currants, the fruit being stewed in strong beef soup enriched with red wine and red sack. Now the plum porridge has changed and simplified to the keynote of the British cuisine cookery, so Britons have imbibed our appreciation of the honest and wholesome currant, and all through Scottishes and plum puddings are dished up for the part, no longer 62,000 tons of currants go every year to the making of hot cakes, puddings and puddings to keep the British appetite.—Ladies' Pictorial.

Mortgage Foreclosures.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of one dollar, executed by Hiram A. Rouse and Sarah Rouse, his wife, to Frederick W. Mayne, dated the 1st day of January, 1906, and recorded in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber 3 of mortgages, page 1, on the 12th day of July, 1907, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of the sum of five hundred and no/100 dollars, the principal sum of a certain note of even date herewith, payable on demand, and which said mortgage was assigned by said mortgagee and which in the whole amount of principal and interest is now due and payable, and no proceeding during twenty days last past either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, at the Highland hotel, in the village of Charlevoix, Michigan, in said county of Charlevoix, on the seventeenth day of October, 1907, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, the place where the circuit court for said county of Charlevoix is held, the premises described in said mortgage and the premises covered by said mortgage, or so much thereof as shall be sufficient to satisfy said mortgage, as follows, to wit: Lot number twenty-one (21) of Block Five (5) in the Village (now city) of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat thereof.

Dated August 5, A. D. 1907.

Giants of Other Days.

According to an account in an old Julius book, 1752, the ancient giants reached the enormous height of 30 feet. It says: "Fassitus relates, and from this Chronicle, that 1547 A. D. near Pamemmar, in Sicily, the body of a giant was dug up about 15 cubits, or 27 feet tall. The same author states that A. D. 1548, near Ravenna, was dug up another body of the same dimensions. A D. 1549 near Rimella, in Sicily, was dug up a body 23 feet tall and whose skull was about 19 feet in circumference. There is described the corpse of a giant of great size, found standing in a vast cave near Dogana, in Sicily, A. D. 1547, whose shoulders the most of a ship, and the forearm of whose hand would consist of a Sicilian bushel, which is about a third of an American bushel.

Break Too Much for Her.

Mitchell was a little, well-behaved lit the girl, but she was "awfully curious." Never what her size—of course, she knew that they every morning, she break her of this habit. So when she saw Mitchie eyeing the egg before her surreptitiously, she said, rather sharply—"There's something the matter with the egg, my child. You look sad at it." Mitchie said not a word, but resolutely commenced to eat the contents of the egg. Presently she approached her mother. "Mamma," said she, "must I really eat the beak too?"

LINCOLN'S GUARD ABSENT.

How Booth, the Assassin, Saw and Seized His Opportunity.

Now that I have told the story of my three months' association with Abraham Lincoln, there are one things of which I feel that I owe a duty to the public to relate. I have been asked many times, since the assassination of President Lincoln, if I can never have made public, before, says William H. Crook in Harper's.

I have often wondered why the negligence of the guard also accompanied the President to the theatre on the night of the 14th has never been investigated. So far as I know, it was never even investigated by the police department. Yet, had he done his duty, I believe President Lincoln might not have been murdered by Booth. The man was John Parker. He was a sergeant of the District and had volunteered, as I believe each of the other guards had done, in response to the President's first call for troops from the District. He is dead now and so far as I know he never made a statement of his family. So it is no unkindness to speak of the really culpable he made.

It was the custom for the guard who accompanied the President to the theatre to remain in the little passage way outside the box that passages ran through which Booth entered. Mr. Buckingham, who was the doorkeeper at Ford's Theatre, remembered that a chair was placed there for the guard on the evening of Lincoln's assassination. Parker occupied it at 10 o'clock that night.

Mr. Buckingham is of the impression that he did. He did he felt, it is most unfortunate for his memory that he was not sure and that the question was put to him in such a way that he felt that the answer he gave might be yes or no meeting with cries of laughter and applause.

He had called on the Name of the board of Supervisors, George Bailey, who responded briefly and happily. Then supervisors Hampton, Terill, William J. Gallagher, Urquhart and Ava Smith, together with citizens Hubbard, Prof. Woodley, Kane and Shanahan responded as they were called upon. All the responses were enthusiastic but to the point and generally received and applauded.

As with the gathering rose to pitch in the sentiment, "Friendship," proposed by toastmaster Hidings as Bishop's coining the feelings of all present the guests then took their leave. It was a most enjoyable occasion, reflecting upon those who conceived it and with doubtless much to promote kind around that feeling of friendship, and unity among the residents of the different parts of the county, which all the Board of Commerce in the county are trying to encourage.

Farmers Organize.

need enforced.

Therefore:

Why should not the farmers organize for protection?

And there is another phase of the proposition. Farmers' organization of the kind suggested would be a benefit and a blessing to the average country magistrate. The more money the farmer gets for his grain and potatoes the more money he has to spend at his home market, the more he earns, the easier the tax bill is borne and his town hall.

The more prosperous the farmer, the more prosperous the country merchant, the banker, the blacksmith, the wagonmaker and the miller.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Normal Notes.

A letter was received from Julia Gossett a former member of the school. She is enjoying her work very much.

Miss Maggie Zeitler, a student of the class of '06, visited the Normal Friday October 18th. She teaches in the Bohemian district near East Jordan. This is her second year in this school.

The class have found their work in observation very interesting.

A reception was given in honor of the Board of Supervisors, the Board of Education and the teachers of Charlevoix. Refreshments were served to the Normal students, and the girls from the seventh grade in the training.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodley presented us with a very pretty piano, which is now appreciated very much.

A most beautiful chair was given to the Normal room, by the Board of Supervisors.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Traverse City Record. The row in tow of the Chequamegon with the two letters and the engine bed, belonging to Cooper, Mainfoth, started for Northport last night as reported in the Record. The tow went well as long as the wind followed it. They had still about 9:00 in the evening when the wind reared around and blew hard from the northwest. This kicked up a bad sea in a very short time. The timbers under one lighter were washed out and although the tow line was passed through the thum of the lighter it was washed overboard and went adrift. The tow line that was fast through the lighter came loose from its fastening on the post and pulled out. This left the lighter free and she went ashore, it is believed somewhere off North Manitou point. The thumkam has been secured to look for the stray lighter. She has a load of staples here and as soon as she can unload she will go on a hunting trip for it. There is little danger that the lighter is not or even hurt in any way. It may be turned in the sand from the action of the waves but Mr. Hemmeth thinks it will be in good condition in spite of its unbooked trip. The rest of the tow went through all right. This outfit was enroute to High Island.

AIR FAMINE AND ITS EFFECTS.

People Slow in Recognizing Importance of Pure Air.

As buildings are now constructed and occupied, many people have developed a sort of fear of fresh air, being to a mild atmosphere, says a writer in The Delineator. But there is no excuse for sleeping in such an atmosphere. We spend one-third of our time in sleep, so we also breathe more deeply when asleep than when awake. Fresh air we should sleep in the open air, or at least to as possible. Walk through a residence street at night and look at the bedrooms. Most they are all tightly closed, occasionally one sees a sashed window or four inches down from the top. This is done because a fashionable individual to let out the bad air. If all the bad air went out of that room there would be no air left. There should be no bad air in a bedroom. Every window and door of the bedroom should stand wide open every night in the year. The air should be the same inside as outside. While asleep the lungs should be connected with outside air just as they are when we walk the street. Sufficient covering should be used to keep the body warm. Instead of just as we put on sufficient clothing to keep it warm when we go outside. Only the face is exposed under both conditions.

The Worm Turns.

His wife having spoken her mind to him for the fifty thousandth time, and having ordered him as he valued his life to stay home, and present to her dear to wear the pale green tie with embroidered yellow violets which she had selected for him at a ten-cent bargain counter, Mr. William Henry Peck stalked insolently to the little out-of-the-way trunk-and-satchel-cluttered room this was emphatically devoted to "dad," and for an hour labored upon his lapidis, which he addressed to The Police Committee. The Hague: "Dear Sirs: I have been a fool to endeavor."

Pink Wood for Piano.

SYSTEMATIC ORGANIZATION.

Cooperation of Subordinate, Pomona and State Legislative Committees.

It does not get all the benefits that might accrue from mere systematic organization. There is a lack of timely cooperation, to secure highest results. For instance, each Pomona grange should have its legislative committee, which should thoroughly familiarize itself with the plans and purposes of the state legislative committee, or, in turn, it about a little the state legislative committee should see to it that Pomona legislative committees and linked subordinate grange legislative committees should be furnished with the objects it is undertaking to accomplish and how it proposes to accomplish them.

At Pomona meetings the subordinate legislative committees should report on any work in hand and thus give the Pomona legislative committee information as to needs and demands. In turn, the Pomona legislative committee should keep in touch through boards of supervisors or county legislative boards, by whatever name called, as well as to enable Pomona legislative bodies to keep the state legislative committee posted on matters relating to grange and farmers' interests in each county. Perhaps one of the most efficient Pomona legislative committees in New York is that of Chautauqua county, but there is no reason why every county should not boast of just as good.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE.

Its Forty-first Annual Meeting to Be Held in Hartford, Nov. 12-22.

Great preparations are being made by Connecticut patrons for the coming of the national grange to Hartford in November. State Master Wood and J. H. Hale, chairman of the executive committee, and many others are busy in making plans for the entertainment of the grange visitors, who are expected to number anywhere from 2,500 to 3,000 during the ten days' session of the national body. Hand-painters will be at Hotel Garde, and the session will be held in Port Guard hall and in Pythagoritic hall at the capitol. The half dozen homes of Hartford will be filled to their utmost, but it is said that 200 private homes will be thrown open to guests, so that every one may find accommodation.

The chief matters of interest to come before the session will be the biennial election of officers and the discussion of public questions to which the grange finds particular interest, among which that of the parcels post will perhaps take precedence. The election of officers is likely to create more than usual interest. It is conceded that National Master Bachelder has "made good" during the two terms of office, and he will doubtless be given another term. But there is likely to be a lively contest for some of the other offices. The dates for the meeting are Nov. 12-22.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

Michigan Wants Direct Legislation, but Other States Do Not.

The executive committee of the Michigan state grange has issued a circular letter to members of the order in that state calling on them to support only such candidates for the state constitutional convention as will be in favor of direct legislation. All candidates are asked to reply to the following question: "Are you in favor of direct legislation on the plan of the initiative and referendum, and, if elected, will you exert your best effort to incorporate its principles into the new constitution?"

It is interesting to note how differently this question of direct legislation is regarded in the different grange states. Michigan favors it. So does Maine. So does Washington and Oregon. New York does not, and many other states do not. Why should there be any variance? If direct legislation is good for one state, why not for the other? Perhaps exists having great cities within their limits would better not adopt it. This matter was discussed at the national grange meeting at Denver last year, and it is quite likely to come up at the Hartford session.

A Little West Trust.

One of the subordinate granges down in Idaho has evolved a practical scheme for benefiting the farmers, even as entrance. A farmer residing at a convenient place has been authorized and furnished capital to buy from its members the wool produced by their flocks and pay 25 cents per pound in cash for the same. As soon as all the wool is in it will be turned over to the wholesale wool buyer who holds the most money for it. The amount received will then be divided pro rata. Thus they will receive top prices with no middleman's profit to be deducted, the only expense being the actual cost of labor for handling.

Harrisburg to Hartford.

Pennsylvania granges are preparing to attend the national grange meeting at Hartford in goodly numbers. Plans are being made for a large party to rendezvous at Harrisburg, thence to proceed to New York, stop overnight and go on to Hartford next day.

New York will have added about 10,000 new members by the time the next state grange meets in February, 1908.

The chief matters of interest to come before the session will be the biennial election of officers and the discussion of public questions to which the grange finds particular interest, among which that of the parcels post will perhaps take precedence. The election of officers is likely to create more than usual interest. It is conceded that National Master Bachelder has "made good" during the two terms of office, and he will doubtless be given another term. But there is likely to be a lively contest for some of the other offices. The dates for the meeting are Nov. 12-22.

ONE THING OR MANY.

Should the Grange Limit Its Energies to the Farm?

Dr. George M. Twitchell among children M. Tucker as having said at a large grange rally in New York that the grange should confine itself pretty closely to those questions which concern the farmer as a farmer and not undertake to discuss and settle that great number of questions which concern others as much as they concern the farmers. He said that Mr. Tucker cited in support of his position the results obtained by the labor unions. He would advise going after one thing at a time and putting the whole strength of the organization into it.

Dr. Twitchell then said: "This is by no means both sound and unsound. It is true that the strike must be conducted on large and far reaching problems from the other side of the room, where every one must be the welfare of the industry, but under the complex relations of the present day the farmer is first of all a citizen, and every question bearing upon the home, the farm or the duties of citizenship becomes vital to him. You cannot narrow the grange to one thing at a time even though by so doing greater influence may be centered on a problem.

"What the grange needs and every other organization wants to feel today is the necessity for an acute interest in the homes, schools, churches and all other problems and to work diligently for such solutions of each as will strengthen home life on the farm and insure a stronger, more positive public sentiment along the higher lines of living. Against the tendency to drift every hand must be raised, and this tendency will be checked no active earnest interest is taken upon all the questions bearing upon the farm and farm life. The growing of crops and disposal of the same cover problems of deep significance, but towering above these are the questions which relate to the home and the future welfare and wealth of its members. There is a great work for the grange and a grand opportunity for every patron."

THE PARCELS POST.

The Logical Outcome of the Rural Free Delivery Service.

The national grange will set in motion some strong forces this fall to secure the enactment of a parcels post law. It is going to be the hottest kind of a fight, but some sort of a law governing the transportation in the mails of small packages up to certain pounds or so weight is surely coming in the near future, and the grange is going to be the important factor in its accomplishment, as it was in regard to the rural free delivery system. National Master Bachelder said in an address delivered before the New Hampshire Retail Grocers' association: "A cheap parcels post is, in fact, the logical outcome of the rural mail service and the one thing needed to make itself supporting." The grange can provide for a general parcels post with a maximum weight limit of eleven pounds to cost 25 cents to any postoffice in the United States and a rural parcels post with the same maximum weight, the rates to be 1 cent for each pound or fraction thereof and 1 cent for each additional two pounds up to eleven pounds, and the rate to be available only on any one rural route to and from the postoffice to which the route belongs. This would make the proposition which the national grange will ask the various state granges to indorse this winter.

What the Grange Wants.

Ex-Governor C. J. Bell of Vermont, asked recently in a newspaper interview, "What does the grange hope to accomplish in the next few years?" said:

"Among the reforms for which we will strive are: The parcels post, to insure to the postal savings bank, national aid for good roads everywhere as one of the things very essential to the farmer, centralized schools in localities where conditions are favorable, the introduction of agricultural studies in the public schools, not entirely for a commercial purpose, but also for cultural advantages. The grange always stands for good citizenship, and as much as any organization stands for the things which will produce it. Its policy will be nonpartisan, but always for the best civic citizenship means much in all that need be said along that line. The organization is now recognized by congress and taken into consideration on legislation affecting farmers."

"Will the grange get all the things for which it is now striving?" was asked.

"Yes, everything, and I say this because the things for which we stand are right."

Prize Speaking Contest.

A grange prize speaking contest was held in connection with the state fair at Concord, N. H., this fall. Contestants were present from five granges and all under fourteen years of age. The first prize of $10 was awarded to Ina M. Blood of Hudson grange, the second to Ida Wade of Bow grange and the third to Helen Gulick of Derry.

Why will the newspapers persist in calling the meetings of the national and state granges "conventions"? Webster does not appear in the grange vocabulary.

Governor H. S. Woodruff of Connecticut will be a member of the seventy degree class at the national grange meeting at Hartford in November.

A good lecturer is two-thirds of the grange. J. W. BARROW.

WHAT THE TEACHER DID.

Part of Programme Embarrassing to Bashful Young Man.

Here is a story that is being told on a man young man who reaches a Sunday school class in North Baltimore. It has been told on other young men before, and there is a strong probability that it never happened at all to the particular young man, but his friends have attached the story to him, and much to his disconfiture, he must take it. In the first place, he is very bashful, and the request made by the Sunday school superintendent that he take a class of young ladies, who had just lost their previous teacher, was disturbing enough. The previous teacher had been a charming woman, and her loss was due to interface with a Washington man. The class of six charming young ladies walled while the young man was being brought from the other side of the room, where he had been the presiding genius of a class of small boys. "This is Mr. Tucker," announced the superintendent as he had succeeded to herome your teacher, and I am sure he will find the position a most delightful one." Shortly afterwards grabbed Mr. T. "I shall be absent, perhaps, several times and then as the superintendent moved away, leaving him bashful, not to say scared, he called after him in dulcet tones—and now, ladies, I know will tell me that your former teacher always did! But we will try carefully for the young man." There was a long moment's silence, then a post looking young miss, casting down her glorious long lashes, purrily said: "Well, if she really want to do that, Miss Grace always wound up on a piano!" Whether or may not be true, but the young man declares the people who are telling it are mean.

And So it Became the Style.

"They say this new style of hat brim will off to fine and flattering behind," said she, "was originated by a prize fail who longed and put on his hat blind just before he was about to coming to the. I wish some other prize fail would forget and put on his hat on right this fall for my benefit."

Stove Buyers Find They Can Save Money

Stove buyers have found that we can sell them stoves of every description at prices which give them the greatest values obtainable. Many who have expected to buy from mail order houses have carefully examined our stoves learned our prices and discovered that there is only a slight difference in price between the cheapest and the best grade of stove, and the old adage, "Good goods are always the cheapest," was never more fully demonstrated. If you will call and look over our line we will demonstrate these points and then leave it to your judgment what and where to buy.

The skaters will try to have a championship race held in Chicago soon. Jack Foutch of Canton, O., and Joe Rauch of Minneapolis, will skate a match race at St. Paul to-night and the winner will be challenged by Moore.

Not On Your Life, Bob!

Senator Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin, a candidate for the Republican nomination for president was in Kalamazoo lately. He also spent a part of a day in Battle Creek. From some of those who met him it was learned that he is planning to organize two or three Michigan congressional districts by counties and precincts, with a view to capturing a part of the delegation from this state. Already, it is said, he has one county organized with four men in each precinct working for him.

Lucky the Senator was caught at it. Of course Michigan is for Roosevelt as first choice, but don't have to go to Wisconsin for second choice.

Not while we have bull moose.

Public Meeting.

There will be a public meeting at the court house Friday evening, of this week to consider matters in connection with the electric railroad.

This is a matter of very much importance to Charlevoix, and it is hoped that every citizen will be present and aid in pushing the project to successful results.

THREE RAILROADS.

Will Give Charlevoix Pretty Near the Rating of a Railroad Center.

It now seems mostly certain that before the close of 1908 Charlevoix will have three railroads—two of them with termini here.

That the Michigan Central will close up the twelve mile gap between its present East Jordan terminus and Charlevoix is certain. It is pretty well known to those on the inside that active operations will begin next spring.

The project has boundless possibilities for Charlevoix, as navigation facilities here make it possible for transhipment of ferry service to be installed that will afford east and west freight traffic facilities that cannot be excelled at any Lake Michigan port. And no less important will be the impetus that will be given summer travel to this, the queen of all Northern Michigan resorts.

The electric shore road enterprise has assumed a stage of development that gives town promoting promise of success. The importance of this project as a local developer cannot be overestimated. It will put Charlevoix in touch with the rich and rapidly prosperous sections of Charlevoix and Antrim counties, affording the farmers of those localities unlimited marketing facilities and enhancing the value of every acre of land in the township through which the road will run.

It requires no argument to prove, in view of this very promising outlook, that Charlevoix is a good place to come to, and that a farm in the west end of either Charlevoix or Antrim counties is a good thing to keep. The minds are passing, the sky is clearing, and signs are multiplying that clearly presage a strong, healthy and certain forward movement for this section, to beautifully blessed by nature.

"Charlevoix the Beautiful" will always hold way as the gem city of the north, but let every citizen do his part toward making it act only some thoughts of it more active in its industrial progress.

The Awakening of the Grand Traverse.

This is the title of the seventy page booklet just issued by the Charlevoix Board of Commerce in the interest of the Grand Traverse Railroad project.

It is an exact duplicate of the one issued by the Traverse City board except that the excellent half tone cuts of Charlevoix views, and a very earnest address by the Charlevoix Board of Commerce introduces the subject to the public.

It is a very artistic little production, and we hope the board remembered our disposition given the Hooper Company, when he was went to the government land, to "get a plenty while you are getting."

Truly the "Grand Traverse Heights is awakening. It is the garden of Michigan, and while it has been "asleep" and sowing "things" for some time, it has not yet fully reached the borders of its ultimate destiny.

The Charlevoix End.

Under the above head the Traverse City Record of recent date has the following:

The Herald and Record company has just completed for the Charlevoix board of commerce a prospectus of the Grand Traverse region to accompany with the proposed street railway and interurban from this city to Charlevoix. The text of the publication is practically the same as that issued by the Traverse City board of trade, but the illustrations largely represent Charlevoix and vicinity although there are many very attractive views of Traverse City and vicinity in the book. The Charlevoix board of commerce is very enthusiastic over this project and the Herald and Record company has made the contract at one time was that a supply of rails would be assured in the event of the construction of the road being proceeded with early next year, and that if the local support was not sufficient to justify the commencement of the road, that the Construction company, owing to the numerous enterprises in which it is engaged, would be able to use the rails at some other place without loss, but that it must be distinctly understood that the Carter Construction company has no intention of building either of the roads unless the local support, which they have asked, is given.

He said further that, aside from the purchase of the rails mentioned, it would be impossible, from a business standpoint, for the Construction company to take any further steps towards the actual building of the roads until such time as the amount of the bond subscription was such as to justify further expenditures on the part of the Construction company, and that unless those subscriptions were made at a very early date, the roads could not be put in operation next year, as it will require several months for the making of surveys and securing rights-of-way, and, further, that contracts for equipment must be made in advance, so as to insure the delivery of cars next spring and summer, and that of course the equipment would not be connected with where the roads were an assured fact.

Mr Denneen also said that the Construction company has already disbursed several thousand dollars in the purchase of the right of way, lines of railway, and that he hoped he did not feel justified in making further expenditures until the company could be assured of the interest by the association in the lines of road manifest their interest in the proposition to the extent of subscribing for the limited number of bonds which have been offered for public subscription, and that unless such subscriptions were forthcoming at an early date, his people would feel justified in withdrawing entirely from the proposition, as the demands of other communities and the opportunities offered elsewhere have so rapidly attracted us there in connection with the present enterprises.

Church Organized at Barnard.

On Tuesday a party of clergymen consisting of Rev. Ben Pasquet and Rev. Wilson Aich, of Petoskey; Rev. A. Watt Johnstone of Cadillac, and Rev. Geo. J. Ries, of Traverse City, were in town on their way to Barnard, where, during the afternoon and evening that day they organized the South Barnard Presbyterian church.

The work embraces not only the admission of members but the ordination of Elders. The institution of the parish will come later. The pastor Rev. Ries, of Traverse City, will be on the work and the society has a fully competent new church edifice, nothing paid for.

LOCAL SUPPORT NECESSARY.

Carter Construction Co. Will Not Build Electric Road Without It.

Charles A Denneen, general counsel of the Carter Construction Company, returned to the city yesterday afternoon from Chicago, says the Traverse City Record.

When questioned by a representative of the Record as to the purpose of his visit to Traverse City at this time, Mr. Denneen said that he desired to confer with the people of Traverse City, Elk Rapids and Charlevoix in reference to the making of immediate subscriptions to the bonds of the Traverse City street railway and the Traverse City interurban railroad, in order that the Carter Construction company will be justified in entering at once upon the preliminary work necessary for the building and equipping of the roads.

When ask if it were true that the Carter Construction company had purchased from the Illinois Steel Company, the Grand Traverse Railroad company, ten thousand tons of rail, for delivery in May, 1908, Mr. Denneen said that such a contract had been made and accepted by one steel company, and that the reason the Construction company had made the contract at that time was that a supply of rails would be assured in the event of the construction of the road being proceeded with early next year, and that if the local support was not sufficient to justify the commencement of the road, that the Construction company, owing to the numerous enterprises in which it is engaged, would be able to use the rails at some other place without loss, but that it must be distinctly understood that the Carter Construction company has no intention of building either of the roads unless the local support, which they have asked, is given.

He said further that, aside from the purchase of the rails mentioned, it would be impossible, from a business standpoint, for the Construction company to take any further steps towards the actual building of the roads until such time as the amount of the bond subscription was such as to justify further expenditures on the part of the Construction company, and that unless those subscriptions were made at a very early date, the roads could not be put in operation next year, as it will require several months for the making of surveys and securing rights-of-way, and, further, that contracts for equipment must be made in advance, so as to insure the delivery of cars next spring and summer, and that of course the equipment would not be connected with where the roads were an assured fact.

Mr Denneen also said that the Construction company has already disbursed several thousand dollars in the purchase of the right of way, lines of railway, and that he hoped he did not feel just

AIKENSIDE

MRS. MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Tempest and Sunshine," "English Orphans," "Homestead on the Hillside," "Lena Rivers," "Meadow Brook," "Dora Deane," "Cousin Maud," etc.

"And during the summer of Aikenside she go then?" Guy asked.

"Yes where she always, of course. As Jessie is an fond of her, and she care so much his sisters, it will be the highest for her to come here, as I see, provided Agnes is free," Mrs. Nash replied, while this mentioned.

"I know you are right, dear, I do not wish to do Maddy a mean thing by imagination in her soul, neither will I have everybody talking about her and such. I will see I never. I first come home, for I know I shall be lonesome, and also lonely and the greatest half despair of Mrs. Nash. Then I shall take an interest in a girl, someone I some second time, and I shall not mind so much the broken drinking when mamma dying, or the little, sad, pathetic face of Maddy creeps into my heart. Yes, I will go to Aikenside."

"I will have Maddy's trunk sent home for you," said Mrs. Nash.

"Yes, and I will write my father to-day, telling he has you invited home. I care a score for Maddy than I do for Jessie."

"And why that be true?" Mrs. Nash asked.

"Why, could you look her fully in the face then, so he asked the question? Her conscience will the colour—she will upon the carpet as he replied.

"True! Yes, every word of it."

Mrs. Nash looked at him in blind amazement.

"I might to have look him in hand long ago," she came up to him and said and, sympathetic. "We shall arrange Maddy. I so much as wishing that she should be here for her to go to school, and so after you. I'll manage to keep her home, and what Maddy to you, while you tell her about your Lucy and the little girl."

Guy nodded a time speaking kind of a nod, and then Mrs. Nash left the room to leave the room, gave vent to the joy feeling:

"You know, Guy, as well as I, that gently and sweet as she is, Jessie is a little spoiled, you and so kind of a sharp, and I know that she will be a great deal happier with you." Mrs. Nash's voice remained unchanged in a sharper tone of thought. Yes, Maddy was an inferior in the world and sentiment and seeing himself. Maddy he tried to know what that same world would say if he should make Maddy his wife. Of course he had no such intention, he was just imagining what would be if never could possibly happen, because in the first place he wouldn't ask Maddy Clyde if he could, and he certainly if he would.

CHAPTER XIV.

Supper was over, and Guy was back again in his library. He had not stopped as he usually did to sing with Jessie and talk to Maddy Clyde until it was so dark that he could see no one but something dim, but had come directly back, dropping the heavy curtains and sitting down near the fire. Mrs. Nash had lighted the lamps and then gone with Maddy, expecting to Jessie how she must stay with her while Maddy went to Mr. Guy, she wanted to talk with her.

"Is he angry with me, Mrs. Nash?" and remembering his stormy looks when she went in quest of the book Maddy felt her heart sinking her as to what might be the result of an interview with Guy.

Mrs. Nash, however, was kind, and Maddy stole for a moment to her own room to see she was all right, the crimson dress, with its soft edge of lace about the slender throat, brushed her hair and smoothing the folds of her black silk apron, where Jessie had pinned a rose, her a very girlish appearance she went down to Aikenside Guy's library door. He heard her coming, and involuntarily drew nearer to the fire that he had intended she should sit. But Maddy took him instead a low, stool, and then on the chair, turned her face fully toward him, waiting for him to speak.

"Maddy," he began, "are you happy here?"

"Yes, yes, very, very happy."

It was at least a minute before he spoke again, and when he did, it was as if he had concluded it best to wind her and Jessie to abroad, for a year or so at least; not that he was tired of teaching her, but it would be a good thing for her, thought, to mingle with other girls and learn the world of the world. Jessie would until he her home, with the piano and harp, and Maddy would be darling of Jessie in the room, and no one spoken of New York or Lucy. He had to go, and asked her what she thought of it.

Maddy was too much stunned to think of anything at first. That the good she had received must should be placed with her, it her grasp, and to find herself was almost too much to credit.

"Oh, Mr. Guy, I can never do good to you—what make you?" said Maddy.

He (Mr. Guy) and all over Maddy's face there spread a beautiful flush as the words sung in her ears. Guy was she told they how much she wished to be a teacher, and how Maddy was of the persons and her poor Uncle Joseph. It caused almost cried for that young eyes, for to be burdened with the care of those three left helpless people, and they should feel just as he usually did when he associated Maddy with them, but when he listened to the tale of her life and the life she had built, and in every one of which there was a place for "our Lucy," as she termed them, it was more in the form of a blessing than a curse that he had rested on her shining hair.

"Tell me a good girl, Maddy," he said, "and I am glad now that I have concluded to send you where you can be better fitted for the office you mean to fill than you could be here, but I shall miss you sadly. I like little girls, and though you can hardly be classed from now, you seem to me much like Jessie, and I take pleasure in doing for you as I would for her."

Guy stopped uncertain what to say next, while Maddy's eyes again lost sight of laughingly.

He was going now to tell "the little girl much like Jessie" of Lucy Atherstone, and the words were on his tongue, when he "Maddy," he said, again speaking gently, "I have said I liked you, and so I hope will someone else. I have written of you to her."

Up to this point Maddy had a vague idea that he meant the doctor, but the "her" dispelled that thought, and a most inexplicable feeling of jealousy crept over her as she asked faintly:

"Written to whom?"

"To Miss Atherstone—Miss Lucy Atherstone, I mean (pronounced it hard)."

Oh, Maddy never had, and with that same incubus she could not understand she listened while Guy told her who Lucy Atherstone was, and why she was not at the summer the mention of Aikenside.

"Would you like to see her picture?" asked Guy.

Yes, came faintly from the parched lips, across which there was a slight twitch as she got up her head to look at the copy Guy drew from his pocket.

Looking at the little, she gazed silently upon the sweet young face, so strong, so full of love and truth, and as she looked, Maddy felt as if she could not.

What do you think of her and Lucy?" he said, as he put back the picture and replied Maddy, while the warm blush spread over her face.

"Yes, she is magnificent, as I should if I had ever seen a lady. I have seen ladies, I walked—" And Maddy broke into a laugh, for the thought came that these Sundays she was some the town of Lebanon Center Wednesday, and from Saturday with a most jaunty manner and a most jaunty bonnet, and a most jaunty walking, swagging. What did she? Not to Guy, for he was in a dream, and thought which the man standing and really could know Jessie's mind and heart, she.

Thought she was the best friend she ever had, and Guy never did a wicker thing in her life, according to Jessie's own, and Jessie was a good girl, and Guy was good, and Lucy was good, and everybody was good, and Maddy felt as if she could sing and shout and dance and do everything else in the world, and he certainly if he would!

TO-DAY'S OPPORTUNITY.

By Rev. William Carter, D. D.

Now all these things are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come.—1 Corinthians 10:2

If greater opportunities bring greater responsibilities, then those who are resting upon us today are certainly tremendous. The progress of the age has been continuous and has raised this age until it stands as the highest peak of civilization, the greatest of all the ages, the very crown jewel in the diadem of time. Therefore, these things are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come.

Why is it that such warning and admonition are necessary?

Because in this "end of the age" in this twentieth century of privilege and development there is much note in safety. It means more to lose a jewel than a pebble. It means more to wreck a trans-Atlant. than a fishing smack. It means more, infinitely more, to wreck and wreck a life fraught with such tremendous possibilities than to wreck a life that was a dry broken."

Because the "other brother" did not seem indifferent to his brother's sin, he was "sorry and glad." Sorry that sin was in his brother's heart, and glad that he was a dry broken."

Because the "other brother" did not seem indifferent to his brother's sin, he was "sorry and glad." Sorry that sin was in his brother's heart, and glad that he was a dry broken." Because the "other brother" did not seem indifferent to his brother's sin, he was "sorry and glad." Sorry that sin was in his brother's heart, and glad that he was a dry broken."

WISDOM FROM THE BENCH.

Russian Judges Deliver Strange but Sensible Decisions.

The court at Schonsee was sitting in four hearing cases, and essentially given by the local salonkeepers for permission of the closing hour (1 to 12:30). The salonkeepers were represented by a local member of commons who insisted that the whole case was for the change to the latter. The judge retired to consult and when they appeared their chairman said: "We shall take great pleasure in granting the extension, but the law must be obeyed. Bring the signatures of at least ten married women." The salonkeepers and their aides have been busy enough in a business search for these ten signatures. At Bernwood there was a girl with her baby before the court claiming support from a man whom she alleged was its father. The man denied the paternity and in a whole minute, in which he looked at the ceiling, pretended that the differences between his own features and those of the infant. "You're the father right enough," said the judge. "If you were not you would know nothing of the child's looks. Twenty marks ($5) a month."

A Strange Requirement.

"What a man who proposes to run an automobile needs most," said the experienced chauffeur, "is good hoodoo."

WHAT THE GRANGE CAN DO.

A Valuable Discussion of the Question by Hon. George T. Powell.

[Special Correspondence.]

In my visits of the Union discussions of grange meetings speakers dwell again and respect ever and over what the grange does. While we may take pride in the just history of the organization, to dwell so continually upon it does not always interest members, either old or young, however readers more in the present than in the past. It is the problems of the day, the work of the present, that use of greater interest and importance to farmers and grange members, and in proportion as these problems, considered and effort made to solve them will the grange grow in strength, numbers and influence.

At the close of the civil war the agricultural of our country became most seriously depressed. Most farmers were heavily in debt, their farms mortgaged to an extent that made the discussing thus that had to pay high rates of interest, with transportation charges on their products so high as to eat up large little profit after marketing.

The grange was confronted by these conditions and through the principles and methods of cooperation, it undertook, and with a large degree of success, to improve the decreasing conditions in farming and to awaken in farmers a higher appreciation of their work and of their influence in the community in which they lived, as also upon important questions of public policy.

The grange needs to do more of this kind of work. Whenever a grange or a dozen or a new grange is organized it should take care of all the problems that affect the highest welfare of that community. What are these most pressing? We should say the condition of the public school is one first in importance. What is the school doing for the farm life of the neighborhood? Are the children being taught and telling about the soil? Are they getting any instruction in the plant life with which they have to deal? Are they learning any conception of the possibilities that are before them in intelligent cooperation and in the cultivation of the important plants that are grown about their farm homes and upon which the prosperity and success of their life are entirely dependent? Is the school in the rural community by which a grange exists leveling the children anything about the insect life that is destroying the farm crops to a degree that year after year seriously reduces the revenue of the farm or stealing of the blights and diseases of plants that still further reduce the income and add to inability to meet debts, to make improvements and bring to the home the comforts that go to the pleasure of living? Is there any information imparted to the children on the animal life of the school district. In the woods, in the water or in the farm? Is the schoolhouse and its surroundings pleasant and inviting to the children or is it narrow and repellent to the best impulses of their nature? Are there few children in the school and little public interest in the education that is being given them, and if so is there any relation between the total absence of all of this beneficent and all inspiring teaching and the disturbing numbers of children in rural schools? And, further, is there any relation between the absence of this kind of school instruction and the desire of the young people to get away from the farm and into our villages and cities, to the final neglect of many a farm home and its sale at a large sacrifice in value?

In these and have a work of most vital importance that the grange has not done and can which it may yet do with large possible results to the upbuilding of farm values and of more active interest in farm life? What may and should the grange do for the community in which it exists in other directions that affect its welfare? Is the moralizing influence of the local government? Are they use that efficient and trusted men are administering the expenditures of the town property? Are the highways, of so much importance to farmers, made as good as they should be for the money that is collected for that purpose? Why do so many farmers and highway commissioners allow year after year weeds to grow along the highways, to scatter their seeds over the farms of the entire neighborhood to contest with their grass and grain crops the occupancy of the soil that yields such discouraging and grudged. Why is so important this in relation to the cutting of weeds along the highways and of that importance to farmers ignored and violated so universally? Does the grange assume any responsibility or make its demands and influence felt to so important a matter as this?

The grange is not a political organization, but the object is to promote and build up agriculture, and, as the population of our townships is largely made up of farmers, they should be the responsible power and influence in the administration of the affairs of the town rather than a mere handful of its impossible has gone on, of a few men about rural villages who under the direction of a political boss often equally irresponsible go through the form of holding caucuses and putting men in nomination for important public offices, not from personal fitness for the public interests are too often the issue at stake. The grange should be a greater power in public affairs and should have a larger agricultural representation in all legislative bodies as the result of its activity in this direction and in the interests of rural communities.

These should be a grange in every school district, and the schoolhouse should be the place for holding the meetings; but, where the present law affords have not yet been put to long such meetings to whose building although these should be the live, active centers of agricultural educational work. Half drop farmers, with the exception of their wives, rent in time change the active character of the farm life of a social nature. They could hold grange meetings in their homes. Hundreds more could well give who somewhat or so satisfied to meet the conditions of thousands of farmers and their families to school districts where they can more easily get together and without driving miles to reach a grange hall. Vast numbers of farmers are in a more or less social, isolated condition over their farms. With higher living prices for farm products, many could benefit from them because of the high cost of labor and the great difficulty of obtaining it. Rarely do our boys, pace with the times, do not study the changed demands and methods and keep, as in the old days, producing things of lower value while there is an unsatisfied demand for different products of higher value.

These and other problems farmers must work out themselves and they will find great help through the competitive methods which the grange encourages. For seven months in a year, with comparatively long evenings, farmers may get together to study and work out these problems. At the same time they can combine the social needs of their farm life, which will interest the young people as also those older. Through these means it would not be difficult for every farmer to be associated to increase his yield of potatoes twenty-five bushels per acre, buy one ton per acre, rich, not to sow quarts per cow per year. This in degree, while not large, would change the entire condition in every farm community. It would enable farmers to better meet the high labor cost and to give farm laborers more steady employment and would give new impetus, life and interest to farming.

More in this line of work should be done. The organization of school district granges when once started would reach far greater numbers than have yet been seen. In so doing the grange would be carrying out to an even greater degree the original object of its founders—the promotion of the agriculture of our nation and the elevation of those engaged in it.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

Agricultural High Schools in Ten Per Cent of the Congressional Districts.

Hon. Willet M. Hays, assistant commissioner of agriculture of Washington, discussed the subject of industrial education at a meeting held under the auspices of the Massachusetts state grange. He spoke in favor of such education as is provided for in a bill introduced in the last congress by Mr. Davis of Minnesota. It would establish secondary schools which would teach teachers capable of introducing agriculture and home economics into the rural schools, and also the training of teachers and technical teachers for elementary farm schools is provided for in a system of collegiate and secondary schools the last and graduate of any elementary school would will be to incorporate the rural school.

The interests of more than 10,000,000 farm boys and girls and nearly 20,000,000 city boys and girls are wrapped up in this bill, he said. It provides for very greatly increased facilities for teaching applicable arts and home economics in city high schools as well as agricultural and home economics in agricultural high schools. "About 16 per cent of our congressional districts have already established agricultural high schools," said Mr. Hays.

A Model Grange Home.

Very few granges in the country have had the good fortune that has come to Massachusetts Grange of West Newton, Mass., which has had placed at its disposal an elegant $20,000 hall, which they are to occupy with no other expense than the janitor service. The building is of the old English style, 54 by 56 feet in size, with front porch 12 by 32 feet. The first story is brick and the second of wood, with cement stucco, high pitched roof and colonial interior, finished very elaborately. The auditorium seats 300 people and has been elegantly furnished. A stage 12 by 20 feet has dressing rooms and all conveniences. In the basement is also a banquet hall 36 by 60 feet, a kitchen 32 by 16 feet and fine pantry, closets and refreshment rooms. There is also a delightful reading room 16 by 22 feet, with a good library and reading tables.

An Eleanor Grange.

Mortimer Whitehead, the oldest pomona master of the grange and one of its oldest members, has been doing pomona service for the Order the past summer in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky. His home is near New Brunswick, N. J.

In the national congress there are 356 members, of whom only nine are farmers and we doubt if they are granges. Something wrong there.

The next meeting of the Vermont state grange will be held at Burlington, beginning Dec. 10. Four hundred delegates will be in attendance.

CAUSE OF ROME'S FATE.

Decay of the Citizen a Prelude to its Downfall.

Not long ago the Equitius cemetery was excavated and there was discovered a pit 1,200 feet long and 300 feet deep. It was an ancient burial ground for slaves, who were thrown into it along with the carcasses of animals and the refuse of the city. If it be true that methods of human burial indicate the value which is placed on human life, these human slaves prove to themselves sufficient to indicate the spirit that lay behind Roman civilization. The collective tyranny was reproduced in the acts of the single citizen. His conscience spoke and expressed in the home of Roman carcasses that their own dreams and their own slave supplied them with almost every article that they needed, and made them independent of the fluctuations of the markets. That is the picture of a society needed to tell us to such reasons that if the decline of an empire in its children called "the most sad of all events in the history of mankind." It is a scene which should find its ultimate explanation in the narrow formulae of political economists. For a nation is a collection of individuals whose actions contain elements of surprise, and are unpredictable, and the sum of their characters is the national consciousness. Hence the national conscious may vary from century to century. On the private tombs of the Romans there have been discovered dedications to Nemesis. But we cannot measure every step of that long and tedious process of deterioration in their private tombs, which at last could find no by means to be written, with deeper meaning, on the tomb of the statesman of the Roman Empire of "Antinus," by W. Romaine Paterson.

Early Prest.

The Board of a village establishment in Richmond, Va., was called upon to hear one by a clergyman bearing the manuscript of a sermon. "I would like to preach the proofs of this by tomorrow," said the divine. The request was granted and the time allowed was beneficial. "You may give us a few days longer," he said. "No; I must have it tomorrow," he stated the minister. "I must deliver this sermon tomorrow morning in the city, or the next day—but tomorrow. Has a speech written without a job for tomorrow? I wish it less years ago, and now I can't make out a word of it."

Useful Hint.

A blank book for addresses is invaluable in every family. Into it is copied the post office address of the people with whom you have business. Its a speedy source without the job for tomorrow. I wish it less years ago, and now I can't make out a word of it."

Filling the Pipe.

A negro preacher whose supply of food was running low decided to take radical steps to improve upon his flock the necessity for contributing liberally to the church expenses. Accordingly, at the close of the sermon, he made an impressive pause, and then addressed the deacons. "Brethren, I'm sorry to trouble you, but I'm fixed in necessity, on account oh de scrumptious ob de land, I'm fixed in de silencial deficiency ob de circulation ob de commerce wid de church, I introduce one new ottermatic injection into it. It is so arranged that a half dollah ob a quahtah dah will fill de cash cushion without undue; a nickel will do a kaunt sufficient; a dime will do de congregation, an a suspendah half dah, an fifty cents, will fill de cushion, so you will gow'n gobbles an certainly. Let de collection now proceed. I'm taken off me hat an' gibs out a hymn."

La Belle Sauvage.

We may admire the virtue woman as we will, but the instinct of savagery will cling to her still. If society women can adorn herself with anything in the nature of scalps, or ear rings, or bracelets made of teeth and dangling gee gaws, she never loses her opportunity. She is now wearing her nails form with jewelled imitations of creeping things innumerable—London World.

Good Jobs for Canning.

"The earth is pear-shaped, says Fred Lane, of London, instead of "round like an orange," as the geographers say. This is a fruitful subject, and it is surprising that there have never been banana puns made on it before.

It is a serious mistake to neglect a weak heart. It is such a short step to chronic heart disease. When you notice irregularity of action, occasioning short breath, palpitation, fluttering, pain in chest or difficulty in lying on left side, your heart needs help—a strengthening tonic. There is no better remedy than Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. Its strengthening influence is felt almost at once.

ACCIDENT TO ACTOR.

E. H. SOTHERN'S FRIENDS FEAR LOCKJAW.

Sam's Hand Is Pierced by Nail When He Makes Stage Fall—Handker Shoots Tacks and Son in Mistake for Hen.

Thought to sustain lockjaw, E. H. Sothern's curtain last night was caused by a nasty accident suffered by the star on the stage of the Grand. Mr. Sothern was doing a bit in the opening scene when suddenly he stepped on Mr. Sothern's shoulder in the act of leaping from the box of Hamlet to the ground and some 15 feet below. Sam's left hand was pierced by a nail. He fell as he fell upon his knee. Blood was flowing from the wound in the palm of his hand. Mr. Sothern did not let his hand out of his sight. He kept it in his pocket and covered the pocket of the hand with his other hand. He did not let the audience know that he was wounded. Some of the audience thought that it was part of the act to keep one hand in the pocket and that it was very good. The wound was not dressed. It was thought that it would be better to let it bleed. The cut in the palm was about an inch long.

THINKS MEN DEER, SHOOTS TWO

Mistake of Hunter Kills Father and Seriously Wounds Son.

Mistaking his father and brother for deer, Clifford N. Y., while accompanied by his father and brother, shot and killed his father and seriously wounded his brother. The victim of the shooting was Jerome Clinton Bennett, who was 27 years old, and who, in addition to being a farmer, was a member of the Bennett Brothers' band, which played in the surrounding towns. The boy who fired the shots, Jerome Bennett, 17 years old, is a student in the Cortland Normal school. The young man, in his statement to the coroner, said that he was hunting with his father and brother, and that he saw a deer in the woods. He said he was sure the deer was a deer, and he fired at it. The deer, he said, ran toward the place where his father and brother were standing, and he then saw that he had shot his father and his brother. The boy said he was sure he had shot at a deer. The boy was taken to his home in Cortland by his father and brother, and there he told his story. The boy was not arrested. The coroner's jury exonerated the young man from blame.

DROP IN STOCK PRICES.

The Farmer Is Getting Richer and the Speculator Poorer.

Wheat and corn are going up and stocks are going down, says the Chicago Record-Herald. The farmer is getting richer and the speculator poorer, which some people will agree is as the line of march. Leiter, Wheeler and Moore now than they have been in months, maybe years. They are now down to the level of the time when Joe Leiter of McAuley's crowd, with The Bull of Prosperity on it. The decline has been general, affecting almost everything in the list of marketable stocks in the public and Wall street amusement dodge that the total shrinkage amounts to a round $3,000,000,000. But the value of the property concerned in the transfers of ownership represents that not been impaired to been impaired. In most cases the dividends will not be affected, the shrinkage only represents what the fans been induced and so forth. The geography involved who has lost the money in the sale depend upon it that there is no shrinkage. The property is worth just as much as it was before the confidence no longer have the bumpers value given them by the speculators.

The shrinkage is by no means confined to New York or to American stocks. It has been global all over the world. Russian, French, German, Dutch, Belgian and South American shares have suffered a marked decline, although in no case has it been as deep as that to be seen in the quotations of American industrials. London and Continental securities have dropped somewhat, mines in the Transvaal have shared in the general downward movement, and even the Kaffir shares have not been wholly exempt from the general decline. It is not quite so much of the beginning of the end as it was a few weeks ago, but it looks as if the end is near. Japanese Cotton Bonds have suffered a decline of 10 points, railway securities and government bonds have suffered to a lesser degree, and the whole World's Fair enterprise, which was to be a great boom in the stock market, has evaporated with the general shrinkage of the market. The World's Fair boom was a very popular one with the speculators, for it was based on the idea that the World's Fair would be a great boom to the city, and that everybody would come to it, and that everybody would want to buy the stocks of the companies that were organized to provide for the entertainment of the visitors. The World's Fair boom was a very popular one because the speculators hoped to make a lot of money out of it. It looks as if the speculators would be disappointed, for the World's Fair boom is not the only one that has collapsed.

BALLOONS IN RACE.

FOUR GREAT NATIONS VIE IN AERIAL CONTEST.

Nine Teams of Leading Countries of the World Race Until the Clouds at the International Airship Contest at St. Louis.

Nine monstrous balloons, representing four of the great nations of the world, started at St. Louis Monday afternoon on a voyage which was expected to add an important chapter to the history of aerial navigation.

The contest was known officially as the second international aeronautic race, and the prize a massive silver trophy and $2,000 in cash, was to be awarded to the pilot whose skill and daring should lead his air fairhest from the starting point. As the balloons were of similar design and material the race would go to the French, English, German or American aeronaut who was capable of taking the best advantage of favorable winds and who has the best guessed under adversity.

The race marked the entrance of the United States into competition with the European nations in a field which had been left almost exclusively to them in the past. It was through the efforts of the one last year in a race from Paris to Laeknesnt Frank P. Lahm of the United States crew that the contest was brought to this country. The three American teams entered in the contest were piloted by the rules of the competition the six great has inherent claim that the Aeronautic Club of America was in duty bound to enter in the contest, since the idea originated with a member of the club.

The average person who reads the newspapers and pays little attention to the doings of the aeronautic fraternity, may be interested in the question, Who are the men who are the aeronauts of the Balloon Race?

Among the objects this is to be sold is a diadem of diamonds, which the United States and Russia is and among the possessions of the princess's mother.

WHY JAPAN WANTS NO WAR.

Another Struggle Would Bankrupt the Mikado's Financial Status.

Japan's national debt is $1,000,000,000, a sum equaling almost one-seventh of her total national wealth. Of this amount $271,135,000 represents bills issued to cover the cost of the wars with China and Russia, and this amount has remained unchanged. These sums are, as an average, 3 per cent interest, making her income from about some $35,000,000 annually. To meet this debt, interest and national, and to provide for her running expenses, Japan has a revenue amounting for the year ending on March 31, 1903, to $111,000,000 and a sinking fund which, if she can continue to operate upon the taxpayer in paying the rate of wars of aggression that has been so fatal to the national purse, expenses of Japan will be increased by $15,000,000 during the next two years. Another war would mean a loss of her commerce, which has grown so rapidly that even now a people already overburdened may say defiance to the mikado, if he should wage a war against the United States with less vigorous than he or his struggle against Russia, even if she were successful in obtaining the indemnity for which she is asking the conflict. It will be conceded that Japan is paying 5 per cent interest on $111,000,000 loan in London and Paris and Berlin, through which the money was obtained, leaving 2 per cent unaccounted for, and that the money is expended in the United States. It is to this that the senate instructs the attention of the Japanese people, who are asking large in citizenship, to consider the question of the effect which the continuance of the war may have upon the prosperity of the country.

EXPLOSION KILLS FORTY

Du Pont Powder Mills Near Fontanet, Ind., Are Wrecked

TOWN IS WIPED OUT.

More than Six Hundred Hurt and Scores of Others May Die.

DESTRUCTION IS WIDESPREAD.

Mysterious Blasts Ruin Village and Spread Death and Injury.

Forty or more persons dead, almost as many fatally injured or hurt, and others injured more or less seriously, and a prosperous town leveled to the earth—such was the harvest of a series of terrifying explosions at the Du Pont blasting powder mills near Fontanet, Ind., Tuesday morning.

After the explosions, which followed one another with frightful effect, came fire, and what the one horror left unscathed the other completed. Thus many people who might have been dragged from the ruins and revived were the victims of the flames. Here, too, bodies have been incinerated in a number of instances, but twelve hours after the explosions the cremation was more literal to be by.

Governor Hanly and a detachment of the Indiana National Guard at once took charge of the situation. Only three joined up and down the wrecked, ungnarled streets. In and about the smoking ruins of the great powder plant practically all the hands in dispute, numbering, unofficially, over the nation of unknown Chinese. Scores of women and children whose husbands and fathers were missing were in the background, anxiously awaiting word from the relief corps.

Town Is Hopeless Ruin.

Thursday morning Fontanet was a pitiable sight, with the town of 1,000 population. That night it was a hopeless ruin. Every house, including houses, stores and saloons, was wrecked into pieces. A panic of terrific power swept all before it. Nearly all of these fatal bloody traces of the wholesale, fatal explosions will be seen hurried there by the Governor, and men, women and children in many months to come. The town is devastated. Not its people, not its property, not its industries, no, not even its name survive. Nothing of Fontanet is left. Its people, not a few of them, are dead, and the survivors are scattered in all directions.

The explosions at the powder mills occurred at 10 o'clock, and the town in the first one is a mystery and may never be solved.

Once the combustion had started there was no stopping it and one by one seven more mills were wrecked in sphinx. Ten hundred men were engaged at the works, but luckily only seventy, were in their buildings when the first explosion took place.

Big Mill Is Shattered.

The big press mill was destroyed first. This was at 9 15 o'clock. The shock was felt miles and miles in the ground. The ground shook for miles around. It is reported that the effect was felt in Indianapolis, 70 miles away, and it is reported that it was felt in Chicago, 300 miles away.

And then within two minutes the giants, one after another, in other buildings, burst outward and upward, and the ground shook and gave in all directions and killing men.

Next the two working mills and finally the mill of the Dupont Company, and one and one and one—one in a minute—the mills were wrecked, and the ruins were hurled in every direction from the main buildings of the plant and did not injure for over an hour. Then the flames which made hideous the debris had so kindled the atmosphere that the magazine exploded.

There were 40,000 tons of blasting powder stored in the magazine and every one, then up seemingly at the same moment. It was this detonation that was felt for miles. Houses and stores and factories in Fontanet and which brought death or injury to scores miles distant.

Shock Is Felt Far Off.

Throughout the surrounding country in farmhouses and country, churches, where women and children are terrified, people who might have been dragged from the ruins and revived were the victims of the flames. Here, too, bodies have been incinerated in a number of instances, but twelve hours after the explosions the cremation was more literal to be by.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO

In the branch mercantile exchange across through its trade, due to seasonal demands and shrinkages of irregular, double those of last year, bringing the highest points that season are found comparatively unknown to non-seasonal activity in business. Late pressure is also evident upon the market for cotton, for accessories and farmers are not so fast from cotton production which would be so more the purchasing power of the South, which is a very good thing for the leading department lines and merchants of central, interior and southwestern cities. Cotton is now selling from the last two years. Another war would mean a loss of her commerce, which has grown so rapidly that even now a people already overburdened may say defiance to the mikado, if he should wage a war against the United States with less vigorous than he or his struggle against Russia, even if she were successful in obtaining the indemnity for which she is asking the conflict. SOLDIERS' STORIES.

ENTERTAINING REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR.

Graphic Account of Stirring Scenes Witnessed on the Battlefield and in Camp—Veterans of the Rebellion Tell Their Experiences.

That William Quantrell, the noted Confederate guerilla leader, is not dead, but living under the name of John Sharp at Quantrell, on the northwest coast of Vancouver island, is the report that comes from Victoria, B. C., where he is said to be a resident. The report comes to Washington through a Western newspaper a few days ago.

Mr Quantrell has no doubt whatever that his cousin was killed in Kansas by the union soldiers, although the guerilla leader's career and his timely and tells many interesting facts regarding the matter.

Mr Quantrell obtained his information from the fair of the guerilla early from the latter's mother, Mrs. Quantrell died but a few years ago, at an advanced age at Canal Dover, Ohio. She was a Clark of Virginia, and a cousin of the celebrated Clark, and educated Thomas Clark Quantrell, who was not well and she lived with his in Washington, D. C., for a long time, she acquainted him with many of her son's exploits.

"Quantrell's mother told me herself," said the cousin recently, in discussing the report that Quantrell had turned up on Vancouver island under the name of Sharp. "I remember she was very pleased to a cousin, I remember one of them, a blue-eyed tomboy, whose name was Sallie. She identified the relatives as those of her son William. From the time of his death she always believed he had died of his wounds at that time. I never heard her express a doubt of it. She was a woman of force and activity, and had he been alive she would probably have known it and had located him. She has told me that if he had not been dead he would have come unannounced with her and that with the war closed he had no reason for keeping himself in hiding. She had received letters stories that he was living, but she paid no attention to them.

"William Quantrell had a younger brother, Thompson, who went to New Mexico and to Texas some years after the war. From there he may have gone to the Northwest. We have not heard of him for many years, and he is strongly possible he is the quantrell who said to be living on Vancouver island. I had an uncle, William Quantrell, who disappeared about the time of the opening of the war. When we first heard of Quantrell's guerrillas we thought it was my uncle that was leading them, instead of my cousin."

Mr. Quantrell's mother was a strong advocate of the cause of the South and to the boys and girls of the community he was forever made a hero. Mr. Quantrell, or "Bill" Quantrell, speaking of Kansas, said:

"The thing that can be said of Quantrell is he never harbored a woman or permitted his men to rob or molest a man that looked a woman. If he did he shot him. I know that he was making war on men and not on women.

"All of Quantrell's people were on the Union side. I have never heard of anything say what she thought of Williams fighting on the other side, except to remark that if he and not been arranged in Kansas he would not have taken the course he did. His father and the whole family were strongly Union. The Quantrells were of old Virginia stock, some of them joining the Know Nothing party, which resisted on America for Americans. Quantrell was a Know Nothing, and that William may well have inherited some of his fighting and military qualities. In 1844 grandfather joined a company of soldiers at Hagerstown and went to Texas in the defense of Bellmont. He was badly wounded in a shell at Mount Fly, from which he was left for dead. He was a ranger on the field and had to be carried a considerable in the regular army. He was discharged from the service because of his wounds. Grandfather Clark was a Whig and a Union Civil War. He was he concluded to take up his blessed land for a time and his office here in Washington.

"William Quantrell was a man of about my own build. Not long after the raids commenced, I remember, the report that Quantrell had turned up on Vancouver island under the name of Sharp. I remember that we were delighted in a sorely-regretted and sorry through the last eighteen months of the war with great credit. He grew to be quite a big lad while he was away, and later developed into a giant of a man. He was a big lad when he left home, and later developed into a giant before his wanderings days were over.

"I remember when he was a school and seem run down to Chicago and Cincinnati in the United States Army artillery. This was him to try The Bellefontaine, Ohio, and Sandusky. He identified the relatives as those of her son William. From the time of his death she always believed he had died of his wounds at that time. I never heard her express a doubt of it. She was a woman of force and activity, and had he been alive she would probably have known it and had located him. Mr. Quantrell says many things were charged against Quantrell, or "Bill" Quantrell, partisanship of Kansas that were not true. Quantrell was a Southern sympathizer, and he made no secret of it. He was a Know Nothing party, which resisted on America for Americans. Quantrell was a Know Nothing, and that William may well have inherited some of his fighting and military qualities. "PROMOTING" AMERICAN TRADE.

How German Engineers Are Promoting in Aeromobiles it

A Berlin dispatch reports that "much is hoped from the visit of American treasury officials to that country in the way of promoting American trade. In the steamship service is already anticipated that the Hamburg-American line will be so pleb as a pleasant way for the great Western Union to take place on schedule time. This year, I am happy to say, we shall begin a course which I fear will be steadily followed hereafter, namely, that of keeping the battleship fleet alternately in the Pacific and the Atlantic. Surely in November the fleet will begin its voyage to the Pacific, and I will number among its formidable fighting craft three great battleships named, respectively, the Illinois, the Missouri and the Kentucky." He added that it is a national fact to every sense of the term, the union of the Illinois being represented in all sections, being especially necessary in the Pacific, where we have to be structural shapes were, prior and cannot, yet, but there is an calling of in foreign delivering and not mills. New buildings continue into war.

Mercantile enterprises in the West make a satisfactory showing and orders are regarded brisk, while complaints are not heard. Jobbers are busy filling these phases in their movements for early and the unusually prolonged demand. Wholesale trade is active and prices remain steady. Local trade is fair and collections generally good, while business failures are comparatively trifling in virtually everywhere. Our good weather continues and crop prospects are good, and farmers are busy.

Bank clearings, $262,577,000, exceed those of corresponding week in 1902 by 24.4 per cent.

Failures reported to the Chicago Dun's and Bradstreet's last week and 26 a year ago. These were distributed as follows: Manufacturers, 2; traders, 24.

NEW YORK

Trade crop and industrial reports are generally satisfactory. Business in the jobbing trade has been largely passed by the retail trade, which has been busy in its shops, trade has distributed but moderately, and the demand for iron and steel from now on. So far the supply is so the time one conditions, being such that the demand for iron and steel and work and supply conditions in the East, Pittsburg, Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago, Birmingham, Bidding business is fair, with a good deal of business in prospect, while selling is quite active. Cotton goods are quiet

PILOT RULES.

A Brief Synopsis of Rules for the Government of Masters.

A glance at the Pilot rules of the great lakes shows that the signal of four short blasts is the danger signal, and is given when steamers are being navigated and are approaching each other, and the pilot of either vessel fails to understand the course or intention of the other, whether from signals being given or answered erroneously, or from other causes. The subject is treated in Rule 2.

Rule 12 covers the matter of fog signals. It prescribes the proceedings for vessels under way and for those at anchor. The paragraph applicable to boats at anchor reads:

"Any vessel at anchor and any vessel aground in or near a channel or fairway shall at intervals of not more than two minutes ring the bell rapidly for three to five seconds."

That portion of the rule governing vessels in motion is as follows:

"Whenever there is thick weather by reason of fog, mist, falling snow, heavy rainstorms, or other causes, whether by day or by night, fog signals shall be used as follows.

"(a) A steam vessel under way, excepting only a steam vessel with a tow in her, shall sound at intervals of not more than one minute three distinct blasts of her whistle.

"(b) Every vessel in tow of another vessel shall, at intervals of one minute, sound four bells on a good and efficient and properly placed bell as follows: By striking the bell twice in quick succession, followed by a little longer interval, and then again striking twice in quick succession (in the manner in which fire bells is struck in indicating time

"(c) A steamer with a raft in tow shall sound at intervals of not more than one minute a searching, of Modoc whistle for from three to five seconds.

"(d) A sailing vessel under way and not in tow shall sound at intervals of not more than one minute—

"If on the starboard tack with wind forward of abeam, one blast of her fog horn.

"If on the port tack with wind forward of the beam, two blasts of her fog horn.

"If she has the wind abaft the beam on either side, three blasts of her fog horn."

Out of Sight.

"Out of sight, out of mind," is an old saying which applies with special force to a sore, burn or wound that's been treated with Bucklen's Arnica Salve. It's out of sight, out of mind and out of existence. Piles too and cutaneous eruptions under its healing influence. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist, 25c.

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS.

Mr Chas Filley, claims the prize for the largest pumpkin raised in Northern Michigan. He has got five weighing from fifty to ninety pounds.

Miss May O'Malley who has spent the summer here with her aunt Mrs. Jonas Dudley, returned to her Chicago home.

E. W. Kane of Charlevoix, transacted business here this week.

Jos. E. Filley and Mrs. C. Hendy visited Charlevoix last week.

W. J. Gallagher spent Sunday with his family here.

Miss Kate J. Malloy who has had an attack of pneumonia is reported to be improving.

Capt. Larsen of the schooner Hone Dull has purchased a half interest in the schooner Sussex Simmons.

Quite an amusing incident took place here one day last week when the barge Adirondack lay here storm-bound. The chief Mr. H. Comosky went about town shaking hands with the older inhabitants calling them by name and relating incidents which occured years ago. Every one was inquiring who this man was that knew so much of the island's former history. Finally after keeping up this farce for sometime he disclosed his identity. Mr. Comosky spent his boyhood days on the island and left here thirty tive years ago.

Traverse City Eagle: With the large quantities of apples here, it is estimated that the farmers will reap a harvest of about $500,000 from this fruit alone, and the potato crop will bout the figures another $500,000, making a grand total of at least $1,000,000, which will be paid to the farmers before the two crops are all sold.

Warner and a Third Term.

Gov. Fred M. Warner on Saturday announced positively for the first time, that he will be a candidate for a third term as governor of Michigan. His platform, he said, would be the several messages he sent to the legislature during the recent special session.

We think the Governor is making a serious mistake. We cannot recognize any policy of governor Warner, touched upon in the messages referred to, that is sufficient ly important to warrant so radical a departure from established usage as to elect any man governor for a third term.

On the other hand, we cannot recognize Governor Warner as the Roosevelt of Michigan, with relerence to these aforesaid burning questions. We cannot bring ourself to believe that governor Warner is the calibre man in Michigan capable of grappling with the evils that attach to the body politic.

Governor Warner has been bitten by a Roosevelt-third term mad robie. It cannot be denied that this variety of lucrteria is abroad in the land. But the Roosevelt third term would be little second election term. Fred. M Warner, or no other man, can be elected governor of Michigan for three successive terms.

We do not believe Michigan ever had a governor who more fully dedicated himself to the work of the high office, with small regard to office greater honesty of purpose or more exalted courage. Few, if any, have excelled him in ability or popularity. Fred M. Warner has been a good governor.

But a third term for governor is a big bill for the republican party of Michigan to climb. The pilot does not instil the hazzards.

Gov. Warner is making a mistake.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Normal Notes.

The students of the Normal were very much surprised to find that Miss Hines had contracted a very serious cold and was unable to be at school Tuesday and Wednesday. Miss Hines had to give up her trip to the Teachers' Association held at Battle Creek.

County School Commissioner J. H. Milford, visited the Normal class Tuesday during Miss Hines' absence.

Miss Lois Cross, who graduated from the High School last year, entered the Normal Monday afternoon.

Jessie Cramer visited her home at Boyne Falls over Sunday.

The Normal Class were invited up to the High School to hear the talk given by Dr. Catton, Monday morning.

BEET TOPS The Sugar Co. has a large amount of beet tops for sale at a reasonable price. This is excellent cattle food, and will give of much value this year when feed is so very high priced. See Thos. Shapton or officials of the company.

NORWOOD NEWS.

Mrs. John Runyan died Monday morning and was buried in cemetery at Antrim City Tuesday. Mrs. Runyan had been in poor health for a number of years, and for the last 2 years almost helpless. Katherine Wagner was born in Germany near Darmstadt, the 22nd of September 1835, and came to this country with her parents in 1851 to Chicago. They moved to Milwaukee 1861, where she was married to John Runyan the same year. She came the same year with her husband to Northport and in 1862 moved to Antrim City, and in 1887 to Norwood. There were 9 children 4 of whom are living Henry and James Runyan, Mrs. Jacob Chew, of East Jordan and Mrs. Wenty King of St. James. The funeral service was held at the church in Norwood.

Hard Times in Kansas.

The old days of grasshoppers and drouth are almost forgotten in the prosperous Kansas of to day, although a citizen of Udell, Earl Shamburg, has not yet forgotten a hard time he encountered. He says: "I was worn out and discouraged by coughing night and day, and could find no relief till I tried Dr. King's New Discovery. It took less than one bottle to completely cure me." The safest and most reliable cough and cold cure and lung and throat healer ever discovered. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Traverse City Record: Mrs. Clara Hamsdell, widow of the late Judge J. G. Hamsdell, died at her home on Division street, at 11:20 this morning, at the age of 77 years. Mrs Hamsdell had been in failing health for some time, but was only confined to the house for a few days. The announcement of Mrs. Hamsdell's death death will bring sorrow to the hearts of many old time residents of the Grand Traverse region. In the days when families were few and widely scattered throughout Northern Michigan, the "Hamsdell Farm," on the western outskirts of the little village of Traverse City, was a gathering place for old and young, and many happy memories remain of the glad welcome given everybody, and of the years passed, and the home farm became widely famous as one of the most successful fruit farms of a great fruit region, the cheerful "help yourselves" to all comers gave added emphasis to the open-handed hospitality that always prevailed. In 1850 Mr. and Mrs. Hamsdell came to Grand Traverse making the trip on Indian ponies over the Grand Rapids trail. In 1852 the "Hamsdell Farm" was lonelight and cleared from the wilderness, and this was the home until Judge Hamsdell's death, a few years ago, when Mrs. Hamsdell sold the place.

CRUELTY TO HUMBLE HEN.

Man Complains of Mean Trick Played on Defenseless Biddy.

"The meanest trick I ever heard of," said a poultiverer, "is now being played on a certain family of New Jersey hens. This trick comes under two heads. It comes under the head of cruelty to animals and under the head of giving intoxicating drinks to minors. It should be taken up and put a stop to by our female societies. Let the sex stand by one another all the way down the line. "But I thought you were talking about eggs?" "I am talkin' about eggs. That is the point to my story. You know how hens only want to set at certain times after they've laid a couple of dozen eggs, mindin? Well, on this New Jersey hen farm I speak of they feed the hens alcoholized grain, and while the grain, unprocked creatures are under the influence they place them on top of hooks or eggs, and when they come to themselves the poor is a blank, they think they laid the eggs beneath them, and for many days sexual there difficulty until the chicks are hatched. It's a money-making trick, but it ain't right. To make a poor hen drunk—to involve her besides in so important a matter as that of offspring! How would you like to be deceived about your offspring? No, sir, it won't wash, and it ought to be got a stop to."

VIRTUE IN THE EELSKIN.

Worth Trying by Those Who Suffer from Rheumatism.

"Why don't you get an eelskin?" said the old "specialist" to me, as I chatted for an hour or so with him, and rubbed his knee, giving interest to a half-wondered, exclamation that I had had with eels, here and world like those. "What good would an eelskin do?" groaned the sufferer, musing "Can I you know." Was the answer, "that an eelskin is the very best thing you can try for rheumatism? Some folks think that the eel, being natural to living deep in the mud, and there gives a virtue to the skin, and that makes a rheumatic joint as thaw as the eel itself, but I guess there isn't much in that notion. It's a kind of minute, you know. That the eelskin really does do good and the way it does it is this. The eelskin is just like leather, only not so thick, and it feels like a piece of tough silk that has been soaked in oil. Now, you wrap the eelskin round your knee and tie it on, or pin it on, it doesn't matter which, and it keeps the joint warm and the oil makes the skin soft and after awhile your rheumatism is gone. Sounds laugh at the idea and eat it up, old woman's notion, but some old women's notions are pretty good notions."—Philadelphia Ledger.

PLEASURE FOR AN EVENING.

Novel Idea in the Way of a Church Entertainment.

Here's a novel idea for a church entertainment which requires little preparation. A rustic bridge was built out from the stage, lacking a space across that was used for a fish pond. Rocks and ferns were grouped along the edge of the stage, the floor was covered with green carpet, and a pretty meadow scene painted on canvas, motion was hung at the back of the stage, making a very picturesque setting for the pond, says the Cooking School Magazine. Steps led up to the bridge, and as the foot was a rustic lodge, where, on payment of a fee, the prospective fisher was given a pole and a circlet of cardboard upon which was marked the number of times he was entitled to fish. Thus equipped, he went up to the bridge and fished in the pond. Tickets were also sold by the bridge keepers. Refreshments were served, and there were candy and cake tables and booths where fancy articles were sold. One of these stalls bore the sign, "Fish Market." Here fish of many brilliant colors and quaint shapes were for sale; there were blotters, shaving cases, pin cushions and sachet bags. On the cake table were many luxurious fishes—chocolate and clear candy fishes and boxes of candy decorated with water color and pen and ink sketches, sun sandwiches cut out with fish-shaped tin cutters, also cookies and small iced cakes. At intervals singing and tableaux may be given for variety.

Why the Rain Stopped.

The other day it started to rain. When it stopped and I remarked, "I wonder why it does not rain?" my little boy, four years old, looked up at the sky and said very earnestly, "I guess they must have turned it off upstairs."

HAD A USE FOR THE STOVE.

Doctor Knew Where He Could Place it to His Advantage.

The following story is being told of a certain celebrated Parisian doctor, whose domestic troubles are said to be not altogether satisfactory. He was called in one day to prescribe for a lady who thought she had influenza. But the doctor, after observing her symptoms, looked about the room in order to discover the cause. Suddenly he perceived the stove, a very beautiful work of art, and exclaimed: "My good madam, that stove is the cause of your trouble. It is filling your room with poisonous gas, and if you continue to use it, it will soon be killing you." "But doctor, it cost me 1500 francs!" "No matter! better lose your money than your health." But as the lady seemed unconvinced, the doctor added: "I will give you compensation this price, and see if I cannot get rid of the thing." So the stove departed. Later on the patient was changing her apartments and went to look at some others that were being vacated. In one of the rooms she inspected she perceived her former stove. "Who is living here?" she inquired. "Madame, the mother-in-law of the famous Dr ——," was the reply. With a smile of understanding the lady left.—Tit-Bits.

ERIE CANAL HELD ITS OWN.

Showed That Inland Waterways Were by No Means Obsolete.

When the New York Central parallelled the Erie canal, over 50 years ago, it looked very much as if canals were a thing of the past. When the Erie canal had fallen in public opinion to the "raging canal" of the humorists, the death knell of the Erie canal did not rage at all. It kept growing—slowly, as befits a canal. When it was completed in 1825 it was four feet deep and 40 feet wide, in 1835 it was deepened to six feet and took barges of 240 tons burden. Later it was given another foot, and was enlarged to a width of 70 feet at the top and 56 feet at the bottom, and there it remained. And while the railroads competed strenuously, its boats kept appearing at Buffalo and hauling the treasure by the only and original route to the sea. As late as 1907 it is said to have carried as much through freight as the three two track lines together, and it kept on doing it, despite the long drawn jeers of locomotives.—The Century.

Stove Buyers Find They Can Save Money
Stove buyers have found that we can sell them stoves of every description at prices which give them the greatest values obtainable. Many who have expected to buy from mail order houses have carefully examined our stoves, learned our prices and discovered that there is only a slight difference in price between the cheaper and the best grade of stoves, and the old adage, "Good goods are always the cheapest," was never more fully demonstrated. If you will call and look over our line we will demonstrate these points and then leave it to your judgment what and where to buy.

—The first number of Vol. 2 of the Charlevoix High School Hustler was issued from the SENTINEL office Monday. Of the typographical feature of the publication we shall say nothing—we leave that to others. It has, however received many compliments. The editor in chief is Bert Young, and the young man has done excellent work, and has also every member of his staff. The Hustler is an honor to the high school.

—A new act to regulate the license of commercial fishing has now come into effect. All boats engaged in the fishing industry need be registered and pay a fee from one to twenty five dollars, according to the boat used. Row boats pay one dollar, and the steamers are rated from five to twenty five. The rates for non resident are much higher, being as much as $200 in some cases. This fund is turned over to the state game and fish warden.

—Capt. Preston H Uberroth, of the revenue cutter Tuscarora, has notified all steamers that the cutter is at the service of the steamship line generally, and that captains should feel no hesitation in signaling the vessel at any time in case of distress. The Tuscarora has also been placed at the disposal of the various life saving crews of the lake. Capt. Uberroth having sent his address to Harbor Springs, Sault Ste. Marie, Whitefish Point and Mackinac Island. No charges are made by the government in cases where assistance is rendered.

—The Nessen Transportation company of Manistee, has purchased the steam yacht Signia from the Armour line. Next year the boat will be equipped with a 500 power Duke's turbine engine. The Signia is credited with a speed of seventeen miles an hour and with the new engine it is expected that she will develop twenty. She is a wooden boat built in 1893 at Trenton, Mich., for S. C. Reynolds of Toledo. Later she was purchased by the Armour line and was used last season to carry excursions out of Mackinaw City. She was out in the gale of last Sunday on Lake Michigan, when some of the lake's large craft had to seek shelter. She measures 125 feet over all, has a 21 foot beam and a depth of 11 feet. Her cabin is built of mahogany.

Old Friend Gone.

The steamer city of Grand Rapids was totally destroyed by fire at Tobermory, Ont., one day last week.

She was burned the very day Judge Swan gave the order which finally winds up the libel case which caused her sale in Detroit in the spring. The boat was sold by the United States marshal to William Reid of Port Huron for $4,010 and claims against her aggregated $4,995. This added to the costs of the court, which are paid first, gives the creditors their accounts in full with the exception that 1905 creditors will have about $200 loss to be divided among them.

Judge Swan ordered the distribution of the funds Wednesday afternoon and almost at the same time the boat burned at her dock in Tobermory. The present owner is a man named Gillen of that place. She was valued at about $7,000.

The City of Grand Rapids was built at Grand Haven, in 1879, for Hannah, Lay & Co., and was brought out by Capt. O. E. Wilbur, of this city, who afterwards owned her.

The Deer Sleyers.

County clerk Lewis has issued 150 deer hunters licenses. Those who go from this vicinity are: W. E. Hampton, D. E. Bowman, A. Stockman, George Newland, Raymond Newland, L. Gould, O. D. Hammond, Art Allen, Sandy Towers, E. A. Tepper, Frank E. Wood, and "the nine" the county clerk blamed.

The season opens Sunday the 10th, and continues one month. The bunch will mostly leave for the north to day. The greatest "kill" on record is collected from the lumon of hunters. Already a vanguard of nearly 2,500 men has gone to the upper peninsula from lower Michigan points, and the main army is yet to follow.

Camps are being established in favorite localities by both local and outside sleuths, and other preparations are being made for a strenuous campaign. Deer are reported plentiful, notwithstanding the fearful ravages of wolves and the apparently scarcely less destructive work of woodchoppers and others suspected of securing fresh meat with their rifles, and if the way her is propitious and snow comes to carpet the woods to permit the tracking of wounded game, a record breaking slaughter is not improbable.

Doubtless from 10,000 to 15,000 deer will be killed in Michigan during the season. A number of hunters, too, will be slain, and many more grievously wounded.

Time was, in our day here, when a Charlevoix chapmoid go out and get a deer most any day in the season, and get his breakfast and supper at home. We have seen many a deer brought in from Marion and eastern Banks, and have seen them come in from the woods and swamps yearned with them. We have seen them lowsing by the roadside on the Pine Duke pitsania, and within six miles of Northwood. We have seen them driven through the little town of Charlevoix and into Round Lake.

Sugar Factory Start Postponed.

The sugar factory was to have started up to day, but, on account of the recent rains, which have prevented beets from coming in in sufficient quantities to insure an uninterrupted run, the general manager has decided to postpone starting up until Thursday, Nov. 14th.

J. H. Reed, a prominent farmer living near Pentoma, has harvested a yield of four acres of potatoes, which yielded 1,152 bushels.

CONCERNING POTATOES

Equity Society Proposes to Establish Prices This Fall.

Floyd P. Fox, of Williamsburg, has returned from Indianapolis, Detroit and other market centers, where he has been in the interests of the Grand Traverse Bureau of the American Society of Equity. He spent nearly a week at Indianapolis attending the annual convention of the national union of the society, says the Traverse City Eagle.

Among other things he took part in the deliberations of the produce and grain growers' section and helped to establish the minimum price for potatoes, which price was fixed at 70 cents a bushel for the central markets. In fixing the price, reports from the other potato growing states were taken into consideration. These reports were as follows: Minnesota, one-half a crop; New York state, one half a crop; Wisconsin and Maine each two thirds of a crop.

Seventy cents at the central markets means from 50 to 55 cents at Traverse City. Part of the delegates believed that the conditions warranted placing the minimum price at 75 or 80 cents, but a majority were inclined to place the price at a figure that was sure of being realized.

It is Mr. Fox's opinion that the potatoes in this region are worth 50 cents or more at the shipping points and that the farmers can get better than half a dollar if they will but hold on for a while.

Some large stories of the yield of potatoes this years are being rehearsed, but this one which comes from Acme against the suspicion of the outsiner, yet is vouched for by the owner of the farm. G. C. Silver raised from five acres of new ground 2,000 bushels of the tubers, giving him the big average of 400 bushels to the acre.

The Rural New Yorkers in the vicinity this year planted and produced 425 bushels of marketable stock. Mr. Silvers has been offered 40 cents per bushel for the entire crop, but will not accept as he is firm in his belief that a fancy price is sure to come a little later.

East Jordan Postoffice Burglarized.

The postoffice at East Jordan was robbed shortly after midnight Saturday night. The safe being blown. How much was secured is not known as yet but the amount is said to be not large.

Sheriff Bill Tuttle and his blood hound, Tom, were summed from Bellaire and the dog followed the trail to the village where he lost it entirely. It is the supposition that the thieves came up in a boat and left in the same manner.

The work was evidently done by professionals, entrance being made through a rear door, the lock being carefully cut out. The door of the safe was drilled just above the handle and the charge of nitroglycerine was inserted there. Although the postoffice building is in town two cities, nobody heard the explosion.

The burglars were evidently frightened away as they left their tools behind, including a set of line steel drills and some high grade chisels.

On some of the tools, there was blood showing that an accident, probably during the explosion, had occurred.

Just master Frank Kenyon was in Charlevoix at the time of the burglary, and the robbery was not discovered until 8 o'clock Sunday afternoon when the clerks came down to finish up some work they had left undone Saturday night.

Special Legion Meeting.

A special meeting of the National Protective Legion will be held in Odd Fellows Hall next Wednesday evening, November 13th. District Manager E. D. Born will be present and address the meeting. A good program has been arranged, and refreshments will be served.

The Ironton and St. James Legions have been invited to meet with the Charlevoix Legion, and a good time is expected. All members should make an effort to be present.

BITTEN BY MAD DOG.

Mrs. Ella Fox and Three of Her Family Victims of Rabid Pet Canine.

The shocking news was received here Tuesday from Grand Rapids that Mrs. Ella Fox, her son, Bert Fox, Mrs. Bert Fox and her mother, Mrs. Bert Fox and her mother, had been bitten by a pet dog that suddenly went mad.

All four at once left for Ann Arbor to take the Pasteur treatment, and are there now.

It is the opinion of eminent medical authorities, fortified by quite an extensive record of cases, that prompt treatment effects a cure. It is therefore sincerely hoped that there will be no serious results.

WARDENS SET TRAP.

Work a New Game on the Lake Fishermen.

The state game warden's department has sent a 64 foot yacht on a fish net inspecting trip around the lakes, and by telling a clever story to inquiring newspaper reporters succeeded, for a time, in keeping the mission of the yacht a secret.

The new laws affecting net fishing required considerable change in the form of nets, and the state game warden decided to cover the entire Michigan fishing ground. For that purpose it hired a fine gasoline yacht from a Chicago patent medicine manufacturer. The yacht is named the Knickell. And this is the story that was published at several points where the Knickell met up a deputy warden posing as "Mr. Knickell."

"Why, yes, we're from New York. We're doing a trip from New York through the Erie canal and the great lakes, and are going to New Orleans via the Chicago drainage canal and the Mississippi river. We have taken the gulf of Mexico and Atlantic sea coast home. Yes, about 3,500 miles. Big trip for a 64 footer, 40-horse power, isn't it? Yes, and fine, the visitors would be shown over the boat. The boys generally tied up for "repairs." But the secret leaked out at Bayport, while the boat was poking around a big string of nets, and got caught at it by a fisherman who recognized one of the deputies. The "boat from New York" story is now a sore point with many lake port newspapers.

The Knickell is reported to have been in Charlevoix harbor recently, but did not make any stir. She went from here to Traverse City.

It was a sore trial for Maddy to drive to Lucy Atherstone, but she offered no remonstrance, and so accompanied the carriage was a little gaze, filled mostly with pressure of Mr. Hart and which would be very gratifying to the omnipotent Lucy.

Now that it fully decided for Jessie to go with Maddy, her interest was suspended, and Alexander for the time being was turned down as a disappointing matrimonial agent. With his usual generosity, they had given Agnes permission to drive home in his phaeton whenever was needed, unless he herself or Jessie, with the lady who understanding that Maddy should begin an equal share in dress and attire, this point was left undecided.

"So will not be necessary," he said "for you is obliged to stay at home with Agnes with regard to Maddy's position." She goes there as Jessie's guest, and her position must be original.

No one knew how long with Maddy Clyde sensitive becoming interested in her, which is only a natural result of her long sojourn among, particularly as at late she had seen no signs of a similar interest in the direction of Hart. He had gotten over his weakness, she thought, and so was very anxious to handle Maddy, who naturally intriguing, began to take her better from she had seen Jessie Hart's attentions to him to be proud and brought a sense. Jessie was pleased, too, for she knew there were some circumstances held and many fears expressed, which she thought as to what would be the result of all this being done for Maddy.

A few days before Maddy's departure, grandma was taken with a violent paroxysm of anxiety to know something more than she knew about a person, whose care her child was to be partially intrusted. Agnes was in her room at the time, and turned to see her in startling quickly, she turned so deadly white that Maddy, who brought the message, for she had been in the room, much alarm what was the matter.

"Why, a little faint, I'll soon pass off," Agnes said, and then, discovering Maddy, she rallied herself enough to say, "Tell Jessie to come to me, I feel so much dreaded, so I am exposed to everything."

"Poor dear! Hal they changed her past recognition! She looked, she believed, and yet, how can it be, for Alexander Remington's heart beaten with so much warmth and generosity, as when she entered the reception room where Guy was talking with the doctor and also with Jessie, and yet, the change in her face was powerful, why were glad almost as the portrait when, at the expiration of a week, Guy came back and took up his old life of activity and business, with nothing in particular to interest him, except the books and the letters he wrote to Lucy; minus, indeed, it were those he was going to write to Maddy, who, with Jessie, had promised to become his correspondent. Nothing but these and the picture—the doctor's, I mean—the one Guy carried, somewhere, and which remained his greedy. Believing that he had fully intended it for the doctor, he felt as if it were, in a measure, stolen property, and this made him prize it all the more.

Now that Maddy was away Guy seemed far darker, wandering home, he had ever lived without him, and sometimes had been meddling with his plans. He remained himself with driving like a second John until he reached Homebluff, where a pair of soft, dark eyes looked up into his face, and a little, warm hand was clasped in his, as Maddy came over to the gate to meet him.

She was very glad to see him. The cottage with its humble schemings did seem lonely, almost desolate, after the life and bustle of New York, and Maddy had grown into some one to think how hard and wicked she must be growing when her hope had ceased to be the dear old home she once loved so well. She had been here five days now, and notwithstanding the efforts of her grandparents to entertain her, each day had seemed a week on the morrow. Neither the doctor nor Guy had been near her, and (said little Maddy had made herself believe that the former was sadly remiss in her duty, inasmuch as he had not seen her for so long.

Maddy was getting to be a woman, with romantic freaks, as the reader will read in her, and the fact that she was particularly piqued. She did not take his attention as a matter of course; still she thought more of him, if possible, than of the doctor, during those five days, trying to herself each morning "He'll surely come today," and to herself each night "He will be here tomorrow." She had something to show him at last, a letter from Lucy Atherstone, who had gradually grown to be her regular correspondent, and whom Maddy had learned to love with all the intensity of her girlhood. To her the imaginative Lucy Atherstone was but a little lower than the angels, and the more sweet thoughts contained in or by letter were doing almost as much towards molding her character as Grandma Markham's prayers and constant teaching. Maddy did not know it, but it was those letters from Lucy, which kept her from being like Hemington. She could not, of course, associate him with her well when she so constantly thought of the time the husband of another, and that other Lucy Atherstone. Not for worlds would Maddy have wronged the gentle creature who wrote to her so cordially, so kindly, saying her in that she could so often see his face and hear his voice, which he intended was wounded from his by many thousand miles. Little by little he had come out that Lucy's mother was averse to the match, that she had met with the case of an English lord, who would make her daughter "My Lady" and this was the secret of her deferring so long her daughter's marriage. In her last letter to Maddy, however, Lucy had written with some hesitation, but usual spirit, that she would come in person to her property on her twenty-fifth birthday. She should then feel at liberty to act for herself, and she bounded out into joyful anticipations of the time when she would come to Aikenside and meet her dear Maddy Clyde.

Once upon to talk with Maddy, asking how she had spent her time, and so forth, Guy's mind had left the doctor, who, she said, had not been to see her at all.

"He was coming this morning," Guy remarked, "but I persuaded him to delay his call until you saw it Aikenside." Jessie came to take you back with me, as we are to have a party day after to-morrow evening, and I wish you to be present.

HINDOOS SAVED THEIR FOOD.

Head of United States Customs reports Nearly Prefamed It.

Five Hindoos, attired in native costume, were Steerage passengers on board the steamship Panama, which arrived from Colon. They were taken to Ellis Island for examination, says the New York Post.

The men were greatly excited when, in handling their baggage, which was wrapped in heavy cloths, the customs officers nearly tumbled and pelmed one bundle which contained food. The customs men quickly appreciated the situation and drew back their hands, and then the food was not pecfamed.

Two of the men called themselves Hidoo Singh, two Nanda Singh, and the fifth Wir Singh. The latter appeared to be of lower caste than the rest, and he was treated accordingly. Various were the tales about the Hindoos some persons said they were members of a theatrical troupe, others believed them to be in search of work.

One Hidoo Singh, whose English was by no means perfect, appeared to be the leader of the party. His turban was red, while the others wore white turbans. He said that he had been working in Peru as a watchman. He and his companions were sikhs, having the religious requirements in the British army. He himself had served five years, said Hidoo Singh.

He showed a letter of recommendation, signed by the Peruvian Consul, saying they had worked at watchmen on the Panama canal. They would return to India, remarked Hidoo Singh gravely, if they could find no work here.

Dr. J. Anderson, third officer of the Panama, and Charles Mitchell, the freight agent, were detailed to take the Hindoos to Ellis Island from the pier at the foot of West 27th street. The party started to walk to the subway station at 23d street and 5th avenue. The Hindoos had their bags slung under their arms. It was a long walk. They had gone about half way when they began to grumble. Suddenly all had sat down their baggage.

"We no go," said the spokesman, Hidoo Singh. "Where you take us? See, there is a carriage. You make us walk. Everybody on street look at us. Think we have no money when we walk. Why you no give us a carriage?"

Anderson was sure that the line would not pay cab fare for five steerage passengers. The Hindoos, however, were obdurate. Finally an idea struck Anderson. He pointed ahead to the elevated and said:

"See up in the sky. There is the carriage on the tracks. Come on." The words followed.

The Hindoos evaded their own food on shipboard, and said their daily prayers with much ceremony.

SERVANTS OF GOD BRANDED.

Sermon by Rev. C. H. Wright.

I have branded on my body the marks of Jesus. (Gal. 6:17.)

The life that is dedicated to God hath all its sons in Hia. So the Apostle Paul counts the marks of the Heroes rolls at Fishbus Anthoch, of the stones at Epsica, all the genius of ancient times and the instruments resulting from accidents and exposures enlisted in duty doing as heroes of Jesus's glorled in them as the hall mark of the Lord.

All these brands of some sufferings encountered during his heroic career together formed the scarlet letter of Christ's sonship, as his Hero Body, because his life was dedicated to Him.

Again he declares, "I died unto Sin, that I might live unto God. I have been crucified with Christ and I no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me." These are the marks of the Hero life in His name are His and the scars received in this blessed servitude are His also.

The disciples who gave his shoes and socks to a wounded soldier and suffered from frozen feet and farce we need not be surprised at the wounds of the soldiers, and the circulation of sinister rumors as to the wounds of Grant and Sherman whose crushed limbs a bullet-comes filled with the wounds of the soldiers, and the long men carries to day scared on his face and breast by the cut of its Lord. Of all who gain their scars, disease or sufferings in the blazing fire of battle, the Christian soldiers are the Hero servants, His heroes.

Sometimes we are sorry to those who do things; they are the penalty paid for the high privilege of service, the inevitable consequence of the Christ-like conference or the cheerful seizure of opportunity to serve Christ. Of those we are and whom we serve treasures them as being His own superscription written in their bodies.

Well may I ask myself then, whose servant am I? Are I the Hero of the rough experience of life war as fearfully, both visible and without?

As the history of Francis only be read in the names of the saints of Paris, so the history of the life of Jesus is recorded in the marks it has left upon his character and on body.

If we would follow the nightmares of the past and that not the right means left by ministers and ministries in the days gone by, we must merge ourselves with Him whose blood cleansed from all sin, whose service lifts away from the things that are behind and leads into the glorious unique reward. Mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

The Master's work demand sonner, study, and so does the servant of Christ. Ministers, as such, are not the only ones who are called to do work which is assumed practically all of the trials and sufferings of Christ which were laid by the evangelical Protestant churches. Perhaps it is not a bad thing that he did it, because it is the culmination of the drift that has been going on for years. We are a working sorts than our's a clergyman that ought to be a Christian.

A prominent man said to me the other day that there was not a church in his section of the country that exercised the discipline which he would approve. Some of what are termed the "religious preaching." The question is asked among them why men do not go to church, and the only be an indiction. In the tremendous life which we live, concerning Jesus and suffering in his cause, something more is needed than the mouthings of an indictable theology.

Why should a preacher close his eyes to what is the common sense knows is going on in every community? Perhaps he has a right to do so. There is impurity, but nothing is said about it. There are corrupt political combinations. We are told that we are working in Peru as a watchman. He and his companions were sikhs, having the religious requirements in the British army. He himself had served five years, said Hidoo Singh.

He showed a letter of recommendation, signed by the Peruvian Consul, saying they had worked at watchmen on the Panama canal. They would return to India, remarked Hidoo Singh gravely, if they could find no work here.

GOTHAM BANK CLOSES

BIG KNICKERBOCKER TRUST COMPANY IN TROUBLE.

After Ran Exhausts $6,000,000 Reserve, Directors Order Home Institution Seek Exchange Ruin Visits for $6,000,000.

During a day bordering on wide-spread financial panic, New York Tuesday witnessed the suspension of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, the second largest in the country, with deposits aggregating more than $62,000,000; the failure of the stock brokerage firm of Mayer & Co., whose liabilities are estimated at $1,000,000, and the serious embarrassment of six banks and another trust company.

The resignation of Charles T. Barney, president of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, precipitated a run on the four branches of the bank in the morning. The directors announced that they had plenty of money to meet all depositors, but the rush grew so great that at noon after a conference, it was decided to close the bank temporarily.

The day's events included the suspension temporarily, and possibly for longer time, of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, a concern with $12,000,000 of deposits, from the selling in panic prices of shares on the stock exchange; the rise of call money to 70 per cent; a run on the Lincoln Savings Bank, and the circulation of sinister rumors as to the solvency of other trust companies whose credit has hitherto been unassailed. Credit, the bulwark and support of all business, was shaken to the foundations and the general banking situation became so critical that the Treasury Department was forced to act. The entire financial machinery of the government was set to work to prevent a crippling financial trouble.

Immediately after the suspension of the Knickerbocker Trust, William Curnan, fourth vice president of the company, issued a statement stating assuming that it which he assumed the responsibility of closing the bank, adding that, indirectly causing the crash by destroying the confidence of the people in the institution.

President Roosevelt in a speech at Nashville, Tenn., denied responsibility for the recent financial disturbances and uneasiness. He defined his policy as one of "publicity, honest dealing, and the enforcement of law," and declared that for the remaining sixteen months of his term this policy shall be persevered in unswerving.

FINANCIAL CONDITIONS.

Reports from Various Commercial Centers of the United States.

CHICAGO.—The Chicago financial situation is as strong as the Rock of Gibraltar. Banks have found safety in their own examinations. Local institutions have not felt the financial disturbance. They have attended to commercial department business in a way that to their own satisfaction. Local institutions have been free from the panic. Business in this same section of the country is being done with as much confidence as ever.

PITTSBURG.—Pittsburg's financial interests are not disturbed by the recent panic. Local banks have not felt the effects of the financial disturbance. Business in this section of the country is being done with as much confidence as ever.

ST. LOUIS.—There is no reason to fear a serious business depression in business. There is no cause for alarm. Business in this section of the country is being done with as much confidence as ever.

KANSAS CITY.—Financial conditions in Kansas City are healthy. West of the Mississippi River and Kansas City conditions have been unusually prosperous and the current banks have always of course.

MINNEAPOLIS.—The time has passed when Wall Street operations can have any serious effect upon conditions here. Business in this section of the country is being done with as much confidence as ever.

SAN FRANCISCO.—There is absolutely money in the commercial banks here and business transactions are thought to be based on account of any of the Eastern troubles or financial panics.

DENVER.—Banking and business interests in Denver have not felt the effects of the Wall street flurry.

PORTLAND.—The financial situation in this city is remarkably good. The banks of Portland have a fine money on hand. Business is good. The city has never been a hotbed of speculation. Our clearing house reports are satisfactory.

BALTIMORE.—Bankers and business men are satisfied with the financial situation. Local banking institutions are in a healthy condition.

MILWAUKEE.—National and private banks are doing business with a confidence today. They have prepared for any emergency that may arise.

CLEVELAND.—The flurry in New York had no effect in financial circles here.

ELLEN M. OLSON

CLARA L. DARMSTADTER

The responsibility for a daughter's future largely rests with the mother. The right influence and the information which is of vital interest to the daughter imparted at the proper time has not only saved the life but insured the success of many a beautiful girl.

When a girl's thoughts become sluggish, with headache, dizziness or a disposition to sleep, pains in back or lower limbs, eyes dim, desire for solitude, she is at the parting of the ways between ill health, her mother should come to her aid, and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, will at this time more than any other thing, change, and start this trying period in a young girl's life without pain or irregularities. It has been thus depended upon for two generations.

Hundreds of letters from young girls and their mothers, expressing gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for them, are constantly being received.

Miss Ellen M. Olson, of 417 N. East St., Kewanee, Ill., writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"I have had the best doctors in our town of my ailments and they all said an operation was necessary. I had headache, I was nervous, had pains in my back, and was so weak I could hardly stand. I took two bottles of your Vegetable Compound when my periods were established and now I am perfectly well. I do my own housework without any assistance in the house. I have told our girl what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me and she is taking it now."

Miss Clara L. Darmstadter, of 453 Breckenridge St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"For about a year, except during the pain, I was well. I suffered with severe pain every month, with headache and headaches. I was so nervous that I was in despair. It is a pleasure to tell you that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done the change in my appearance is wonderful. I am well, strong, healthy, and full of energy. Any one desiring to know further details can write to me and I shall be glad to answer."

If you know of any young girl who is pale and weak, mother's advice, ask her to address Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and she will get every detail of her symptoms, and to keep nothing back. Mrs. Pinkham's advice has helped lately free, from a source that has no equal in the experience of her life, and it will, if followed, not her but the right path to health and happy womanhood.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from native roots and herbs exactly where others fail.

Dave Jenkins was just past 16 years old when he enlisted in a Federal regiment in his native State, Missouri, as a volunteer at the commencement of the Civil War. Dave was a bright boy, strong as a horse, quick as a cat, and had not an ounce of superfluous flesh on his bones. He passed muster through a number of the several last tests of the war, among them Pittsburg Landing, but at last he was captured by the Confederates and taken to Andersonville, Ga.

He volunteered he had about one hundred dollars in United States money, greenbacks—no his person, and some tickets of different kinds, all of which he was allowed to keep; he also had a big knife and a good pair of brass buttons. The inside of this knife was so made that it could be operated upon with the teeth, and when separated, the big blade was in one part and in the other part was a fork, which could be opened and used like a knife blade, and a tweezer, which was also hard, was at large—in short of an ordinary telescopic, and which opened and closed upon the handle with the button part of the handle was the tweezer. The boys in the prison pen will remember this kind of knife and will tell you what a very useful implement it was.

The condemnedest soldiers, many of them, had no tobacco, and Dave, who had he refused all offers to sell, or trade, or give away, was the only man who could spare a piece of tobacco, and he was marked in the prison pen. Dave was a good shot, and he had a short distance away, and kept quiet, and he shot a Rebel, who was in no wise concerned. IGNORANT CITY BOY

MIGHT HAVE LEARNED MUCH FROM COUNTRY COUSIN.

A Least One Trick With Horses That He Was Not Familiar With—No Problem for Man Who Knew.

A city boy, he was playing in the street when the rubber ball he was tossing slipped from his hands and leaded just back of the off hind foot of a big gray horse attached to a truck and standing patiently by the curb awaiting further orders.

The boy made several furtive reaches to recover the ball, but at actual possession hovered close previously to that selective foot and iron shod hoof he hesitated. A rapid search of surrounding territory resulted in the finding of a piece of stick about six inches long.

Its length was disproportionate to the danger zone, but the boy's sense of peril decreased as his anxiety grew to the possible loss of his plaything. He made a quick job with the stick, but succeeded only in striking the animal a hard knock, causing it to groan in agonizing.

A second attempt and the horse's elbow was struck. The big gray started forward. The youngster hardly had time to jump out of the way of the front wheel. Then the animal, with blinds consciousness, backed up again and in so doing placed his hoof on the ball and pinned it to the ground.

Frightened by his close call from injury and grieving for the loss of his plaything the boy looked around uncertain whether to laugh or cry. Just at that juncture a tall, broad shouldered man with whiskers of the hayseed variety turned the corner.

He saw the boy's final attempt to recover the ball and his undoing escape from injury. Two strides and his were beside his victim.

"Ain't you got no sense?" he demanded. "Want to get run over or have your brains kicked out?"

In a few sentences the boy explained the situation and pointed to the ball. The big man patted the horse on the flank, spoke a few soothing words to the animal and took his hand deftly and patiently down the leg until he reached the hock.

"Git, boy, git!" he commanded and the animal accustomed to frequent examinations of the hoof, obediently lifted his leg.

With his free hand the big man extracted the ball from its resting place and tossed it to the lad, who undoubtedly scampered away without failing to thank his benefactor.

"Twas thunder how them city kids don't know nothin' about horses!" said the big man illustriously as he dusted off his hands and resumed his way.

Worth Walking For.

As the stylish girl was going home a travel old woman stopped her.

"Please," said the woman, "will you give me a little money to buy me a cup of tea?"

The girl looked at her hard. Her eyes were watery. She seemed dead tired.

"If you will go to my stable with me," she said to her, "I will make you a cup of tea. I will with pleasure."

The old woman looked hard at her.

"I suppose," she said, "you have to walk up a good many flights of stairs to get to your stable."

"I do," said the girl.

The old woman shook her head.

"I can't walk upstairs," she sighed. "I never could."

"Could you walk if I gave you a little of something else?" asked the girl.

The eyes of the old woman brightened.

"I could," she faltered.

The girl turned on her heel.

"There's nothing doing," said she.

Chivalrous Americans.

Woman is too enthusiastically worshiped at all times, her faults must never be discussed, and in her must be found all the noble qualities, all intellect, the physical a tractive, the leadership that belongs to the ideal aristocracy. And surely candor will admire our hard-headed money-grubbing kin beyond the sea for the idealization of our sex. It has kept them emotional, sympathetic, chivalrous, and this, surely, must be counted into them for good.—London Lady's Pictorial.

Betting on the Sexton.

"It took a conversation I overheard at the close of the church service last Sunday night to bring me to a realizing sense of the virulence of the prevailing grippe," said the busy New York woman. "I actually heard two boys betting on the skill of the sexton in snuffing out the candles. One set 25 cents that he would extinguish each candle at the first application of the snuffers, the other that he would. I had been watching the proceedings with the same thought in mind, but it had never occurred to me to bet on the outcome."

Fair.

Miss Smith—I see that the legislature has passed a law prohibiting the women from wearing stuffed birds or feathers on their hats.

Aunt Maria—It ain't fair. I've heard of how the men in the cities wear swallow-tail coats and they never say a word against it.—The Bohemian.

Wooden Spoons of Brittany.

The making of wooden spoons is a considerable industry in certain districts of the sleepy Brittany, and whole families are employed almost universally in turning out the spoons by the thousands. Many an old sailor takes up the carving of these necessary utensils as a means of livelihood.

NOTHING ELSE TO DO.

Jim Hance Explains Event That Left Him a Widower.

Jim Hance is one of the characters who go with the circus season of Arizona—part of the general plan, so to speak. Jim has a ranch about 12 miles from the cabin hotel, and he comes over there at times to talk to the tourists.

Jim likes to tell stories to the tourists. He thinks he has a copyright on all the tales of the region, and, in fact, considers himself one of the guardians of the canyon.

A woman from Boston was quizzing him one day. "How does it make, Mr. Hance," she asked, "that you never married?"

"Oh," said Jim, "I had a wife once, I reckon."

"Lost her? How was that?"

"Why," said Jim, shedding a tear, "I married a girl out here and she was the prettiest thing you ever saw. I took her over to the ranch to live, and we were very happy. She always wanted to go down the canyon on my trail, but I kept her from it until one day when she wouldn't be put off no longer. So I took her. I mounted her on a dandy mule and we started. On the way down, just at the worst point, with a narrow trail and a sheer drop of 5,000 feet on the other side, a bee stung the mule on the flank. The mule rose up and my wife fell off and ever into that awful abyss."

"What happened?" exclaimed the Boston woman.

"Why," said Jim, "my wife fell into the most inaccessible part of the canyon, and it took me two days to get down there. When I did get there I found her. She had broken one of her legs."

"Well?" gasped the Boston woman.

"Oh," said Jim, as he moved away, "of course, I had to shoot her."—Saturday Evening Post.

Famous Women of Japan.

Women played an important part in the early history of Japan. To a woman, the Empress Jingu, belongs the glory of the first conquest made by Japan, that of Korea, A. D. 201. Dressed as a man, she led her fleet over the unknown waters, across which she name back as a conqueror by the westward "It was ancient," she said to her chiefs, "the glory will all be yours, I will be responsible for the infamy of a possible defeat." The Korean fall their wealth at the feet of the conqueress and the king swore that as long as the stars shone and water ran down hill Korea should be tributary to Japan. This achievement of the empress gave rise to the beast of the Japanese, "The arms of Japan shine beyond the seas." Thus the most important fruit of her victory was the introduction of Buddhism from Korea, as well as Asiatic art, science, medicine, and literature. Jingu, however, was never actually proclaimed head of the empire. The first female ruler was Suiko, and since her time eight empresses have governed Japan, some of them with great wisdom.

Londo's Awful Smoke.

Sir William Richmond, a well known member of the Royal Academy, finds instances in unexpected directions to give a human side to great men in his lectures but hitherto unsuccessful campaign against the London smoke nuisance. Lecturing the other day, he told his hearers that the late Sargent and early falls in London were caused entirely by smoke. The pallor of Londoners was due not to the same cause, for the smoke excluded the sunlight, and where there was no sunlight there was no color. He went so far as to ascribe certain physical deficiencies of the poor to his pet aversion. Proving that nothing could grow without light, he declared that poor girls with often toothless, white lips such roses and streaking chins as common sun on the poorly bred natives of London were largely due to the absence of it, the cause by smoke.

New Fire Escape.

A Swiss engineer annoy from a new fire escape. It consists of a series of folding iron ladders contained in frames, attached to the window cases, each resting on the window below. By merely turning a small winch on any floor all these frames are pushed outward from the building, the ladders extended and accepted one each set with each other, thus forming a continuous communication from the top floor to the ground. The mechanism is simple and takes less than a minute. When not in use the escape is barely visible, and does not disfigure the facade of the building in the manner that the ordinary outside iron staircase does. A public test of the new escape has proved successful, and the Vienna fire brigade representatives have vai essed their approval of it.

She Caught Her Idea.

The teacher of a public school class of little girls had been endeavoring to impress upon a her pupils the significance of the comparative and superlative degrees.

"For example," she said, "there is a coin that is good; there is one that is brighter—which is the comparative. Then, here is one that is brightest—which is superlative."

After using several other illustrations she asked for other comparison illustrations that would demonstrate comprehension on the part of the children. A golden haired child prompt.

"I know," said she. "This is one; Rick—worse—deaf."

"Bedens, said the teacher.

To Stop Bad Odors.

Nut Trees in Sorts.

This is a great country. Twenty of soft and almost useless has one or more nut trees adapted to the business.

Gift from the Heart.

A little nine-year-old invalid lately contributed his mite to the Boston floating hospital charity by sending a beautifully wrought scrapbook, over which he had toiled patiently for many hours, with the Brockton Enterprise. The little fellow, who lives in a nearby town, ties all day with his back strapped to a board and a weight attached to one foot.

Be Polite.

Every lovely, kindly grace is worth cultivating and will add much to your happiness and usefulness when you are older. A rude, disharmonized person is shunned and disliked in every circle, and unless the opposite habits are formed in early life they are seldom formed at all.

Dignity of Sorrow.

Strong and pure natures know how to thrust their emotions deep down in their hearts, forbid a sad or tender mien in unveiling their troubles, when the homes word can express their depth, and bearing the misery of grief alone, the world to understand them.—Exchange.

A Japanese Candy Store.

Shops in Japan are all so day and lack so much alike that it is difficult to tell it, I guess but what kind of a shop each one is. But all Japanese boys and girls know the candy shop at sight—the spilled half—and just where to go whenever they wish sweets of any sort.

In Sarcastic Mood.

As civilization advances, and human relations grow in complexity, the man who has his eyes yet area not, and ears yet Lenx not, finds more and more his place. The blind will inherit perhaps, when eyes will be cheaply purchased in ready-made glasses, and ears to hang the chain over.—Puck.

Ballooning.

The science of aeronautics is almost a fait accompli. There are only two points left for aeronauts to discover and then the problem will be solved. They are: First—The means of raising themselves by the air. Second—The means of keeping to there.—Pole Mele.

Dream That Came True.

During a dinner in Baltimore his fiancee a young man at Hostivar, near Prague, told of a dream he had that night. The young man, in his turn, rose, as a precaution, to remove a pistol from the wall, but as his touched it it went off and killed the girl.

Modern John Bull.

The stolid John Bull of the eighteenth century, with his imperviousness to criticism, has given place to a most excitable and almost hysterical person, who cannot be recognized as his lawful descendant.—Country Life.

New Word, Old Disease.

Literature is enriched by a new word. It is "stereotyky." It is synonymous with "chronic rheumatism." When a person says the same thing over and over, that person has stereotyky. Though a new word, the disease is very old.

The Piratical Flea.

There is no creeping, crawling or flying insect which can approach the positive, piratical flea in strength. Rice considered, he is the Samson of the insect creation, and his mice will make a very neat set a pay-day movement on him.

What Would You Do

If three good physicians should pronounce your case hopeless. If they should divide that you could not live longer than six weeks. And if you should get well after using only $12.00 worth of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine what would you advise a friend in like condition to do?

"I have to think him for saving my life like the words are. My last doctor said I could not live longer than six weeks. I had taken enough of your great medicines to fill a barrel bottle from the door to quietly walk out of the house. I am now well and working. I thought for years I had heart trouble and kidney disease. I thought I could not live. I was so bloated with dropsy that I could not walk. Now I feel better than I did in all the months. Pills and medicine I have taken by the barrel. Your Heart Cure and Nervine are the best medicines I have ever taken. Yours sincerely, and have been for years."

A Definition.

Introspection is the habit of looking at yourself from a purely impersonal point of view and viewing out your faults—if you have any. You must be sure, also, that your astral color matches that of your friends, or is at least harmoniously contrasted, otherwise the charitably of your self analysis will go to smash, you know and scatter the wallpaper. I never saw an astral color, and neither do you, but we've all got 'em—yes, indeedy.—From the Inglenook.

Want Motor-Transport Wagons.

The Indian government is, it is said, considering the desirability of using motor-propelled wagons for frontier and mining produce of out-of-the-way districts to market. —The Chicago Tribune says: "Predictions are freely made that if the prohibition law in Maine really does not become a national political issue within a few short years it will be because the issue itself will have been eliminated by state legislation rendering the manufacture and sale of liquor impossible. The temperance movement is sweeping the country in an irresistible wave, and soon, it is asserted, no whiskey will be sold in the United States except in the large cities, into which the criminal elements of the country will flock. The trend is toward enforced sobriety, and the makers of liquor are plainly alarmed."

See bills.

The SENTINEL has another great clubbing offer to make it readers. For $2.00 we will send the SENTINEL and New York Tribune Farmer one year. This offer is open to all who pay one full year in advance for the SENTINEL. The Tribune Farmer offer is still on we will send both the SENTINEL and the Tribune Farmer one year for $1.00, with the same conditions as to renewals.

—The new sparrow law, which was passed by the last legislature will, no doubt, be interest to many of our young hunters. Sparrows can be killed in lots of not less than ten and must be presented to the township, city or village clerk, and an order can be issued on the county clerk for them at the months of December, January and February of each year. The birds can be killed and sold any time during the year but pay can only be collected during these three months.

—When Chas Chaddock, of Smith Arm township called at the SENTINEL office yesterday, it awakened memories of the early days. Mr. Chaddock is living on the farm that he located as a homestead in 1867. In 1868, and for several years afterward, he was pilot on the Fox & Co. tug Commodore Nutt, which towed steamboat wood down the lake. Although 69 years of age Mr. Chaddock is still hale and hearty. Will's here he was the guest of County Treasurer Payton.

—Fred Haymond's famous comedy The Missouri Girl will be the attraction at Charlevoix Theatre Saturday night, November 16th. The fact that this is the twelfth season for this play is the best possible proof that good, clean, wholesome theatrical productions are always welcomed and generously patronized by the theater going public. The comedy is so cleverly interwoven with bits of pathos and such sensational incidents as would actually occur in the lives of such people as exist in The Missouri Girl, that the entirety is a revelation in simplicity and interest in play building. Mr. Haymond has equipped the play with the best of accessories, and has spared no expense in making its production one thoroughly worthy the patronage accorded it.

The New Primary Law

The new primary law passed at the special session of the legislature is a modification of the law of 1905 and leaves that act still in force in part. Under all previous primary acts this one is not subdivided into chapters, but only into sections.

Scope—Governor, lieutenant-governor, United States senators are to be nominated by direct vote, also congressmen, legislators or county officials in districts which have adopted the law of 1905 or this new law. County officers, except ward officers, can be nominated by parties adopting law of 1905 or this act.

Submission of direct nomination proposition may be made in cities on the first Monday in April of any year in other political districts in the year preceding November elections.

Dates—General primary day, first Tuesday in September, except in cities electing officers at other times than November election, in which cities primaries will be held the second Tuesday before such election. Enrollment days for party voters shall be on Saturday preceding the first Monday in April, first Monday in April, Saturday preceding September primary, the September primary day and registration days provided in city charters. Enrolled voters may change party affiliation on enrollment or primary day on taking oath.

Petitions to submit proposition must be signed by 20 per cent of total number of enrolled voters in affected districts and must be delivered to secretary of state thirty days before first Monday in April.

General primary—First Monday in September preceding general election, when candidates of all parties for governor, lieutenant-governor and United States senator shall be voted for, also party delegates to county conventions of party which has adopted direct nomination methods. State central committee to notify electors, commissioner of each county of number of delegates to state convention allotted and chairman of county committee to certify to them the number of county delegates to which each precinct is entitled.

Candidates' petitions—To be signed by enrolled voters equal to two per cent and not more than four per cent to the number cast by that party in the district for secretary of state at the preceding election. Petitions may not be filed later than fifteen days before September primary or eight days before city primaries. In case of non-partisan candidates for governor, lieutenant-governor and United States senators, must furnish nomination petitions signed by ten electors. Other petitions of new parties must have 25 signatures of electors. Parties not in existence the first Monday in April need not submit question of direct nomination.

Plurality votes shall nominate except in case of governor and lieutenant governor where a plurality and no per cent is required, the nomination prior to a convention. All candidates of parties not operating under the law of 1905 or this new act shall be named in convention. All county conventions in the state shall be held on the same day, and within fifteen days after the September primary. State conventions must be held within 40 days after the September primary. The call must be issued 30 days before the primary.

Penalties are affixed for the usual offenses and the primary day is a legal election day. The more important prohibition is that no state officer, elective or appointive, or state employe, may circulate any nominating petition or work in behalf of any candidate before or on primary day.

Miscellaneous—No man's name be printed on more than one party ticket No person shall solicit votes or sell liquor within 100 feet of polling place. Polls to be kept open until last voter votes. Enrolled voters may be challenged. Election act on local offices not affected by this law.

CAPT. ED. BEDFORD

He and His White Lake Life Saving Crew Save a Crew.

The small steamer, Carrie A Ryerson, of Grand Haven, became partly disabled by the breaking of her propeller shaft 15 miles north of Whitelake lighthouse in a heavy sea at 8 o'clock one night last week, and the crew were at the mercy of the waves. Two members of the crew, whose names have not been learned, volunteered to try and make the shore in one of the lifeboats. After several thrilling escapes from death, land was finally reached and the men managed to reach a place with a telephone office. They communicated with the life saving station.

Captain Bedford with two of his men got out in a lifeboat and after a long and perilous trip reached the disabled craft and the crew of seven men was taken off. The life saving station then signalled a schooner bound for Whitehall, which made fast for the disabled boat and the men were brought to Whitehall.

IRON ON CLAVER ISLAND.

A Test to be Made of a Deposit Discovered Years Ago.

Several years ago a vein of iron ore a few feet below the surface was discovered at a point about the middle of Beaver Island. A test was made on shallow borings and the ore found to be 40 percent iron—hardly high enough grade to insure profitable working. The investigation was anything but exhaustive.

When in Chicago last week, Mr. W E. Stephens, of the Beaver Island Lumber Co talked with people interested in this sort of an enterprise, and the outcome is that a mining expert will go to the island this week and investigate the deposit.

Probable borings will be made and the depth and extent of the vein ascertained.

DOSENT LIKE LAKES.

Skipper of Swedish Tramp Ostergot Glad to Leave.

Typical of the ocean tramp is the Swedish barkentine sailing from Norrkoping, Sweden, now unloading pulpwood in the River Rouge says the Detroit News. She is a stanch craft and appears as if she might weather any storm, although she is less than half as large as a big lake freighter.

The boat is in command of Capt. A. P. Larsson, a real salt water skipper, with Capt James S Beatrish, of Detroit, as sailing master. The Ostergotland has been on the lakes this season, but she is about through and will soon head for the broad expanse of the Atlantic. She loaded the pulpwood at Detroit and after discharging the cargo she will proceed to Montreal, where she will take on a cargo of apples for Rouen, France. "I have had enough of the lakes and will never come back," said Capt Larsson in strong Swedish accent. "Too many canals to navigate with one boat."

Although the Ostergotland could be comfortably stored on the deck of a fine liner of the lakes, Capt. Larsson grinned sarcastically when asked how the fresh water lens thaws would set on the ocean.

"They're all right in their place, but their place is not on the ocean," he said.

Peter F. Loelke has just returned from Grand Haven, where he purchased the Fancy Hen a passenger and freight boat about the size of the Crescent, and will run the boat on the bay and up the Inland Waters Harbor and Traverse. The Dunkams will be sold and Captain Beary will have charge of the Fancy Hen. The price paid by Mr. Loelke was $2,500.

The annual meeting of the Northern Michigan Teachers' Association will be held in Petoskey Nov. 28, and both East year's meeting was the most successful the association has ever held and the committee proposes that the coming meeting shall be still better. The first session will begin Friday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. Some prominent educators of the state, notably President Lamoreaux Olivet College, and Professors Sims and Barbour of the Ypsilanti Normal, will be present and take part in the program.

The Inexpensiveness of Good Taste in Writing Papers....

Of a woman's belongings, which fulfill all the requirements of good taste, nothing can be bought at so little advance in price as fine stationery.

Eaton's Art Linen

sells at a price that is but a few cents a box more than the every day sort of writing paper, and yet is used by the most fastidious of women's circles. Too paper is made in many beautiful and stylish shapes. We should like to show it to you.

Gov. Warner's Igora Patient.

We do not claim the gift of prophecy, but there are some things in the management of county that even the omnipotent voter can guess and analyze.

We predict, that if Gov. Warner persists in his candidacy for a third term, he will, before Nov. ballots, cast, call for deliverance from his best friends.

We repeat and emphasize what we said last week concerning the pro-Igora services of Gov. Warner. He has been conscientious and diligent, but he has also been enormously aggressive. Those who love him for the enemies he has made are not a few.

In last winter's senatorial contest he was both igorous and right. He was so potent a factor in that congressional contest that Saul Warner could be conceded to have defeated Hill and cast the toga upon the shoulders of Wm. Alden Smith.

We painted him for his courage then—we praise him now.

But down around the Saginaw county there are knives and harpoons and Hillite hombs secreted in the coal mines and salt wells. If a man named Warner, and they will all be dog-gy and used vigorously when any opportunity presents itself.

Once upon a time there was a man named Atwood who long wore the mantels of a republican major general. He was interested by the Warner administration, and are political strength at the executive board and the exigencies of politics eliminated him from active service.

Around in a shower" now, and very much alive. There are other issues both in the open and in the under. The issue upon which was fought the recent legislative battle goes out of an honest difference of opinion that always obtains in the experimental stage of any great reform of the franchise. Michigan is not alone in this regard. Much bitterness has been engendered that discloses any thing but a healthy condition with which to enter upon a gubernatorial campaign.

The third term principle purely impossible. The people will never stand of it. Moreover, it is wrong to attempt to usurpe them that they simply rotten precedent should be abrogated in order to vindicate the governor, when the issue involved and, for the time being, represented in the ethical personality of Gov. Warner, can be as well tested with any one of a hundred other equally good men as a candidate.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Petoskey Republican: Mrs. E. J. Fitzhugh has returned practically fully recovered from her illness, and her hundreds of friends extend to her a warm and glad welcome and their best wishes and congratulations.

East Jordan Enterprise: Mrs. Ina Shaghn and family departed Saturday morning for Aberdeen, Washington where they will join Mr. Shaghn. A large number of friends were at the train to see them off to their new home.

The board of Supervisors of Kalkaska county has raised the salary of the school commissioner of the county to $1,000. The office is held by a lady, Miss Grace Getty, whose ability along educational lines is so well known that her reputation is quite wide.

For several years the spearing of white fish has been permitted in Torch Lake while prohibited in Elk Lake. Last winter the spearers of this section got busy and secured the passage of a special law, which gives the same privileges on Elk Lake as on Torch.

The East Jordan Herald tells of a lady in that town who had read the new gasoline cook stove and went and purchased a ten cent can of red paint with which she went over her gasoline car. This being so well pleased with its appearance she gave the kerosene car the same treatment.

Traverse City Record: William Desmond, of Kalkaska, well known in this city, succeeds J. W. Cliffe Monday as manager of Grimwell Bros. branch music house in this city. Mr. Cliffe has undergone a deserved promotion and in the future will do special work for the company, this work consisting of closing the big deals, etc.

Elk Rapids Progress: When it gets to the point that a train runs over and kills a four year lapful this and a school girl meets a big black one face to face near Williamsburg, we have been the man within the past two weeks, it certainly reminds one of pioneer days. In this section and makes one think that we are still in the wild and untamed north country.

Northport society ladies are taking advantage of the high price paid by fruit growers for apple blankets and are forming apple picking parties, going out to the orchards and reeding their $2 and $ 50 per day for their services. The apple crop is immensely heavy this year and help is scarce, even children being employed at $2 per day by some of the farmers.

Traverse City Record: A supposed wild and untamed Indian shed in the regalia of a genuine scalp taker and carrying a bow and arrow put a number of Traverse City people in night last night as he sauntered suddenly upon Front street near the Little Tavern. Investigation proved the aparition to be none other than Robert Agnew, the tailor, who was rigged out in the costume of Nabisipah and was hurrying across the street to the Hopkins' photograph gallery where, instead of shooting his bow and arrow, he posed while the photographer shot him.

The business men of East Jordan have hit upon a unique scheme to show people in their city and we hope it will be a winner. Next Thursday times will be held a free public auction and dollars exchange at that place. The business men furnish the auctioneer, clerk, yard for stock, etc, and invite everybody to take advantage of the occasion to dispose of anything they wish to sell, including stock, implements, vehicles, furniture or in fact anything they have which they do not want. The object is to bring seller and buyer. It will doubtless have a big crowd for everybody enjoys an auction.

A company has been formed at Traverse City to develop the water power of the Manistee river for electrical purposes. The authorized capital stock is $4,000,000. The first dam will be known as the Tyler dam. It will have a capacity of 5,000 horse power and for two thirds of this there is now a ready market. The estimate of the construction engineer embraces lines running from the first dam to Cadillac, Traverse City and Elk Rapids. Besides this dam it is possible to construct three other power dams on the holdings of the company. These dams can develop about 20,000 horse power continuously for 24 hours and about twice that amount for ten hour runs.

That there is money in the cultivation of ginseng is a fact borne out by the experience of growers both in northern Wisconsin and upper Michigan. A region in which considerable attention has been given the novel industry during late years. The roots of the plant are in great demand in China, where, in some form they enter into the composition of almost every medicine concocted. A recent leaflet of the profit that it is possible to achieve in raising ginseng for market is reported from Wausau, near which place seven years harvested from beds aggregating 3,132 square feet, roots that, when dried, weighed 840 pounds. At $ a pound, the present quotation, the product was worth $5,880. In addition to this, however, the plants were productive of a large quantity of seed during the five years they were permitted to grow, and this seed has in turn produced much other ginseng, the total value of the harvest from the area of materially less than an ordinary sized building lot being estimated at upward of $20,000.

Traverse City Record: Attorney J. J. Tweddle returned this morning from the Beavers where he has added another large tract of timber to his holdings which now amount to 770 acres, consisting of cedar, hemlock, pine and other soft woods, with several tracts of hard wood timber. He was also looking after the interests of George Hamilton who is building a mill on High Island. It will probably be in running order before Christmas. Mr. Tweddle is preparing a petition to send to the auditor general to set aside the taxes against an old Indian burying ground on the Big Traverse which has been sold for taxes. It is an unusual case, as it was not taxable property, but had been taxed in recent years and the taxes not having been paid was laid in by the state. The burying ground has been in use for the past 100 years or more, and a photograph brought back by Mr. Tweddle shows the graves, each covered by a wooden shed, some of them were shreds of what the original had been. They are placed promiscuously about the cemetery, there being no attempt at ranking rows or having family lots.

A Hard Hole to Pay.

"I owe a debt of gratitude that can never be paid," writes L. S. Clark of Westfield, Iowa, "for my life from death, by Dr. Kings New life pills. My lungs were so seriously affected that death seemed imminent, when I commenced taking New Discovery. The continuous dry, hacking cough quit before the first bottle was used, and two more bottles made a complete cure." Nothing has ever equaled New Discovery for coughs, colds and all throat and lung complaints. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. druggist. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Letter to a Priest.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: This story cuts two ways, and teaches two acts of people.

Father Gavin, Westerly, R. I., had his church and residence painted. Good job; and this is how he went at it. Measured all carefully—seems to have known Devoe.

Then got bids from the painters, paint to be supplied by them and by him.

Save $70 by using Devoe.

One of those painters ought to have got that money. Yours truly

AS SEEN BY ENGLISHWOMAN.

Rhapsody on American Scenery Astonished Mrs. Jonathan.

"When you have seen the Golden Gate you will wonder at the difference between Turkey and California. But keep moving"—poor Mrs. Jonathan was getting awfully tired—"and at north now past Shasta and Hood, and Rainier, and their lesser satellites of snowy peaks, to Seattle, a city sitting on more hills than Rome ever knew, and take a steamer for the Inside passage to Skagway. There you will find a new land of the Midnight Sun, with Nome no less grand and gloomy; or turn from the shadow to the sunlight and stop in southern California. You have seen the Riviera? Yes?" Mrs. John didn't give Mrs. Jonathan time to even nod an affirmation, but was going again. "You will see a Jerusalem far more there. And you will behold the old, old palaces little clinging to the new. Such flowers, such scenery, such fruits, such sunshine, such—but words are I promised not to chase sodie, didn't I?" Turn eastward now, going through the Mojave desert, stopping on the way to stare and stagger before the awful magnificence of the Grand canyon I told you of, and to see the petrified forest, as a reminder of ruins older than Palmyra and Babylon. At New Orleans, a little southern Paris, take a steamer up the Mississippi—though down it is quicker—for a thousand miles through the land of cotton and the cane. Thence into the Ohio, and for another thousand sail through a picturesque valley in Pittsburg, where the iron works and money make Tubal and Vulcan and Tubal Cain look like 30 cents, as you Americans say. Then there are the coal fields of Pennsylvania, the gold fields of the far west; the great plains that seem to have no end; cities that have risen in a night to wealth and power, colleges whose buildings are as massive as those in Paris and women who are science and not literature—

Mrs. Jonathan took a long, long breath.

"Good gracious!" she exclaimed. "I do feel as if I had done all that."—Outing.

Gray Horses in Maine.

After a disquisition on the value of gray horses as compared with horses of other colors, the Parkhurst writer says: "Do you make change in farmer's religion or politics, make him think he is rich and handsome, coax his wife to run away with you, or sell him a dog, but you will never make him think a gray horse is not a jewel. I read somewhere recently that gray horses were not up to the standard, or words to that effect. I never was so astonished in my life. I have always thought, and do now, that gray or white horses were the handsomest, highest breeds on the planet.

"The celebrated Arabian horses are white or dapple gray. Famous generals in all wars have ridden white or iron gray chargers. Circus men select gray horses to draw the band wagon at the head of their show. A packing company always selects Percheron horses, not so much for the color, but because their feet will stand traveling on the pavements better than any draft breed. It is said that Joan of Arc rode a milk white horse, and St. John, the revelator, saw a white horse in heaven (Nov. 6: 2). Half of our draft horses in America are white or gray, and all other breeds will are 90 per cent of them of that color."—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Boys a Motor Car as He Buys a Hat.

It's nice to be able to buy an automobile as you would a hat. Some people will tell you that it is impossible that there are none ready for immediate delivery. Yet according to first rate authority an American in Paris walked into an agency and boarded about him with the following result: "That's a well-appearing Mercedes. Above par?"

"Yes, sir."

"What's it cost?"

"Thirty-five thousand francs."

"Good machine? Works well?"

"Yes, sir."

"Accept my check for it?"

"Yes, sir."

"Have it a real good Mercedes?"

"Sure, sir."

"Very well, I'll take it. I'll make out the check now."

All in no time.

Faithful to the End.

The dying crackled continuously, the enter huddled in the great pot, and stood in the shade of a palm. Its naked savages began to sharpen their knives.

"Is there no hope?" murmured the doomed commercial traveler.

"None!" hissed the chief.

"Then," said the young man, pointing to his outside case, "if you are determined to eat me, at least let me ask you, as a best favor, to try one bottle of Jamaica with the feast, and convinced that one trial will secure us your permanent patronage, and [—]

But strong arms seized him here, there was a splash, and all was over.

CHAPTER XV.—(Continued.)

A parti, a big parti, such as Maddy had her eye on for Agnes, was How her eyes sparkled from many soliloquies as she leaned upon her chair, and looked at, or, rather, through unseeing parlors with the pretence of looking at things which she would admit she did not, with considerable that to open eyes young, full of life and hope, for life. Maddy, wanted to use the force of it! and yet there was some sort of effect on people that so nearly fourteen years there was a little, perhaps, more than little in them than it was colleague, had to fall from where the sunlight was concentrated. Besides that, grandpa had faith in Gus, and so his coming was greater, and Maddy was sure he was in Aikenside when presented a larger house appeared since the last time, and Mrs. Remington Dogan was well with delight, dragging them at once into pink dress which she was to wear, and whispering to Maddy that Gus was "just splendid!" and "quite fire hot" and that Sarah Jones was at that moment sulking in a fit of chagrin half there in Maddy the previous summer.

"Mother dear," said Agnes, as she put her aggregating for a "social get" for Gus, "I think it would be better for him to be model after the party, it was what you needed, and—and—" Here Agnes was a little at a loss, and—as she was—she was a little, only, not quite.

He was dressed elaborately that evening, and looked, Agnes felt, as fine as he had, and of a strong to a little from Maddy. Maddy was dressing for the party when Agnes came to her room, and Maddy was standing in front of her mirror, with her back to the door, and her head thrown back, and her hands clasped behind her, as she looked at the reflection of herself in the glass. Agnes was sure she was thinking how pretty she was, and how she looked in her new dress, and how she would look when she was Mrs. Gus Remington Dogan, and how she would look when she was Mrs. Maddy Dogan, and how she would look when she was Mrs. Maddy Dogan, and how she would look when she was Mrs. Maddy

HER GIFTS TO JOHN

OF COURSE HE SHOULD HAVE BEEN PLEASED, BUT—

Possibly Presents of Some Other Kind Would Have Been More Acceptable to That Worldly Minded Individual.

Of course it would not be so bad if he was one of those nice, helpful men who can discriminate between underwear and unmentionable lace and can speak feelingly of cedar bar, moths in wall paper, but he is not that kind at all.

He is just one of those hustling, hoeing Hustlers, who is director in half a dozen big corporations and who rushes around on the floor of the chamber of commerce, forcing the market up or down as his interests lie.

He only has one weakness, and that is his wife, who is a small doll of a woman, deeply religious and who loves pretty things.

The other day she went off to Phil Sheridan to attend a missionary convention, and thence to Atlantic City, with a group of delegates. Her return was heralded by express packages and souvenirs galore from the colonial shops of the seaside town, and she was showing her trophies to a friend.

"didn't you bring John anything?" questioned the friend, knowing that John must have set up a neat check to permit of this extravagance.

"Yes, I brought John several things," replied the wife, "but he doesn't seem very enthusiastic over them."

"For one thing, I brought him a hour-ibl salad bowl. It is to represent a tomato on a leaf of lettuce. So artistic, the red tomato on the green background."

John shot an agonized glance at the visitor over his newspaper.

"Then I bought him these," continued the wife proudly. She displayed some $10 worth of Esau indian beads, they will be perfectly sweet when I give an afternoon tea.

"Put them into all I got for John," she added quickly as she intercepted another exchange of glances between her lord and master and the visitor "I got him this!"

There she produced from a burnt drawer a square of parchment. It was framed in wire and emblazoned with seals.

"Oh, bank stock!" cried the visitor. "Now, that is something like!"

"No!" retorted the wife scornfully, "better than that. It is a life membership, price $10, in the Woman's Foreign Missionary society."

And then she wondered why her mean bad husband and her husband had the room.—Rochester Sunday Herald.

Flirt and Coquette.

Does man like the coquette? Many prefer the flirt, though to many the terms are synonymous. The coquette "sees man as she does her shoes, like to be seen with them a new one every day; she bills for the sake of billing, she satisfies her vanity by playing on man's

"The flirt" is not serious, and she does not wish you to take her seriously; she wants fun, and if you accept for what she is worth you may pass a very pleasant time.

What Becomes of the Gold?

What has become of all the gold produced in the past thirteen yea ar? The production is estimated at 2,685 million dollars, and the Lord Aldrich shows that $1,682,000,000 of this has gone into the banks and treasuries; in other words, the reserve pockets of the world. Of the remaining 1,000 million dollars it would be fair to estimate that 1,000 million dollars was consumed in the arts and sciences. This leaves 685 million dollars unaccounted for. About 67 gilden dollars of gold p. year therefore, mysteriously disappears. Does the gold go into hidden hoards or is the use of it in the Indo active larger than is generally supposed?

Many places in the sixty hal lsans ed for demonstrations on the Fourth b, but rain interfered, and some few on had it on the installment plan. Belfast, among the number. The rain in was so wet that on low lands on many farms the hay was cut and stacked on the drumlins that could be found and hooked off after the ground f from in the winter.

Dangers of Hugging.

"There is too much office romance nowadays. Yesterday I found a young lady stenographer in tears because her lord and master had the visitor "I just kiss this!"

Here she produced from a burnt drawer a square of parchment. It was framed in wire and emblazoned with seals.

"Oh, bank stock!" cried the visitor. "Now, that is something like!"

"No!" retorted the wife scornfully, "better than that. It is a life membership, price $10, in the Woman's Foreign Missionary society."

And then she wondered why her mean bad husband and her husband had the room.—Rochester Sunday Herald.

BOAT SINKS IN PORT.

STEAMER CITY OF BIRMINGHAM GOES DOWN.

Starting Out of Boston, Bound for Savannah, When the Vessel Suddenly Settles—Rescue Crew Leads Pardon to Emmett Dalton.

The steamer City of Birmingham of the Ocean Steamship Company struck a ledge in Boston harbor while bound out to Savannah and sank in ten fathoms of water about two miles below her dock. The crew escaped. The steamer, having made a special trip to pick up a cargo of cotton, started for the south about 1:30 Monday morning. At a slight bend where the channel curves what is known as the middle ground the city of Birmingham hit an obstruction. Her engine room was flooded and there was no water striking the shaft. The crew had no difficulty in getting off in the boats and landing the two skiffs back to the dock. The City of Birmingham is one of her major deck above water about half a mile from the shore and of late is being dismantled at the Charlestown navy yard. The City of Birmingham was built at Chester, Pa., in 1888, and has been in the southern cotton trade between Savannah and Boston for several years. She was commanded by Captain Hammond.

TIMBER FAMINE IN 20 YEARS.

Government Forester Says Present Rate of Cutting Is Ruinous.

"In twenty years the finest stands in the United States will be practically cleared and private holdings in the pine, oak, white cedar, and white pine will be exhausted to the extent that the profits of the pulpwood industry will be in the hands of the Canadian companies for years. This information was given me by Henry Pinchot, the government forester, who has just completed a report on the situation for the United States government. Mr. Pinchot will be appointed forester in charge of the forestry bureau and will call a conference in Washington shortly to discuss the situation with the forestry men of the states of northern New York and the states of northern Pennsylvania."

HUNT POISON, WILL MISSING

Relatives Think Wealthy Bostonian Was Victim of Plot.

Relatives and close friends of Walter H. Baker in Boston and Cambridge, Mass., died a few days ago at the home of a friend of Baker's, Mrs. Jack Gardner, in fact believed to a Brewster, also because that he was a man of means, which that in some the relatives of had plot. They have made inquiries among the friends of the deceased and in large and small towns in Massachusetts, where Baker is known, but without avail. Baker, who was worth $300,000, a few weeks ago, when he left his home in Cambridge, told his friends he was going to visit in Maine and he would be gone two months. Baker is known to be interested in mining.

The New York New Haven and Hartford Railroad will soon present to the world the entire system with electric locomotives, the last steam locomotive on the line recently on the division between New York City and Stamford.

The successor of the late J. T. L. Ford, of Kansas City, the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, who was selected for the place by the interests in the majority control of the pary, which elect eight for a term of six years, is a young man. Another trial is already in progress.

United States district attorneys in various parts of the country have been instructed by attorney general Daugherty to institute suits against a large number of railroad companies to recover penalties incurred by them for alleged violations of the safety appliance law.

Valuable copies of the financial statement of the Rock Island Railroad show total earnings of $99,239,420, an increase over 1920 of $7,000,000, and a net income of nearly $6,000,000 in operating expenses. Net earnings were $19,701,000, an increase of $3,000,000.

At the annual meeting of the Chicago and Alton railroad, E. H. Harriman, president of the Illinois Central, and the Chicago and Alton railroad, James Stillman, who died in 1918 marking the complete ownership of the Rock Island interests in Alton and company for the Missouri-Pacific.

Under an agreement with Gov. Cooper of Alabama, the Southern Railway will use convict labor in that State, except the principal part of the work, to be done in 2½ years' time and thought have been effected. A suit of injunction as a result of resistance to the case is to be withdrawn.

In his annual report President Harris S. Mellen of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad admits that the power generator rate established about a year ago proved a disappointment, the earnings of its company having increased about 5 per cent during the past year.

The second report of the Baltimore and Ohio road shows earnings for the past year of $88,562,924, an increase over the two previous years. The net earnings for the year, however, were only $17,952,863, a decrease of $1,000,000 over 1920. Operating expenses increased $5,864,000.

The building of Hungary, Malta, is perhaps one of the greatest strides in her history, being caused by the walkout of the motor drivers on the railway line connecting the city. Their grievances, it is said, are paid in Spanish and American money. It has been almost impossible to move any traffic, as the men managed to take the pieces of the engines so afraid to work, although protected by the police.

The first official statement of the financial affairs of the Grand Trunk Chicago Junction lines shows that the city's energy in building the union stockyards and railway for the first six months ending July 31 were $7,000,000. This is based upon the city's getting 55 per cent of the total profits. When the Union stockyards are brought into the city's share of the profits will be more $1,000,000.

Much discussion has been caused by the report of the Illinois Central Freight Company for the last fiscal year showing a deficit of over $30,000,000, while during the same period the company paid damage claims for accidents in the amount of $1,217,000, or 5 per cent of the gross receipts. This does not include the cost of the legal staff in defending suits. Comparing the four years, Collier's says that "when traction companies throughout the country are compelled to choose between billings and dividends, they will find ways to prevent the billings."

TO BRING MORE GOLD.

Sale of Farm Products Abroad in Return Money Difficulties.

Outweighing all that the new powerful financers of the country could do, the American farmer has come to the rescue of the finances of the nation and is relieving the money difficulties. The great American staples, wheat, cotton, tobacco, beans, are on their way to Europe, thus bringing the means of the year when American products are marketed abroad. In return the United States is receiving credit for many million dollars abroad, which can be converted speedily into a release of gold flowing into the country. It is this fact which is expected to produce lasting relief, and which has been the efforts of the bankers and financiers in the country with such force as to make it reasonably certain that the coming months will be one of ease in the money markets.

The natural resources of the country promise to exert even greater influence than the sales of American products abroad. The latter have relieved the situation, but, as one cotton expert puts it, the intrinsic value of the products of the farmer, to which must be added the mineral wealth of the fields and their colossal aggregate at this time of the year is beyond the reach of the financiers, since the power of Wall street.

Convention of Trust Curbers.

On Tuesday, a convention called by State Governors met, under the auspices of the National City Bankers, to discuss the curbing of trusts. President Butler of Columbia university was chosen to preside as address, in which he warned against prosecution of monopolies which have grown up under the corporations and that during this fifth session of congress the bill in which the agent which made the whole anomalous situation of the trusts, the Sherman anti-trust law, was passed. Governor Lowden of Illinois, who was unable to be there in person, sent a message.

WHOLE TOWN WIPED OUT

Fifteen Thousand Persons Perish in Awful Landslide.

ONLY TWO SURVIVE.

Terrible Disaster in Bokhara, Province of Russian Turkestan.

PEOPLE BURIED BY MOUNTAIN.

Horror Follows Recent Series of Severe Earthquakes.

The whole of the town of Karatagh in Bokhara, Russian Turkestan, has been destroyed and the entire population, numbering about 15,000, was buried by a tremendous mountain slide following the recent earthquake there. It is believed that scarcely a score of the people have survived, and that their sufferings are grievous. This report is to the effect that the Governor of Karatagh and his mother are the only survivors.

The slide was caused by the recent severe earthquakes in the mountains. Karatagh is situated in a narrow valley, with precipitous mountains towering above it. Although bombardments frequent in that region, following the earthquake the people remained in the town and when the unmistakable sound of rock crashed down upon them were caught in a trap.

The entire town, it is said, is buried under a mass of rock. Thousands were entombed in their homes. The end is seven and odds greatly to the suffering of the live survivors. The mountaineers hurried to the scene and are caring for the injured. Owing to the danger of further rock slips it is impossible for attempt to reach those buried in the ruins.

Bokhara or Bukhara is sometimes called the Holy City of Asia, and is the metropolitan region of Asia, with Khiva, with Turkestan to the north and Afghanistan on the south. It is a dreary expanse of arid plains bordered and bisected by mountains. Its people are in cultivated at Khiva and including the wandering hordes that wind and a sandy living on the tracks and in the narrow valleys. In summer the heat is intense and the winters are long and severe. Earthquakes are frequent.

The country is famous for its mosques and the breeding of sheep, goats, fowls, a strain of Bokhara is sought by all of U.S. people. In recent years the Transcaspian Railway has improved the industrial condition of the country, which for years depended on camel carriage to carry its produce to accessible markets and bring back the finished goods, the cotton and the few other articles of life in that wild country.

Although a region of poverty, visitors have seen the wealth of powerful rulers in the middle ages. The people still retain their courage, but little else of their former greatness.

Americans will now be able to cause New foundland waters and buy herring from the colonists without interference, as they did prior to 1905.

PEACE CONGRESS RECORD.

Not Results of the International Conference at the Hague.

The net results of the International Peace conference at The Hague, which adjourned from June 23 to July 28, are, in the opinion of Jonkheer Ruijs, a prominent member of the American delegation, by Jonkheer Ruijs, a member of being a disappointment, as has been frequently expressed in the Netherlands. Peace and they had done the work they were sent to do, namely, to establish the principle of the inviolability of private property at sea as a rule of international law. He says they secured for this the support of a large majority of the powers represented, although they failed to win unanimous assent. Lodge, Root, the conference, has stated, contains upon the use of floating mines, prohibiting the bombardment of undefended and of cities, towns, has prohibited the levying of contributions by towns, has abolished the non-combatant in war time, has strengthened the provisions for relief of the wounded, and has taken preparatory steps for a revision of the rules of war, by insisting that universal merchant vessels be formally equipped upon the spot by the government of a naval officer. And, finally, just before adjournment, the plan of a permanent court of arbitration was agreed upon, with only a few of the details of its name discussing, not from the principle, but as to the method of conducting negotiations. Under the plan the judges should be appointed upon the basis of the equality of all nations. As to the question of debts to force of arms, the Porter resolution (Article 1 of the convention of force and after arbitration should have been refused, and the Drago plan, Article 2 of sought, was unanimously adopted.

The only thing that the conference failed utterly to do was to agree on a date and place for a subsequent conference. Jonkheer Ruijs, who is a member of the Dutch Senate, and who was the Netherlands delegate to the conference, said that the Dutch government would be willing to have the next conference held in Holland, but that it would not be the proper time for such a conference to be held in Holland, because [illegible] Roosevelt [illegible] is the most eminent [illegible] the [illegible] by which he stands, but only with reference to predatory wealth, not including the "big stick" principle of national defense, will govern in the nominating convention.

The present financial flurry is being [illegible] used by Wall street and speculating corporate interests to discredit the president, and his recent anti-trust speeches are being hung out as scarecrows, clothed in most terrifying rags. These masters of finance write editorials, stampede lines, [illegible] and issue edicts. They also own or control newspapers. These publications, with spacious pleadings and [illegible] sophistry, are working overtime in an effort to convince the common people that the president's aggressive policies are responsible for the financial prosperity, and that executive "control" over "trusts" is the only remedy for existing conditions.

Conservatism, in the sense covered under nothing less than a truculent yielding to Wall street, an eye blind to malevolent corporate methods and shrewd gambling, and a cowardly surrender to interests that have bled the common people. It is gratifying to be assured that the president will not succumb from the course he has laid down.

In answer to the charges of the south Williamsville syndicate the president acknowledges that he is "responsible for what he did do right, but not for what the light revealed." A very large majority of the American people believe the president was all conscience him for a second elective term of they have done wrong.

The president is getting out the course. The wound bleeds and the [illegible] is painful, but the patient will be all the stronger for the heroic treatment.

The Financial Stringency.

The financial condition of the country is gradually but surely taking a trend toward safety in unprecedented.

Tons of gold are coming back across the Atlantic, the mints are all at work, changing bullion into coin, and the treasury department is exerting every effort in its power to expand the currency through the national banks.

The leaders of finance express themselves as satisfied that confidence is rapidly returning, and that normal conditions are assured in a very short time.

As in most times of financial stress, the one thing most needed is confidence, and a lack of it produces that degree of hysteria which is in vogue. Foreign "confusion" was equally [illegible].

There need be no fear that anything approaching industrial paralysis will ensue. Every phase of our national activity is strong, the balance of foreign trade is in our favor, the crops are concurrent, and industrial progress was never so great. We should possess our souls in calmness and patience.

Looking back, while the banks have suffered some inconvenience, there has been no perceptible trade troubles, and no embarrassment has been experienced by our merchants.

Local News.

—E. A. Burnett, of Cross Village, was in town yesterday.

—The steamer Beaver made a Cross Village trip Tuesday.

—The steamer Pine Lake laid up here saturday for the winter.

—Sam Hose went to Beaver Island yesterday, returning the same trip.

—G. C. Gelken last week bought the F. S. Brown residence, on Park avenue.

—Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, of St. James, came over Monday, returning yesterday.

—The schooner Louisa A. Burton discharged another cargo of grain at the Argo Mill Friday.

—Mrs. Grace Wait, wife of George Wait, died at her home in this city, Tuesday evening, aged 29 years.

—Florence Smith, who has been visiting friends in Chicago the past six weeks, returned home yesterday.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the Epworth church will give a Thanksgiving supper at the church. Hill, 25 and 15 cents.

—The steamer Topeka, in which Chas. Noyes is chief engineer, passed through here Saturday with a cargo of Bayou City timber.

—J. Webb, who has been employed at the Bartlett Hotel the past year, left saturday for Detroit, where he will reside, and where his wife spend the winter.

—On Thursday last there were at the sugar factory 121 wagon loads of beets waiting to be weighed at one time, with several carloads on the road.

—The Traverse Bay steamer Fannie M. Rose came to Sunday for minor repairs, relieving Monday. The Rose is the boat recently purchased to take the place of the Onekama.

—Mrs. Chase, the mother of Mrs. W. J. Weikel, died at the Weikel home at midnight Saturday, aged 80 years. The remains were taken to Louisville Tuesday for interment.

—One of the infant twin babies of Mr and Mrs. John Dahlmer died Saturday. The children were taking at the Beavers, but came over in his tug Knapp in a gale of wind.

—The fire department was called out Saturday evening, by the burning of a sail boat belonging to Peter Anderson, and lying near Gaffney's dock. The boat was entirely destroyed.

—Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew left last Friday for Atlanta; Miss Winifred left yesterday, and Mr. Bartholomew will follow in the later. The family will spend the winter in Florida for the winter.

—The steamer Falcon, the Hoyne City ore boat, bound out for Escanaba, parted her wheel cable just outside the railroad bridge Saturday. No other damage was done. She laid up here and spliced the cable, proceeding Sunday morning. The captain congratulates himself that the accident did not occur outside.

—The sugar factory started up last Thursday morning, and is running without a hitch work mentioning. The first sugar comes out at six o'clock saturday morning, and is pronounced by the experts to be of as fine quality as ever was manufactured. The management set us to say to the farmers that it is important that beets should be delivered as rapidly as possible, the teeth still show up good in percentage and yield. This season has, without a doubt proven the profit of beet raising, and a very large increase of acreage is expected next year.

—Beet pulp is beginning to go into the country to feed the cattle.

—Spawn fishing still continues at the Beaver, but fishing is reported to be light.

—Jas. O. Gallagher and wife, of St. James, left here Tuesday afternoon for New York, where they will take steamship for Ireland, where they will remain until April first.

—The tug Columbia came in here for coal Tuesday, having in tow the steel hull of a steam drill for harbor rock work. The outfit was on its way from Chicago to Ateema, and is owned by M. Sullivan, of Boston.

—The ladies of the Barnard M. E. church will give their annual Thanksgiving Day dinner served from twelve till two o'clock. Turkey and plum pudding are to be included in the bill of fare. A short program will be provided. Admission 25 cents, children under twelve 15 cents.

—The SENTINEL made a bad "break" last week in stating that "Ira Deaton and wife," of Traverse City, were in town. As a matter of fact, Ira is not married, and he called on down proper. Somehow the idea found lodgement in our more or less fertile brain that Ira was a married man. The only explanation we can give is that the wish was father to the thought.

—Last Friday evening, the young people met at the home of Mr. Wm. Hack and elected new officers in the B. Y. P. U. After the regular business Miss Annie Alous entertained the company with music which was much appreciated, and also the pastor and wife, were very much surprised when they were presented with a handsome rocker from the young people. Refreshments were served and all went away feeling they had spent a pleasant and profitable evening.

Concerning Our "Jim" Harris.

We take the following from the Pierce City (Mo.) Times, concerning the gold mining operations there, of which J. W. Harris has charge. The Harris spoken of in the article is not our "Jim."

The dredge company has recently purchased from W. J. Harris, of Spokane, eighty acres more dredging ground. This additional purchase lies along Rhodes creek and Moline creek, and joins the ground now being worked by the dredge on the south. It is understood the price paid for the eighty was $3,000.

"The dredge was worked very steadily during the summer, and but it has returned good profits to its owners could not be more strongly evidenced than by the purchase of this additional ground, and also by the manner in which they are making preparations for next summer's run.

"The promoters now are that the dredge will be able to continue operations far into the winter, and when the time comes for starting up in the spring they will not be hampered by lack of water or other equipment.

"There are several other recognized good dredging propositions in near proximity to Pierce City, and it is now an assured fact that at least one, and in all probability two more dredges will be built and put in commission during the coming year in this vicinity."

Letter to Mr. Morris Crane.

Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: Lead and oil is no good paint; don't wear; the rule is, at every one knows, repaint 16 three years.

Devoe lasts six, in the same way—allow wide margin in all such statements. What does it mean, to last? It means the same with Devoe.

What does it mean, to last? Here's an instance.

Mr. J. J. Hall, Sheffield, Pa., painted two houses, lead and oil; took 29 gallons.

Last summer bought 40 gallons Devoe for the same two houses; returned 10 gallons.

The paint, that covers, lasts; it's all paint, true paint, and full measure. Lead and oil is all paint but not good paint, the lead wants also. Better paint Devoe.

Yours truly,
F. W. Devoe & Co.

Fatal Gun Accident.

Seth Ackett, the 19 year old son of Mrs. Julia Acker, (widow of the late Oliver Ackert) was accidentally shot Wednesday afternoon, from the effects of which he died at midnight of that day.

Ackett and a companion named Abbott were out hunting, having but one shot gun between them. When but a short distance back of the old Wakendell place, a cartridge in the gun failed to explode. The two boys sat down upon a log, the gun lying upon the knees of Abbott, as he proceeded to extract the shell.

In some way the gun was discharged, the charge entering Ackert's leg, just above the knee. Abbott was badly frightened, and it was some time before he started for help. Leaving Ackert lying on the ground, he went to the home of a farmer near by and secured help. Ackert was taken to the farm house, and later brought home. On the way to the city he died very freely, but at midnight he died. The attending physician states that so far as the loss of blood was concerned, his life could have been saved, but the severe chill he received while lying upon the damp ground, greatly weakened him. But has he lived, amputation of the leg would have been necessary.

Cheboygan Independent Fish Co. Up Against It.

J. B. Hilborn, the independent fish scoundrel and banker of the fish trust, is again in trouble and has his hands full in difficulties to the activity of the Booth people of Petoskey, and game and fish warden Eddy, one of the two wardens who preferred the last charge against him and were beaten, when the jury failed to agree.

Hilborn's new boat, the Carrie E. has been trading in fish between here and Cockburn Island, and trying in the South Chi's territory. Monday an inspector from Detroit came up and seized the boat and her cargo, charging that her owner had been violating the Canada laws. Hilborn declared that to a Democrat reporter, Monday, he knew of no law he had broken unless it was some technical point he was not familiar with. The Carrie E. and her cargo of fish were given into the care of local customs collector, C. L. Marquette, to await instructions from Grand Haven, which is the headquarters of this district. Hilborn says that as soon as the boat arrived, the customs officer was hunted up and a manifest made of the cargo of fish on board and cannot see what the charge against him this time is.—Democrat.

Masonic Event.

The regular communications of Charlevoix Lodge No 205, F. & A. M. Tuesday evening last, was the occasion of a very pleasant and historic event.

At the last session of the grand lodge it was voted that every past grand master should receive at grand lodge expense, an appropriate token to their rank. The appropriation for grand Master Terrell arrived last week, and at the proper time Tuesday night past master H. L. Hilsinger called out the past grand master, and in an appropriate speech, presented the emblem to Bro. Terrell.

The past grand master replied in a grateful speech acknowledging the distinguished honors.

Fishermen Caught.

The deputy game warden, in the gasoline launt stationed by the department, caught the steam tug Sea Gull, of this port, lifting nets on one of the straits fishing grounds Monday.

The Sea Gull "made a gateway," the warden taking chase. The offending craft was overtaken at Pt. Lonsdale and the whole crew arrested, who were arraigned in police court and fined $50 each, including costs. The nets had fish with them and it proved to be a sun fish; just a plain, old fashioned "pumpkin seed" fish but was bigger than a platter and he whizzed at me slowly and impressively with one of his enormous eyes.

Just then I woke up and found my legs still with the cold. I had kicked the clothes off.

Now the question is did I kick the clothes off before I went a fishing and do there exist any chilled limbs recall to my semi-consciousness all of the sensations that accompany the actual sport of trout fishing? Or, did I kick the clothes off in my frenzied struggle with those fish?

Here is a problem for savants to solve. I will close sideline with baited breath.

Perhaps my son, Prof. Fuller of the East Jordan schools, can answer this question as he has waded the Jordan until he is almost as rheumatic as his father. Although he is not well up to date, although he is not all bent up as I am.

Cause and Effect.

Toledo, Ohio, Nov. 15, 1907.

To the Editor:

In my younger days I used to wade some of the ice cold streams of Northern Michigan while fishing for grayling and trout, until my legs were numb and in one or two case refused to stand for it any longer.

I quit fishing years ago in fact, but still go a fishing frequently in my dreams. The other night I dreamed of wading out into a little more than three feet of water (I wear a 34 inch pant leg) in the channel just west of the railroad bridge at Charlevoix, and catching more fish than I know what to do with. Didn't have to resort to bait, or spit on it, even. To drop the basket hook into the water was enough and the struggle would begin, all of which goes to confirm the old adage that "Dreams go by contraries."

The fish too, were of every variety of "pan fish" known to the waters of that region, and of great size. At first it was hooked that I thought would wreck my tackle or pull me into the drink rock and crop. The awful tussle continued for some minutes first one giving way and then the other, great drops of sweat would out like marbles on my high "forrid" but with one last supreme effort I brought the monster to gaff and—it proved to be a sun fish; just a plain, old fashioned "pumpkin seed" fish but was bigger than a platter and he whizzed at me slowly and impressively with one of his enormous eyes.

Just then I woke up and found my legs still with the cold. I had kicked the clothes off.

Now the question is did I kick the clothes off before I went a fishing and do there exist any chilled limbs recall to my semi-consciousness all of the sensations that accompany the actual sport of trout fishing? Or, did I kick the clothes off in my frenzied struggle with those fish?

AIKENSIDE

BY

MRS. MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphan," "Edmund's Wife," "Lena Rivers," "Rosebrook," "Tempest and Sunshine," "Cousin Maude," etc.

CHAPTER XVI.—(Continued.)

Maddy could not explain why it was that she felt glad the doctor would tell Guy. She did not analyze any of her feelings, or stop to ask why she should be glad he have Guy Hutchinson know the answer she had given Dr. Hutchinson. He was going to him now, she was sure, for the nurse to leave her, saying he might get her sleep, before she returned to New York. She did not remember that. That was among the things a thing never again to be talked about, and offering him her hand, she looked for an instant seriously into his face, then without a word, learned from the room, while the doctor, with a sad, heavy heart, went in quest of Guy.

"Refused you, did you say?" and Guy's face contracted with pain and pallor long before since he left the doctor with Maddy Clifton.

"Yes, refused me, as I might have known she would." Was the doctor's reply, spoken so naturally that Guy looked up quickly to see if he really did not care.

Hit the expression of the face belied the calmness of his voice, and touched with genuine pity, Guy asked the cause of the refusal, "Perhaps because I asked her so soon?"

"No, Guy, was no one whom she preferred. She merely did not like the well enough to be my wife, that was all." The doctor could not help smiling at the something else, but it sound per do. The wound was too fresh, too deep to be touched yet, and in spite of himself, the hopeless pain, which he felt for his young friend, made him sympathetic and tender, rather inclined to be rude good-by to stay, and then, seeing Guy drooping down in the corner.

Great was the consternation among the Aikenites when it became known that Guy was gone Hopkins—the man in whose mind was the idea of Guy's marriage with Grace Hopkins—Hopkins in Dorie he could perfect himself in his patronizing manner, and among Dora Agnes, some said he knew more than Guy, for Mrs. Aikenside was from his purpose, was well forced at the sudden start, while only two knew of Guy's going to see Maddy and Maddy, the former approving his decision and trusting his influence to make his suit almost as pleasant as possible, and the latter feeling relieved at the thought how she had sent him away, and that it might hold him on the sea or in that distant land she would be had amenable. Such was the feeling of Maddy and regardless to the two ones, to say that she would be happy if Guy married Grace Hopkins, they came down to the nurse, and Maddy's resignation gave way at sure.

Two weeks afterwards, Aikenside presented a strange appearance. Mrs. Aikenside, her lighter Maddy and Dorie had left for Saratoga, and Dr. Hutchinson was the sage which in despair at winning the Grace and Maddy, and Dorie and Dora and brother, who had a house on Madison Square, and Mrs. Aikenside was left alone long enough to be a servant, the quiet nurse, who had transported during her winter cookies.

CHAPTER XVII.

Two years came quickly, particularly as Grace, and Dora Maddy, Mrs. Aikenside, our companions of the coming incidents, seemed hardly more than two months were gone since the eventful evening when Dr. Hutchinson had left Aikenside by offering her his hand. He was in Dorie, and Maddy was with Grace, who was on the little office in Mrs. Conner's and Dorie had gone to Saratoga, leaving Dr. Hutchinson, handsome, manly as a brother, and a brother, and a friend on Madison Square, and Maddy, whenever he could, was with him, and he was happy, and Grace was happy, and Maddy was happy, and Dora was happy, and Mrs. Aikenside was happy, and Guy was happy, and Maddy was happy.

Two years were gone, and Maddy was in her own home, and Grace was in her own home, and Dora was in her own home, and Mrs. Aikenside was in her own home, and Guy was in his own home, and Maddy was happy, and Grace

Report of the Committee to Settle with the Superintendents of the Poor.

To the Honorable, the Board of Supervisors of the County of Charlevoix:

Gentlemen—We, the undersigned, appointed to settle with the Superintendents of the Poor, respectfully report as follows:

We have examined the books, bills and vouchers for the period elapsed since the Board met one year ago, and find the same to be kept in an excellent manner, the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors deserving of the highest commendation for his clear shape.

We have checked over the bills, warrants issued for same, and compared them with the cash book, and find them correct as there entered.

We find that the total of the orders issued during the year past, dated from Oct. 1st, 1906, to Aug. 31, 1907, and covering the bills paid from Sept. 1, 1906, to Aug. 31, 1907, to be $5,282.73. The County Treasurer has paid, during the past year, all such orders, to the amount of $5,282.73, but this is not a proper charge against the County for the current year.

We find that the Superintendents of the Poor will show on their books, an amount turned into the County Treasury during the present month above of $947.87. As we understand that the Superintendents of the Poor will report in detail the transactions of the year, we do not feel it our duty to report further than the brief report.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOBS FOR MANY MEN.

CIVIL SERVICE MAN TELLS OF VACANCIES.

Government Pays Such Regardless of Any Financial Conditions—Efforts Made by Bureau of Pensions to Arrange Pay.

Peter Norman, secretary of the board of examiners of the United States civil service commission in Chicago, discussing the financial situation with the statement that the government is clamoring for new employees and is paying them in cash regardless of the condition of the money market. There are many vacancies in a variety of lines of work for competent men and women who are seeking jobs. They are asked to take civil service examinations and go to work. What we want most just now are men who are clerks and mail carriers for the Chicago postoffice," said Mr. Norman. "We can take care of as many applicants as can pass the examinations for these. The examination for postoffice clerks and carriers will be held on the 25th of February in Chicago. Nov. 29 Both men and women are appointed to the service at more than one place. The salary to start with is $900, and increases by yearly installments are assured until the rank or category is reaching $1,200. Promotions in the direct bureaus in the department at Washington are dominated by examinations. Next month there will be 1,000 men and some of them will be left in Illinois."

THUGS SHOOT POLICEMAN.

Demand to Let Prisoner Go Followed by Leaving.

Pittsburgh, Nov. 29.—Two men, who from the hole in their shirt bosoms and low hats from Italian quarter village in Lawrence by four men who accompanied them, entered the home of Mrs. Nunzio, on summons as the Mrs. Nunzio's husband, Nunzio, was ill. The visitors offered her personal gain of the house and the other leaving the room. Nunzio was unconscious when the visitors left. The men left without taking anything. The police are investigating the affair.

MEASURE GREAT LAKES TRAFFIC

Officials Report September Shipping Less than August.

Traffic movements in the great lakes, measured by the volume of shipments from the various lake ports during September, as reported to the bureau of statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor in Washington, show a 10 per cent decrease in volume, as compared with the preceding month's record. These figures score 11,342,565 net tons, compared with 12,597,800 net tons reported during August of this year and 10,901,172 net tons during September, 1906. When compared with the September, 1906, figures the shipments of coal, ore and other crude stuff are increased, while the shipments of grain, including flaxseed, lumber and manufactured iron, show, were lower than a year ago. Shipments for the nine months of the year, 67,788,213 net tons, are 12 per cent and 27 per cent in excess of the corresponding 1905 and 1906 figures, the increase in the total being due to heavier shipments, mainly coal, ore and minerals. When shipments for the month, mainly from Duluth, Superior and Chicago, 7,185,162 bushels, were considerable in excess of the preceding month's total as well as the September, 1906, figures of 5,876,000 bushels. The total for the season, 32,101,873 bushels, is about 47 per cent larger than the corresponding 1906 total. The shipments of oats for the month, 8,213,000 bushels, were over 1,000,000 and those for the nine months, nearly 10,000,000 bushels below the corresponding 1906 figures. A considerable decline is also shown in the movement of barley, while the corn shipments, mainly from Chicago, though more for the month than a year ago, show a larger total for the season than during 1906—32,576,712, compared with 24,690,474 bushels.

LARGE CATCH OF WHALES.

Fleet Safe and Has Made Record of Getting Thirty-Six Monsters.

Not only are the ships of the whaling fleet safe, but they are bringing home the biggest catch in years. The crew of the fleet's safety and good luck is continued by a cable received from Akutan. The five ships, homeward bound, called at Akutan harbor, where they reported. The Hermes has twelve whales; Patrick, nine; Rosecrans, six; Theodore Roosevelt, nine; William Hayden, four, a total of thirty-six whales. Each whale is valued at $10,000. Some of the whale will more than pay the expense of the cruise, in addition to the $300,000 earned from the catch of the whalers is bringing values to have obtained in harbor and on the natives. The total catch this year far exceeds anything that the whaling industry has yielded for many years. The largest catch on record was made some fifteen years ago by the Mary Thomas, which got sixty-eight whales.

GERM KILLS CASHIER

YEARS OF COUNTING GREENBACKS PROVE FATAL.

Rare Disease Called Mycelema Attacks Hands and Finally Whole Body—Preventing Evidence in Use Against Paper Trust.

Mycelema, a rare disease, which was brought on by his own by contact with two with paper money, caused the death of Edward H. Hall, formerly cashier of Arnold, Constable & Co. in New York. Twenty years spent in counting currency believed Hall took the germs that lurk in the sanitary bank note, and for ten years prior to his death he had been a sufferer from the strange malady that puzzled medical men. It was Hall's one ton to measure his thimble in counting bills, and years of the practice as affected his hands that the skin became hard and cracked open in cold weather. A general thickening of the tissues set in, which was followed by complications involving the kidneys and circulatory system, later developing into Bright's disease.

WIRELESS SYSTEM GROWS.

Ready for Operation at Fairbanks and Circle City, Alaska.

The new wireless telegraph stations at Fairbanks and Circle City, Alaska, are ready for operation according to a report received in Washington by Brig. Gen. Adolphus W. Greely, chief officer of the signal. The stations are 140 miles apart and are designed to have a radius of about 250 miles. Plans have been adopted and surveys made for stations at such other points as Nome, Cape Prince Wales, and before a year has elapsed the signal corps expects to have in operation wireless connection from Herring Sound in Greenland to Nome, Alaska, and from Cape Wales to Cape Nome, Alaska, and the Aleutian Islands, which is the nearest approach to a complete system of wireless communication from Herring Sound to Nome, Alaska. This will enable to engage the Valdez-Seward cable and the land lines, which in the winter season are apt to be difficult to keep in working order. The wireless system between Nome and St. Michael has been operated without a break during the last year and has been used for commercial business. It has demonstrated that the wireless system for Alaska is far more feasible for the transaction of commercial business than are cable lines.

PLAN TO WIPE OUT PAPER TRUST

Evidence to Be Used in Prosecution Furnished by Publishers.

Albert Shaw and John Stern, News of New York and Medill McCormick of Chicago, acting as a committee of the American Publishers' Association, the other day called on the assistant to the Attorney General, Milton D. Purdy, in Washington and had a conference regarding the prosecution of the paper ring which President Roosevelt has ordered. They gave him documentary evidence of the charges made to the President. Mr. Purdy conferred with George Thompson, editor of the St. Paul Dispatch, who gave him further information bearing on the proposed prosecution. A hearing of the department officials will take place on alleged violation of the injunction issued by Judge Sanborn at St. Paul dissolving the Central Paper Company.

THREE FATALLY BURNED.

Tenants Rescued from Burning Building at Columbus, O.

Three persons were probably fatally burned and twenty others had thrilling escapes from the upper floors of a building in Main street, which was damaged by fire in Columbus, Ohio. Edward Brown, an invalid, and his wife were found unconscious in their room on the third floor, both severely burned, and no one expected to recover. Miss Anna Brandt was also seriously burned before she was rescued from her room on the fourth floor. The fire was started supposedly by some one dropping a match in a hall. The stairways were filled with smoke and flames before the alarm was covered.

EUROPMANIA IS COSTLY.

$600,000,000 Goes Abroad in Efforts with Nobility.

More than 400 American girls have married foreigners of noble families and many of them have taken big sums of money their European husbands.

A French journalist, Le Petit Parisien, declared the other day that American girls who had married abroad, mostly for titles, had carried with them to Europe the astonishing sum of $600,000,000. The Paris writer did not associate this statement with the reports of "tight money" in America yet the fact that hundreds of millions have gone out of the country with the idle holders may well occasion a little financial as well as a social speculation.

Henry Clews, the veteran financier, when asked for an opinion on this evil said:

"I think the statement that $600,000,000 of wealth has been taken out of this country, or at least that the ownership of this vast amount of wealth has been transferred to aliens by the marriage of American girls with titled foreigners is absurd. Undoubtedly the withdrawal of such an enormous sum has an appreciable effect upon the money market.

"Of course, the money thus taken from Europe is extremely chary to this country, and consequently the loss of $600,000,000 abroad every year, must of it forbidden."

A New York paper prints a list of 250 American girls who have married into distinguished foreign families, and this is a list of twenty; into such households who have carried $600,000,000 out of the country:

LIVES LOST IN EARTHQUAKE.

Disaster Opened Up at Torre in Rivera, Spain.

A violent earthquake has occurred at Torre in Rivera, in the province of Huesca, Spain. The earth opened, leaving great fissures, the disturbance being accompanied by subterranean rumbles which caused a panic among the people. Many houses were shaken down. An unknown number of lives have been lost.

The province of Huesca lies in the northern portion of Aragon and is bounded on the south by France and on the north by the province of Lerida. It has an area of 5,872 square miles, with a population of approximately 275,000. The capital city of the province is Huesca, with a population of over 10,000 people. The city is well built and of a picturesque nature, but it is a decayed place. The cathedral building of the town is the cathedral, which has numerous statues and a magnificent altar piece. The city has fifteen convents and a foundling asylum and the ancient palace of the kings of Aragon.

Lately Pope Pius X. has shown that a new element exists in the Modernist movement, which is not in the main, but which is the parent of radicals. This element is the servant question and other sociological problems. He was an important factor at the recent Peace Congress in New York City.

WILL ASK AUTO MAIL CAR.

Postal League to Press Its Plan Before Congress.

The mail clerks are to be asked to provide for an experiment in a pneumatic postal car, which was used at a meeting of the Postal Progress League in Washington, D. C., Lowden, the secretary and treasurer of the league.

Mr. Lowden estimated that the present loss to the government in mail delivery service amounted to $172 for each route. With the adoption of automobiles and a change in the postal regulations in general a local rural parcels delivery, with a weekly limit of about 50 pounds, Mr. Lowden declared, rural delivery would become a profit instead of a loss to the government.

Following out this suggestion, the league will ask Congress for an appropriation of $10,000 to test the plan. Mr. Lowden estimated that the cost of the experiment would be $1,000 a month, including the carrier's salary, small amount to only $5 a day, which would be more than provided for in a set of some 175 families along the route—paid each 5 cents a day for parcels from his route.

Frederick U. Roach, the president of the league, and Mr. Lowden, the secretary of the association which obtained the passage of the parcels post law, addressed the Postal Progress League in this city and in the course of the discussion of the plan was empowered by the meeting to appoint a committee to draw up a memorial to Congress for the coming session.

Pope Pius Has Modernism.

A new star, cited issued by Pope Pius X. is the most important pronouncement of the all the essential heresies of the present time. The Pontiff in the encyclical takes the ground that "Modernism" taking this attitude the Pope asserts that he is but continuing the policy of his predecessor, Leo XIII. The document examines the Modernist doctrine in relation to philosophy, religion, history, criticism, and the science and concludes with a condemnation, contending that in all these departments the Church would be toward the destruction of dogmas and of the church teachings. Modernism is further characterized as "institutional curiosity, presumptuous and rash, and a disposition to disrespect of real Catholic science and discipline." The encyclical declares that the clergy and the laity be turned from this line of thought, and are ordered to have no part in the reading of such books, newspapers or pamphlets.

Unauthorized by the papal prohibition, the Pope issue fulminations in the Modernist movement in many parts of the world. Modernism is first mentioned in the encyclical as the "synthesis of all heresies." It —Walter Braithwaite, from County Clerk Dennis' office, was in town on his way to Beaver Island to visit his cousin, C. C. Gallagher, Mr. Braithwaite has just been discharged from the British navy, after having served ten years.

—There is nothing the matter with the Charlevoix banks. They are just as safe and solvent as they were a year ago now, and that means absolute safety. It is the nothinking, unreasoning attitude of some people toward the banks that has brought about the present flurry—for it is anything more than a flurry. Get your money to the bank, and keep it there. There is no question about its safety.

—G. Von Platten, of Boyne City, was in town Saturday.

—Byron Cook is back in his old position at Chapel's drug store.

—Dr. Leahy the expert optician, will be at the Hotel Bartlett Dec. 7th.

—The High School Hustler will be out again Monday, and it will be a fine issue, as usual.

—Deputy oil Inspector W. J. Gallagher went to Beaver Island yesterday to spend Thanksgiving.

—Rev. Paschal Forster, O. F. M., formerly pastor at St. James, Beaver Island, and lately at Boyne City, has been transferred to Joliet, Ill.

—For some reason unknown to experts, partridge are scarcer this fall than for several years. Very few good bags have been brought in.

—The SENTINEL office is doing some fine job work these days. Call in and see samples. Our equipment and stock are equal to any in Charlevoix county.

—You will miss a great musical feast if you fail to hear the Mississippians at Charlevoix Theater Saturday evening of this week, and Monday evening next.

—The steamharge John Schroeder, lumber laden from Beaver Harbor to Chicago, ran back here from Cathead for shelter Monday afternoon, and laid here all day Tuesday.

—Frank McQuillan, steward of the N. M. & N. cutterp, fired at the Marietta marine hospital lately. Mr. McQuillan was for several years steward of the Seymour line steamer Petoskey, when that boat touched here.

—The steamer Falcon, ore laden, was caught by low water Saturday p. m. and got stuck on the "bayou bar." After being released by the tug Taylor, she lightered on the Charlevoix Lumber Co's dock, and on Sunday morning proceeded to Boyne City.

—Eli Best of Hay Shore, was arrested last week Tuesday by Sheriff McWain charged with selling liquor to an Indian. He waived examination before Justice Cutler, and was bound over to the circuit court for trial, on his recognizance of $300 to appear.

—Rev. S. M. Trass, Co., did a good thing today (Thanksgiving). Steward Dick Donelly, was the medium through which the company tendered a magnificent dinner to others and friend. Elaborate menus were printed, and all on board fared alike, from Captain to the last deck hand.

—Banking Commissioner Zimmerman says regarding the financial situation in Michigan: "There is absolutely no excuse for the recent excited even in the slightest degree about the financial situation in Michigan. Our banks are maintaining a healthy condition and can meet every legitimate need."

—The Weather Bureau has decided to revert at 50 foot steel tower early next spring, upon which to display storm warnings. It will be supplied with high power electric lights. The city has given the Bureau a site on the bluff near the water tower. Warnings will be visible from Lake Michigan, from the bridge, and from all points on the river.

—President Elder A. T. Ferguson left this morning for Harrietta on official business. He has been very fortunate in filling the vacancies this year, as out of six parishes that were left without a pastor at the beginning of the conference year only one now remains. This is Clarion, and a minister is expected soon from England to take charge of the work at that place. Traverse City Record.

At this meeting there will be elected a president, two vice presidents, secretary, treasurer, and four members of the board of directors. Other important matters, affecting the welfare of Charlevoix, will be discussed. Turn out.

—The fishermen of this locality, says the Northport Leader, should be able to get ready to make arrangements for attending the annual convention which is held this year at Ludington on December 4. The fishermen of that city are making arrangements to have this the biggest and most profitable meeting in the history of the organization. These who are interested should organize if not already organized and send delegates. Now is the time to act and there is no time to lose.

—The anti saloon league is getting ready for a vigorous campaign and it is reported that a local option movement it to be begun in many counties in the state. Public sentiment is growing fast against the saloon, the wave which is sweeping over the northern states reaching further north each year. Even the big breweries and distillers have taken flight and they now propose to try to freeze out those keepers who are continually at odds with the law in the hope that it will help to stay the march of the temperance sentiment. It is too late now to try to pacify the people.

—Blueberries are not building winter homes. Ducks have been in no haste to migrate. Beavers, like the butterfly, are enjoying themselves, taking no thought of what may come in the form of cold weather. Opossum's attitude is that of an animal which does not look for heavy snows and zero weather. Fish worms are near the surface of the ground. Chickens have not added to their feathers an inch coat of down. The groundhog is calm and clean." Thus this student declares nature reveals to us the glad tidings that we are to be favored with a mild and delightful winter.

—Next year Washington's birthday, Memorial day and Fourth of July all fall on Saturday, giving the public three "double holidays." Ordinarily these three do not fall on the same day, but the coincidence of the 22nd of February this year, Washington's birthday falls just 14 weeks earlier than Memorial day, which usually comes five weeks before the Fourth. The advantage of having a holiday day just a Sunday, for people who desire to seize the opportunity to make trips out of town, is very great. In creating the last holiday—Labor day—advantage of this principle was taken in the selection of the first Monday instead of a nonaligned day of the month. In 1909 Washington's birthday falls on Monday, the 25th of May and Fourth of July on Sunday, which will mean a Monday observance, so that for two years in succession double holidays are assured. In the later year Christmas will also fall on Saturday, thereby affording the most complete trial of the "double holiday" possible in our calendar.

TROUBLE FOR FISHERMEN.

Legal Change in Mesh Compels them to Expend Much Money.

Many of the net fishermen on Green bay and Lake Michigan will evidently be obliged to buy new twine before beginning operations next spring, instead of waiting as other year before making that change. An unnoticed paragraph in the fish law passed by the last legislature and which crept in along with the license provision, will cause this additional trouble and expense for the fishermen.

Section 4560—25 provides for a change in the mesh of pound nets used in these waters, fixing the mesh at 3¾ inches stretch measure for nets used for trout or whitefish, but allowing the use of a two inch mesh for taking herring and other fish except lake, on herring grounds. This section also provides that its provisions shall take effect and be in force from and after Jan. 1, 1909.

This is the law as it is generally understood and was agreed to by the fishermen. In this form it would give them a year's time in which to prepare for making the change in their nets, by using up those on hand at the time the law was passed.

But Section 4560—40, the same section which contains the obnoxious license law, also contains a little "joker" in connection with the mesh law. This is a paragraph which reads as follows:

"The provisions Section of 4560—25 of the statutes shall take effect and be in force from and after the passage and publication of this act, except that the provisions thereof relative to the size of the meshes of nets shall not be operative and in force as to nets to be used only in the waters of Green bay and Lake Michigan until after January 1, 1908."

According to this, the pound net fishermen operating in this region will be obliged to change their twine before beginning next spring's fishing, in all cases where the size of mesh on files not agree with the new law. Those who purchased new nets this season will be obliged to throw them away, instead of using them next season as the new law is supposed to allow. This will be a hardship in many cases, and particularly so since it had been thought by the fishermen that they had still another season in which to prepare for the change.

The Spawn Harvest.

The last gang of nets in the government steam trap operations here at St. James was raised Sunday, and Mr. Stewart and his force left the island yesterday.

The work began November 1st. There were eight tugs employed. The work was by nature confined to Mackinac trout, as whitefish do not spawn until after the trout get through doing business.

The results were not as satisfactory as last year, bad weather and light catches considerably reducing the figures set by the department. Eighty eight tons of trout were caught, and 25,626,000 trout eggs gathered and shipped to the hatcheries.

Yacht Thistle Burned.

The large gasoline yacht Thistle of Boyne City, was totally destroyed by fire off Horse Point, Pine Lake Sunday evening.

A party had her out for a short pleasure trip, and the engine, an uncontrollable manner, flames burst out around the engine. The occupants of the boat had barely time to get into the lucky yawl, when the boat was ablaze in several places. Had the fire occured a mile further out in the lake the yawl would have sunk.

The Thistle was brought here from Muskegon a year ago, by C. E. Turrell. Her owners were F. E. Turrell, Geo. Weaver and Fred Davis. Capt. Weaver was aboard at the time of the fire.

The Thistle was 25 feet long and was valued at $3,000. Insured.

Game Wardens Have Merry Time With Law Violators.

The game and fish wardens in this vicinity had another little adventure Thursday, that proved just as exciting as the one in the vicinity of Charlevoix says the Petoskey News. This time the trouble happened at Beaver Island.

The wardens had seized a boat-load of fish and arrested the fishermen, taking them to St. James for trial. While they were uptown preparing the necessary papers, sympathizers with the fishermen got aboard the wardens' boat and after wrecking the engine, set it fire. The brisk had been out twenty-four hours in a heavy sea and was nearly wet through, while the planks had lightened up so that the fire smothered before it could get a start. Not content with that, the confiscated boat and contents were also seized and got away with.

The steamer Beaver towed the warden's boat to Charlevoix, they arriving there last evening. Some time during the night an attempt was made to scuttle the boat, but was found out in time to prevent it.

Story of the Capture.

The following story of the capture of the tug Sea Gull, by Deputy Wardens Eddy and Smith, recently, we take from the Petoskey News.

"The arrest of the five men Sunday was an example of the way the wardens are pursuing their duties. Last Saturday night, J. H. Eddy of the Soo general deputy state game and fish warden, drove out to Nine Mile Point about 12 o'clock to watch for certain parties who were expected to come and lift their nets, remaining there all night. Chas. N. Smith of East Tawas, chief deputy state game warden, left in the morning for Harbor Springs in company with one of the local game wardens, where they hired a launch and left for Nine Mile Point to join Mr. Eddy. Arriving there he was taken on board, and while still watching the nets, they noticed two boats off of Charlevoix point, evidently fishing. The deputy's launch had a fishing reel for nets and several fish boxes exposed to view so they were able to get very close to the two boats, one of which was a gasoline launch and the other a small steam tug the "Sea Gull." All aboard on the occupants of the fishing boats began to get scared and started to get away, the gasoline boat getting under way first. In order to prevent their chances of escape they ran directly across the bow of the "Seagull," and in passing the latter, one of the deputies jumped on a large catch of trout together with their nets, while the gasoline boat was apparently empty. The chase of the smaller craft was here abandoned and their attention turned to the tug, which had in the meantime got under way and was steaming off. A high sea was running off the point, and for a while it seemed almost an impossibility to get the two boats close enough together to board the tug. "The pursued dodged back and forth and although a much slower boat than the seiner, she was able to elude the officers. The latter finally ran close enough to pull one of the fish boxes full of nets off the stern, of the other boat and they recovered that they were trout nets. Finally the pursuing boatmen ran the nose of their craft up against the stern of the seiner, from which position they could not get away. J. B. Eddy boarded the tug at this point, whereat the fishermen started to throw him overboard. He pulled a gun on them to calm them down, and the capture was practically completed. At the output the gun the tug engineer stopped his engine and Mr. Smith came aboard, the two boats then starting for Petoskey where they arrived about 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, quite a crowd awaiting them at the dock. Five boxes of nets, 2,250 pounds of fish, and the boat was confiscated."

STATION AGENT SHOT.

EMPLOYE RISKS LIFE TO DEFEND RAILWAY CASH.

Operator at Elgin, Ill., Fatally Wounded by Robber He Discovers at Till—Bandit Collar Boss in Final Endeavor with Sawed-off.

Clark Angelbright, operator for the Chicago, Union, Wessons crossing and Lake Ill. Ill. in a Chicago hospital suffering from fatal wounds inflicted by men who attempted to rob the station at Till Lake. He was shot twice, once over the right eye and once in the right temple, while defending the station, Power of Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, and Elgin, hooded by the state marshal and special agents of the Great Western, Illinois Central and Northwestern railroads, are searching the countryside for Frank McMunnis, accused by Angelbright of being his assailant. McMunnis is a hunter, seventeen miles south of Elgin. Angelbright had left the station for a few minutes to get fresh air at the door and when he returned the robber was rifling the safe and drawer. The thief had appropriated Angelbright's revolver, and with it in his pocket he attempted to escape. Angelbright, after being wounded, fell at the door and shot. In an open-mouthed statement Angelbright accused McMunnis. The latter is a Dundee, 22 years old, and had been employed on the farm of E. L. Cases since April 1. He is 5 feet 10 inches and 180 lbs. and wears small ears. Bars in the hand in his hair. Power, Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, and Chicago, on a special train and taken to the hospital.

MERMAIDS OF LEGEND

Sea Women That Were Vouched For by Ancient Writers.

ORIGIN OF THE DELUSION.

These Traditional Creatures Were Probably Dugongs and Manatees, Seal Maidens or Fables—Mermaids of Fiction and the Seat of Fact.

There is a dark and fascinating island in the mermaids of legend. Considering their traditional form, it does not seem quite certain whether they can be included among the five "demarcations" of our religion, but it would be extremely interesting to see one. In all serious seem the tribes and poetry underlying and inherent in the old myths are well worth attention, but apart from these there is something distinctly entertaining in the quasi-historical accounts that we have of mermaids and the bizarre attempts at scientific explanation. The Fiegi has taken firmer hold on popular imagination than many of the old beliefs. Of course they are recognized as mermaidens, but, unlike the majority of mythological beings, they are invested verbatim with a sort of humanoid reality.

"Tritons of the Mermaidens" gives a sensational account of a great tempest which wrecked sailors near Hoolbeen a "sea woman" in the sea exceedingly absent. She was captured and dressed from the "sea cows that feed grass about her" and became a humanized creature, except that she was always trying to escape into the water. And it is added, "Most persons worthy of credit have published in their writings that they had seen her in the sea in times of tempest." In the sixteenth century off Ceylon some sailors declared "seven human and mermaids" several priests and physicians testifying to the fact and the latter having it as proved that after examination and dissection they found the external and internal structures resembled those of ladies' beings. Hudson, the famous navigator, declared that his ship's company had seen a merwoman, the upper part of her body like a woman, with very white and long black hair. An old Icelandic history tells of one near Greenland, "He took and found in all respects like a human being." The Norwegian Bishop Pontoppidan, who wrote in the eighteenth century, "heards the experience of a merman which was deposed to on oath by the observers." And not to multiply quotations proving the belief even of the learned in the actual existence of the mermaids, Pliny asserts authoritatively that "as for the mermaidens, this is no fabulous tale that goth of them, for some have pulsters draw them, as they are indeed."

It seems that almost all these weighty testimonies that one should be assured that the "historical" mermaids were only dugongs or manatees, seals or sea lions, superstitious as some of these interesting creatures measure some eighteen feet in length and are by no means attractive in appearance. Something in the shape of the head and the breast is added on in the rationalistic explanations as explaining the delusion, but one is at a loss to understand how this can account for the circumstantial descriptions that have come down to us. Some of these old writers have proved to us by their publishers that they had very much the same views as to what constitutes feminine beauty as we have now, or, at least, certainly not discover in the dugong or manatee anything whatever to suggest in the very refined degree the idea of a pretty woman. Yet there is generally in the mermaidens of romance, in the verbal pictures the old writers give us, quite marvelous, though Cotsmus, who reported that he had seen two or three, admitted that he saw no beauty in them. The best explanation perhaps does the least violence to one's traditional ideas, as, whatever may be the thought of its resemblance to a woman, it is in itself graceful and free and even are pleasing.

There is at any rate, a rather significant resemblance in the "few that are" of which to make one's pick. In fact, he added if not identical with mermaids were the "seal maidens" of a thousand fables. The sea-legend conditions was that these maidens assumed the form of seals, which they could relinquish at any moment by divulging themselves of the seal-skins. Only if while they were the parting themselves to quest human pulse their seal integuments were stolen or hidden they would have to remain as "sea-women" and could not resume the form of seals. We know on the authority of many a song and legend that willingly or unwillingly a man has been "married to a mermaid

As the fashion of the deep blue sea," but in the case of the fortunate partner of a seal maiden's "troublesome disguise" there was no need for a subterfuge deceit. She could quite comfortably live on land and, indeed, had to unless she found her seaskin again, though always longing, like the merman of Hazelton, to become a sea dweller once more

CHAPTER XVII.—(Continued.)

Guy was a puzzle to himself. He would not admit that during the past year he liking for Maddy Clude had grown to be something stronger than mere friendship, yet he felt a feeling toward Lucy that undoubtedly a change, presaging him not to go to her when she was well and ask her to be a surety as he might that the new flage was quite different. Lucy had no grasp that of the change, and her chief care was to keep the secret which she had held him still true to her for intentions at least, if not in reality. He knew from her letters how much she had longed to be Maddy Clude, and she felt sorry that there was no harm in his taking him, for she was a splendid girl, and it seemed a pity that her lot should have been so humbly cast. This was usually the drift of his thoughts when he thought of her, and now, as he stood there in that evening Maddy's image intervened to him with tenfold intensity, for well he force as she thought, was better for him, he reasoned Maddy, as he meant to do, from her approaching fate.

No such thoughts, however, intruded themselves on Maddy, who, in the full not look away from the present, except to wave at the gate, in which she fancied she had stood by leaving her grandmotherless to marry Guy Hamilton, and to grapple for herself, if she ever had neglected the dying one, there came back to her a feeling that she had done a good deed somewhere long ago this found herself in the prison cell of Maddy. With the coming of daylight, however, the thought of Maddy and Guy left her, and Political and Otherwise.

Don't forget that there was an earthquake in this senatorial district last spring that changed the meandering alignment of the landscape. We must cast our eyes northward hereafter.

We have read very little lately about Gov. Warner's third term aspirations. Can it be that the governor has found some still small voice?

Evidences point constitutionally to a let up in the money stringency, and the opinion is freely expressed by those best qualified to judge, that we have crossed the valley and are already on rising ground. Confidence is rapidly returning, and that was the only thing needed.

Roosevelt has said that he would not permit his friends to nominate him for another term, but there is good prospect that his enemies will do the work. They have made a good start toward that end. It is well to remember that Roosevelt is a fighter.

It begins to look as if we shall be unable to recognize the state constitution when the con. con. gets through with it.

If we may venture to inquire, who is to be the next representative from the Charlevoix county legislative district? This silence is ominous and very cracking to the nerves.

We shall be relieved when this terrible "Roosevelt panic" is over, so that the president may resume the work of "bringing the country into war with Japan." No knowing what might have happened a month ago had not the president's attention been diverted.

Secretary Taft is rapidly nearing Mt. Pulcherrima. It may also be, incidentally, that he is nearing the white house.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Traverse City Record: Word has been received in this city of the death of Rev. John Crane of Charlevoix, formerly of this city. Mr. Crane died Thursday at his home. He was quite well known here, having preached at times in the Congregational church.

The Elk Rapids Cement company shipped 2,500 barrels of Portland cement to the Soo for use by the government on its works there. The Elk Rapids cement entered into competition with products from other plants, and was chosen by the government experts.

Sabin Cooper, assistant cashier of the Commercial bank of Caro, will be the active member of the People's bank of Boyne City, which is in process of organization. Associated with him will be H. F. Wenzel and E. L. Wenzel, of Boyne City. H. F. Wenzel will also be an active officer of the bank.

Petoskey News: If has not become known yet, but Tom Petoskey was married in this city one day last week to a young lady whose parents reside in Charlevoix county. The well known pilot of the inland route steamer, Topinabee, has been keeping his happiness a secret, but may be assured the congratulations of all who have known him.

East Jordan Herald: L. C. Madison has been reappointed County Agent of Convention and Charities by Governor Warner. The new law which went into effect recently, vacated all such offices in the state necessitating a reappointment. In the Governor's letter to Mr. Madison he commends that gentleman highly on his past record.

Petoskey News: People in Petoskey will be surprised and pained to know that Mr. E. E. Howman the photographer, has disposed of his business here and will move away from the city. For many years he has been recognized as one of thevery best in his line of business in the state, having produced work that received the highest commendation wherever exhibited.

Petoskey is making strenuous efforts to land a wooden ware factory that shall employ at least 100 men for 10 years. The bonus to be paid is $10,000. The company will manufacture all kinds of wooden ware recipiacles for packing house, and will buy timber that is too small for ordinary saw and stave mills. It will be a good thing for Petoskey and the surrounding country in furnishing a market for timber that has so far been used only for stove wood, besides giving employment to a good many.

Petoskey News: For a few weeks there have been rumors about the city to the effect that Mr. Elliott M. Sly had decided to dispose of his interests in the Elk Cement and Lime Company and retire therefrom. The additional story also came out that the general office of the corporation is to be removed from Petoskey to Elk Rapids, where their cement plant is located. On being asked in regard to the matter Mr. Sly informed the Evening News that a deal was under consideration, but at that time he was not at liberty to divulge any of the details. Again today he was approached and this time he gave out the verification of the story that he is to retire from the position of secretary and treasurer and will be succeeded by his brother, Homer Sly, of Elk Rapids. He also admitted that the office of the company is to go to Elk Rapids.

Cheboygan Tribune: Monday was a very busy day at the fish house of J. R. Hilborn, when no less than 200 boxes of fresh fish were packed for shipment which used up every box he had on hand, and had to have the Cheboygan Mfg. Co. make a lot for them at once. The tug Osprey arrived from Cutler, Ont., with about nine ton of herring and other fish in season, and other local fishermen being about four ton more. He had eight men cleaning fish from Sunday from 5:00 p. m. to 12, who returned again Monday and finished that morning. The sight was one long to be remembered, as there was hardly room to move. One car load was shipped by express freight Monday and some by express. Tuesday another car was shipped by express freight. These fish go to New York and Chicago and are not in the trust combine. Fishing has been good the past week for this class of fish and the weather could and have been better for them at this time of the year.

Probate Order.

State of Michigan, In Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.

At a session of said Court, held at the probate office, in the City of Charlevoix, in said county, on the 20th day of November, 1907.

Present, Hon. Willard A. Smith, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Emelie Clark, deceased. Charles Winter having filed in said Court his petition praying that said court will assign and determine who were at the time of the death of said deceased, the heirs at law and legal representatives of said deceased, and all of which said deceased died intestate.

It is ordered that the 23rd day of December, A. D. 1907, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at said probate office, be and is hereby appointed for hearing said petition.

It is further ordered that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county.

A DESERT SANDSTORM.

Experience of a Woman Traveler While Crossing Sahara.

When it comes to encounter a sandstorm in the desert of Sahara is observed by Mrs. Palmer Thomas. "Few things bring such a sense of utter powerlessness as a desert sandstorm, and I shall never forget my experience of one. Our dragoman one day suddenly called our attention to a darkening horizon line. 'Sirr,' he said, 'sandstorm come. No man will ride in sandstorm.' and hurrying us to discount and make the camels kneel in a circle on the sand before the storm was upon us. Each man throw his kafiran over the peaks of his saddle and crouched within the shelter it afforded and that formed by the animal's body behind him, while I nestled in the hollow formed by my camel's neck and shoulder, drawing the folds of the blanket like stuff tightly over me. The wine beats, leaving what was exposed turned her long neck right round and laid her head on my knee, seeking the protection of my cloak for her eyes against the sand, which, driven by the fury of the wind, struck the face like powdered glass.

"But I looked out upon the scene as long as I could, watching what appeared to be a mass of brown gauze veils streaming up across the sky, darkening the sunlight and gradually blotting out everything from our sight. But by what crowded the cloud, increasing in intensity every minute and the sound of its roaring made one's own voice inaudible, while the darkness became that of Dante's night. And so we sat silent in the noise and the blackness until the furious storm passed. Then, being out again, I saw the brownish mass of cloud flying before the wind away toward the Nile, some forty miles distant, and the cloudless blue of a March sky in Egypt once more overspread above us.

"But the legs of our beasts were all covered with the sand that had fallen, and notwithstanding my shouted protestation the sand was lying on my dress and hat and was thick upon me. The same thing we watched the brown cloud boiling itself in the immensity of the desert, where the whitening bones of animals tell with sad frequency of the overwhelming fury of these sudden tempests; then we mounted and rode away."—Chicago News.

WHALES AS RAMS.

Cases Where These Marine Monsters Have Attacked Vessels.

While cruising in the south seas the whaler Essex on Nov. 20, 1820, was frequently attacked by a cow sperm whale supposed to have been the mother of a calf which had just been harpooned. The whale had not been wounded herself, and her attack was very determined. At her first rush she passed under the Essex and carried away a great length of her false keel. Then, coming to the surface a considerable distance away, she appeared to take bearings and deliberately charged the vessel again, ramming her with such violence that she struck in the bows, while the ship rolled so heavily that the captain thought she must be dismantled. The case is memorable because the crew had to abandon the vessel, and one boat was never heard of again.

A more singular instance of a whale attacking a vessel occurred in 1905. The singularity lies in the fact that in the case of the Handa (she the attack was entirely unprovoked. This vessel, a brigantine of 200 tons, was on her way to Sydney with a cargo of timber. On Aug. 24, about noon, a couple of sperm whales rose very close to the vessel and, while the crew watched them "spouting" across her bows, the pair suddenly aimed around and came straight for her. One thought better of it and dived below the Handa. Into the other struck her fair and square on the beam, crushing in her timbers. Having rammed the ship in this manner, the whale backed off, horribly damaged about the head, and presumably sank and died.

Fortunately there were some packages of provisions on board, and the crew were able to keep the vessel afloat with the pumps until a rough and ready collision mat had been fastened out of these and drawn over the hole.—Philadelphia Magazine.

Women of the Kurds.

As to the way the Kurds treat their women, an Asiatic traveler says: "They neither veil them nor impose upon them heavy manual labor. Their women are well clothed and are free to ride abroad, fully armed, and express their opinions in public affairs with as loud a voice as any sufragist could desire. To see a woman of any upright as a lance and with a good figure is not uncommon, and that, I think, is a sufficiently striking testimony to any one acquainted with the east."

A Practical Letter.

There has recently been an outcry against the deterioration in modern letter writing, but the following epistolary triumph from a tailor has levelled things up:

"I have taken based a writ against you," wrote a tailor whose letter was produced in the Westminster county court, "for the amount of your bill. Trusting for a continuation of your esteemed favor, I remain," etc.—London Globe.

A Business Matter.

She—Here is your engagement ring, Henri. I cannot marry you; I love another. He—What is his name? She—In heaven's name, you won't kill him, will you? He—Oh, no; but I thought I might do a deal with him with this ring.—Sources.

An Easy Mark.

Theodore—It's all right, darling; I have cut your father dead ten times in one another at one. He even went so far as to borrow £10 of me. Surely he can't refuse me your hand after that. Edith—Dory, I'm afraid you've made a mess of it. He told me about the £10 and said I'd better give you up, that you were too easy going.—London Scraps.

Her Opportunity.

"You come to give notice, ma'am." "Indeed?"

"And would you give me a good reference, ma'am? I'm going to Mrs. Jones across the way."

"The best in the world, Maggie. I hate that! worrying."—Life.

Courage, like cowardice, is undoubtedly contagious, but some persons are not liable to catch it.—George D. Prentice.

About the only thing a man can do without trying is to fail.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Their Opinion.

The visiting lecturer had spoken at considerable length when he said to the children, whose attention had begun to wander, "And now I want to tell you of a boy I once knew."

"He had a good father and mother," the visitor continued when he found several pairs of eyes had returned to their survey of his face, "and they did all that lay in their power to make him happy. But the boy was thoughtless and selfish. He frittered away his time and never thought of the future. Today instead of filling an honorable and useful position in life where do you suppose he stands as a man?"

"He stands forfeit, sir!" shrilled all the little boys and girls in prompt and joyous unison.—Youth's Companion.

Brought a Rush.

"Yes," related the old postmaster at Bacon Ridge, "times were getting rather dull around here, so we had a resort to some press agent tactics that you show fellows. The village editor got us a.l, in his paper that Hiram Brown would take city boarders at $5 a down.

"Great Hornhurdle!" gasped the hotel manager. "You don't mean to say that Hiram kept his word?"

"That's what he did stranger, with boarders to large lots."

"But—but how could he board them at $5 a down?"

"He didn't board them, stranger. He just took them. You see, Hiram Brown is the village photographer."—Chicago News.

Crossing the Line.

If the ships all moved in one direction—northward, for instance—the world would suffer a prodigious loss in the matter of valuable time through the dumping overboard on the great meridian of such multitudes of days by ships' crews and passengers. But fortunately the ships do not all sail west. Half of them sail east. So there is no real loss. These latter pick up all the discarded days and add them to the world's stock again and shoot as good as new, too, for of course the sell was for preservice them.—Mark Twain in "Following the Equator."

To Mend Granite Ware.

Fuse together equal parts of sulphur and black lead and melt a portion of this in the hole with a hot iron as in soldering.

Great Ideas.

Great ideas travel slowly, and feel a time somewhat as the gods, whose feet are shod with wool.—James A. Garfield.

Possibly Unpatriotic.

In the days of Caesar, critics had reversed, the Germans would not engage in battle before the full moon, knowing that if they did so they would be defeated.

"Yiddish."

"Yiddish" is derived from the German word "Judisch," meaning Jewish. It means a dialect spoken by the Jews in various localities.

Evidently a Debt.

JUST MISSED IT.

How Dick Donnelly Lost a Fortune.

Steward Donnelly, of the Missouri, recently lost a small fortune in a most singular way says the Traverse City Record. A wealthy bachelor, named Greaves, of Glen Haven, was a great friend, although he was a relative of Dick.

During his last illness Greaves sent for Donnelly. When the latter entered the room Greaves greeted him in the cordiality and said: "Well Donnelly, I have no near relative so I intend to leave you a little present. If you'll get pen and paper I'll make out the will in your favor."

Dutifully hastened to secure them. When he reached the sick chamber the old man said, "Of course you'll have to have a witness." Again he ran to the street to find someone but while he was gone the old man suddenly died. As there was no evidence of Greaves' intentions the money was held in court until some distant relatives were searched out and then turned over to them. It amounted to $40,000.

The Sugar Factory.

The West Michigan Sugar Co. finished slicing beets about ten yesterday (Wednesday) morning, but the factory cannot be said to be closed down until the material in process gets through to the sugar barrel at the other end of the factory. This week will probably clean out the sugar hopper.

So far as the operation of the plant is concerned, the campaign has been fairly satisfactory, and very little fault can be found with the quality and yield of the beets. But the fact remains that only about half the acreage was secured that should have been.

There is no question about profit to the farmer in the beet crop, when it is given intelligent and timely care, as has been demonstrated in this region both this year and last. The second campaign has commenced and the company will soon square away for the third. The farmers are about the only ones that have made anything out of it thus far, and, in view of this fact, the company has reason to hope for a large increase in acreage next year.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At Dearborn Park Avenue, Charlevoix, Friday, November 29th, 1907, Mrs. Katharine Smith Mathias, widow of Francis V. Mathias, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Smith.

Seldom has the hand of death taken from the younger ranks of our community one who was more widely known, or who will be more universally missed and mourned.

Her last illness dates from the birth of a son, Nov. 5th last, and from that time until the sad announcement of her death, a host of friends listened with hope and fear for every word from the sick room.

Katherine Smith Mathias was born in Charlevoix June 29th, 1882. From infancy to womanhood she called Charlevoix her home, and the final message that summoned her from earth found her within a stone's throw of the place of her birth.

She graduated with honor from the Charlevoix High School in the Class of '99, and was an active member of the High School Alumni until the time of her decease. In December, 1903, she was married to Joseph V. Mathias, and set up a home in our midst with bright prospects and anticipations, now suddenly destroyed.

To the bereaved husband, in the sorrowing parents, in whose home hold her removal makes the first vacancy, and to the brother and sisters, the sympathy of all goes out in the fullest measure. We mourn with them, not alone for them.

Added to her other qualities, she possessed a talent in music that was marked and cultured and was generously helpful with this gift in social and public entertainments and in the churches. She was for several years a member of the choir of the Methodist church, but all religious societies claimed her when special talent was needed.

A certain native diffidence characterized her in the company of strangers, but when this barrier was removed by acquaintance, her sincerity, loyalty, and deeply sympathetic nature strongly attached to her all who came to know her well.

It has also fallen to her lot, since her marriage, to be called bereaved, just as she had reason to look forward to many years of happy home life, entitled by the joys of motherhood, presents a problem of Divine Providence that human wisdom cannot solve.

The funeral service was held at the home at 2:30 Sunday afternoon, Rev. H. Wright officiating. The house was filled to overflowing with friends who desired to manifest their regard and sympathy at the last sad rite.

H. M. ENOS.

To Our Friends and Neighbors.

At such a time words are weak instruments with which to express the agony of our stricken hearts, or the gratitude that warms them, for the tender ministrations and heartfeltsympathy and kindness of sympathy that have come to us from our friends during the terrible affliction that fell upon us. We speak not only for ourselves, but for him whose home has been covered with even a darker pall of sorrow. Time cannot efface the scar that is left upon our hearts, neither can it cool the warmth of our gratitude to these good, true, loving friends.

THE LECTURE COURSE.

The Second Number a Popular Lecture by George Edgar Vincent, of the University of Chicago.

Friday evening the 13th inst. occurs the next number of the Lecture Course. At that time it will be the rare privilege of the people of Charlevoix to hear one of the greatest and most interesting lecturers on the American platform. Dr. Vincent is a son of Bishop Vincent, of Chautauqua fame, and has inherited richly from his father's genius. Scholarship, close observation from extensive travel, keen sight into human nature, sympathy with the common people, the natural qualities of an orator, and an abundance of wit of the choicest kind are combined in this remarkspeaker. He has lectured in hundreds of towns all over this country and his audience are enthusiastic in his praise. It is proposed that he give the people of Charlevoix his popular lecture on "Children vs Grown Ups." No one should miss this great opportunity. Here is an opportunity to hear a man that is a popular lecturer speak on a topic that concerns every man, woman and child, a lecturer that has had rare opportunities to study conditions that have come to very few. Single admission 50 cents.

Those who have not already secured their tickets for the course still have an opportunity to purchase a ticket at the regular rate of $1.50. Four superb numbers remain to be enjoyed. The total cost by single admission to these entertainments will be $2.25. Purchase a ticket for the four numbers and thus save seventy-five cents. The reserve seat sale will open at the Ivy Drug store Wednesday evening the 11th inst. at 7 o'clock.

ROBBERS IN CLINTON BANK.

Rob Illinois Institution and Later Lose Their Booty.

Two robbers behind the Nash bank of Clinton, Ill., Monday, secured about $2,200 in gold and silver coin contained in much greater amount in bags of coin and bonds through their during, but $1,000 of the money they had stolen and later secured falling into the hands of the local police. Police went on his in every direction after the robbers, and two arrests were made in Decatur and in the city of Grand Meigs of Chicago, and the other said he was Edward Harris of Chicago. The trick had been fine for the day. Around the paper money had been placed in the coin and only the gold and silver coin remained on top of the counter when the robbers entered. Behind the counter, the robbers behind the back offered to hold up their faces and then proceeded down to the big vault adjoining some thousands in bonds and other valuables, but they failed to open it. They then went to the safe and secured the bags containing the coin. They walked out of the bank, Walter Nash, the assistant cashier, jumped through it, and found himself face to face with a man in a handsome overcoat and hard cap in hand covered a gun to his head and ordered him back into the vault. Nash did so, and the robbers then escaped and have locked the vault so easily. Through the alarm spread the hall in good shape, and a posse of police went into, lowered secretly a machine gun, and a number of men in the town of the posse and formed. The robbers escaped in an open car, and the posse followed in a car. Later the robbers were found in a wagon, and the posse finally taken to other bandits. The robbers were finally taken to other bandits. The robbers were finally taken to other bandits. The robbers were

NATIONAL GRANGE.

Annual Address of Worthy Master Hutchinson—Total Assets of the Organization Now Amount to $102,921.

In his address to the national grange at its opening session in Hartford, Conn., on Nov. 17 Worthy Master S. E. Hutchinson said that the membership of the grange throughout the country has made a net increase of 8,[illegible] for the past year, which is larger than for over thirty years past. The financial condition of the order is good. The total assets of the national grange a year ago were $94,071.16 and on Oct. 1, 1897, $102,921.14, which is a net gain of $8,849.50. Although the work of organization has been more than usually successful, the order should be still further built up in the states of the central west.

Speaking of the importance of agriculture, the national master said that the wheat field business of this crops may be suitable best take the roads of cities, but their cloth from value will be greater. The farm products in their original form or in the form of cattle, sheep, hogs and horses have overflowed the great cemeteries, clogged transportation facilities and brought cold from foreign countries. These facts warrant the statement that agriculture is not yet the great industry of the country, but the most important to the nation's material prosperity. Agriculture grows not because other industries prosper, but other industries prosper because agriculture prospers. The protection of agriculture embodies the highest type of statesmanship. It is eminently proper to impose the effect of all proposed public policies upon agriculture when under consideration in any legislative body.

On the subject of grange mutual life insurance the worthy master had this to say: "There has been a demand for several years for some form of fraternal life insurance within the organization to cover the national field as local companies cover certain states. Social, reliable, full legal reserve life insurance furnished by a society and controlled by its own members, operated on the fraternal system, with the only pecuniary responsibility to the members, is the foundation to build upon. What is wanted is the best at the lowest price—one thing, life insurance, not paid for insurance claims. Investigation and careful arrangements for the national grange, report the speaker, reveal that the insurance committee had used diligence in the preparation of a plan for a weekly journal upon the subject, and recommends to the consideration of the grange. He emphasized the fact that the publication will not cause its competition with educational papers, the editorial policy will be directed solely to a desire to promote the organization. It is to be the official organ of the grange.

On the disputed alcohol law, which took effect June 1, 1897, the national master said that the comparatively small consumption of denatured alcohol during the past six months had been chiefly due to the fact that our manufacturers were not ready to furnish the article using apparatus, such as stoves, lamps, etc. Now being on sale in this country, there will be ample field for the article. The question of denatured alcohol as a fuel for motor vehicles, boats and farm engines is engaging the attention of manufacturers, and it is believed that this should with the made available for use as a motor fuel in the near future.

An material aid for the improvement of public highways he spoke said that the grange had inaugurated a campaign of education having for its object the enactment of legislation by congress providing for a federal appropriation of money to be divided into the several appropriations of the states which, to be expended for the improvement of public highways. The legislative committee has given close attention to this work and believes that the time has arrived when the grange and should be prosecuted vigorously with the view of securing legislation at the present session of congress.

On trusts and the tariff it was remarked that the present tariff rates on articles produced by trusts are usually higher than is necessary to cover the duties. If these rates, or between home and foreign manufacturers and consumers of articles controlled by trusts, on the duty of such articles and simply collect the duties on imports, compared with the wrongs attempted. If these articles are well founded there would be no demand for legislation, but there will correct the evident defects on the present tariff schedules without legislation affecting our agricultural or manufacturing industries. These facts can best be secured through a non-partisan tariff commission whose duty it shall be to examine carefully into all phases of the subject. This commission should include representatives of the agricultural, labor, manufacturing, transportation and commercial interests.

On the parcels post question the national master remarked that the postal reform had received a new impetus within the past few months, owing to the fact that it had a powerful advocate in the new postmaster general, Mr. Mayor, who had indorsed what to all intents and purposes is the grange plan and who is using his influence to arouse public interest in its support. He advised an active campaign in congress on this subject.

The address also favored postal savings banks, currency reform and pure food legislation.

Pennsylvania granges went to the national grange in special cars, starting from Harrisburg. They spent a night in New York on the way.

The 14th number of the national grange organ was a very creditable one.

JUVENILE GRANGES.

Their Purpose Is Purely Educational—Practical Mass Advantage.

[Special Correspondence.]

In considering the methods which are being adopted to any organization we should first consider the purpose of that organization. The purpose of the juvenile grange is purely educational, and the training it gives the child (except from any that need be obtained elsewhere. No office in the world can so well lend a hand to the father of Patrons of Husbandry, and the juvenile work tradue and prepares each member for the work of the grange.

The first element of success in the juvenile grange is a good matron. She need not have had experience with children nor as a teacher. She can develop her peculiar needs as the work goes on if she is fitted to her work.

The first thing to be taught is to be a good Patron of Husbandry. The beautiful words of instruction in our ceremonies should be drilled into the impressionable mind of the child they will take deeper root than they do with the careless adult. The next thing is the careful training in the rules of the order. The children should be organized drill work in the proper opening and closing of the grange, each child receiving personal attention and instruction in carrying out his or her part with dignity. Children naturally love anything of a military nature and will fall generally into doing their regular work with precision, promptness and dignity. The degree work is a delight to them, and the lessons learned in their order will be carried out in the future when they have become members of the larger Order which they closely resemble.

After all parliamentary rules are thoroughly learned the regular routine business must be managed by themselves. The matron can easily hold them to rule by judicious praise and encouragement. Not often will they need a reprimand, if the matron is a convenient careless habits, and this training will be of the greatest benefit to them. Never in after life will they lose the self-confidence and business ability thus gained.

After the business is thoroughly learned the most delightful work can be opened up to them through the study of nature and agriculture. The members of the Cornell Junior Naturalist Society will be sent to them on applying for them, and from them on be developed the most delightful object lessons, the illustrations showing them how to each part of the work must be developed in the production of seeds and bulbs, the distribution of moisture, the habits of plants, birds or animals, the spreading of seeds the use for shade in plants, the competition between weeds and plants, the mother instinct in plants and animals, the diseases and enemies of plants and flowers and many, many other valuable lessons may be fastened upon the child's mind by the simple object lesson which they may themselves conduct. The recitations, so-called and other work of this nature in the lecturer's time will give confidence for work of the same nature in the regular grange in the future.

Experience shows me that the juvenile grange is the surest method by which we can build up the order. In our juvenile grange of North Hamilton the children come the days until they can be admitted to the larger grange. No question ever arises as to whether or not they will join. It is a foregone conclusion—this could not be done.

In some granges where I have been sent to talk this subject I find that a fear of professional difficulties is one factor is standing in the way of the organizing of juvenile granges. To such I would say: Do not fear for the children, they will put into the work the enthusiasm of childhood, they will imbibe the grange spirit, and before you know it the old will have infused new life into the parent organizations. Careful study, observation and actual experience teach me that the best thing for the child of the future is the juvenile grange of today.

National Grange Officers.

The following officers were elected by the national grange on Nov. 20:

Master—S. E. Hutchinson, Concord, N. H.

Overseer—T. C. Atkeson, Morgantown, W. Va.

Lecturer—W. F. Grant, Moline, Ill.

Steward—A. Newcomb, Golden, Colo.

Assistant steward—C. E. Rickenbach, West Brookfield, Mass.

Chaplain—G. W. Wood, Ellington, Conn.

Treasurer—Mrs. R. S. McDowell, Rome, N. Y.

Secretary—C. M. Freeman, Tippecanoe City, O.

Gatekeeper—A. J. Powers, Beloit, Wis.

Ceres—Mrs. Elizabeth Patterson, College Park, Md.

Flora—Mrs. Ida Judson, Salvor, In.

Pomona—Mrs. S. G. Baird, Lithia Mills, Minn.

Lady assistant steward—Mrs. Joanna Walker, Marshallton, Del.

Member executive committee—Frank N. Godfrey, Olean, N. Y., member New York state grange, succeeding E. R. Norris, whose term expired at this session of the grange.

The Pennsylvania railroads will make no concessions in rates to delegates to the state grange meeting, which will be held in West Chester, Pa., in December. This is owing to the fact that the legislature has relieved farms in Pennsylvania of the taxes that is cheap enough. The charge is not without compensations. The certificate plan is a success.

Railway Tickets of Gold.

All the prominent railway companies in England issue railway tickets, made entirely of gold, which entitle the holder to travel free by any class of car and train on any line and by any system in the British isles. They are the size of a florin, but oval in shape and engraved with the particular railway company's coat of arms, with the holder's name beneath, and are intended to be worn on watch chains. These tickets cannot be lost, but are presented by the directors to persons who have earned the railway companies' gratitude.

NATIONAL GRANGE NOTES.

Matters of General Interest to Members of the Order From Maine to California.

New York stands at the front among grange states. State Master F. N. Godfrey reports the membership at 47,000. There are 600 subordinate granges, thirty-eight having been added the past year. The Patrons fire insurance associations are strong factors in a financial sense. They represent assets $1,000,000 of risks. There are 172 grange halls owned in the state, the total value being reported at $343,976. Much has been done by the state grange in legislation benefitting rural conditions.

State Lecturer Thompson is one of Maine's enthusiastic grangers. He says there are over 400 granges in the state, and over 200 of them own their own grange halls, which range in value from $2,000 to $6,000 in some. A grange of 200 members is almost equal to a church in Maine, and this gives a permanence to the grange movement that is unmentionable. The grange membership has increased from 20,000 to 34,000 in twelve years. The increase of interest in the state and purpose in the United States is Hamilton grange, with 800 members. It has a grange store, which did a business of $18,000 last year, and there are half a dozen more younger stores in the state.

National Treasurer Miss Eva S. McDowell, of Rome, N. Y., reports the financial condition of the national grange as follows:

RECEIPTS.

Balance Oct. 1, 1896	$9,856.30
From various sources	4,072.84
	$13,929.14

PAYMENTS.

On orders	$2,713.68
Balance Oct. 1, 1897	11,215.46
	$13,929.14

The total resources of the national grange are $102,921.14, including land and money invested in bonds, savings bank deposits, etc., in $102,921.14.

State Master George W. P. Grant of New Jersey says: "The past year has been the banner year in grange work in the Garden State. Sixteen new subordinate granges have been organized and 1,000 members, making 15 subordinate and twelve Pomona granges. Nearly 2,000 new members have been added to our membership, making a gross total of 15,000. Our Grange Fire Insurance company has been similar growing, giving all the protection for our patrons. We have nearly $18,000 cash, much of property insured. For a number of years subordinate and Pomona granges have been cooperating in the purchase of farm supplies at a great saving. This has been incorporated of a local character. The Grange commercial Exchange has been recently incorporated with a capital stock of $125,000, which it is expected will be very helpful to the members of the grange."

G. W. Peirce, state master of the Vermont grange, reports thirty new subordinates and one Pomona organized the past year, adding 2,000 members. Questions were freely discussed, and education was the watchword. Agriculture and nature studies were being introduced into the common schools. The grange stood for better roads, better methods and better everything. He will not be satisfied until there are as many granges in Vermont as there are towns.

C. D. Richardson, state master in Massachusetts, says a great growth is going on with enlisting results. The problem of child education was engaging the attention of Patrons in Massachusetts. Growth of membership was of little consequence unless every one had some definite object. The grange is winning its way to the front.

The exemplification of the ritualistic work was never better than this year. The first degree was exemplified by New Britain station grange officers, the second by a Cheshire (Conn.) team, the third by a ladies' degree team from Keene, N. H., the fourth by a ladies' degree team from North Brookfield, Mass. The fifth degree was beautifully exemplified by a Central Falls (R. I.) team of Connecticut and the sixth and seventh degrees by the officers of the Connecticut state grange. This work contributes to the "lovey" degrees, cannot fail to be an inspiration to all who witnessed it, and through them the various subordinate granges have represented will be elated to improvement in this very important phase of grange work.

Governor Woodruff of Connecticut gave an informal reception to the national grange and visiting delegates just at the close of one morning's session. In the receiving line were Governor and Mrs. Woodruff, ex-Governor and Mrs. C. J. Bell of Vermont and ex-Governor and Mrs. N. J. Bachelder of New Hampshire. Several hundred visiting Patrons took occasion to pay their respects to the chief executive on this occasion. Governor Woodruff is a recent member of the grange.

Potato Growing Contest.

A novel grange contest took place at North Augusta, Me., this fall in potato raising between the brothers and the sisters. Each one had been previously required to plant five hills of potatoes, care for them and dig them. The losing side was to furnish the supper. On Oct. 5 each one carried the potatoes raised to the grange, where they were weighed. The brothers won by the small margin of five and one-half pounds. The largest crop raised was twenty-two pounds by Brother Wilber. J. W. DARROW.

It Wasn't Funny.

"I don't call that funny; I call it tragic," he said. (Somebody had told the story of the woman who declared that immediately after she got what it used to be, that you never heard of men losing their hair and going down on their knees nowadays and that "I know my husband didn't go down on his knees when he proposed to me," whereupon her dearest friend said: "Didn't he? He did when he proposed to me.") "Tragic for whom?" asked somebody. "For that husband," said he.—Exchange.

He left home, W. T. in 1861 went to Wisconsin and enlisted in 1862, and was in the army till close of war. Jacob Vandusen was enlisted and was in the same regiment the war. Mr Nelson Vandusen never wrote home, and they never heard from him, and the family all supposed him dead years ago, and he knew nothing of the removal of his father and family to Michigan in 1865. When the law was passed giving increase of pension to soldiers of certain age, it became necessary for him to make proof of his age from family records, so they wrote to New York and for the first time he learned the family had moved to Michigan. Jacob Vandusen and the family received, as the proof was made. Mr. Vandusen arrived in time to attend the wedding of his neice and see his brother whom he had not seen in 46 years.

NOT SOLID ENOUGH FOOD.

Nuts Seem to Fail to Satisfy the Human Animal.

Nuts as the dainties of the world by food reformer cranks, nuts of all sorts, says a writer in Mulliner's. These are urged upon us with special fervor and enthusiasm by those who regard all foods of animal origin as "devoid energy," immortalized by the foul crimes of murder. Here, we are told, are foodstuffs—walnuts, hickory nuts, filberts, pecans, pinnuts—of a high degree of nutritiousness and attractiveness, not excessive in expense, and containing a larger percentage of both protein and fat. Analysis made in the laboratory absolutely confirms the truth of the statement. Pale and protestes are both present in large amounts and in readily digestible form; and yet practical fr no "unemancipated" specimen of the human race—except the Shawnee Indian in hickory nut time—will attempt to make a meal on nuts, to sparing them sinedy as a bonne bouche to be taken after the serious business of the meal is over, merely as a dessert. The tasteful phrase of "the walnuts and the wine" expresses too closely where they are in the realm of the normal diet list.

Grim Epitaph in Hungary.

What is the most terrible epitaph in existence? One of the gruesome inscriptions that on a stone which was set up a few years ago in the cemetery of Debrecen, eastern Hungary. There lies in the Lord Joseph Moritz, sainer, who died in his 42d year. He was killed by his wife. Five months sooner, she died in her 47th year. She was about to bear daughter. Elias Moritz, who died in her own hand in her 17th year, after shooting her mother, Joseph Moritz, who died in agonies, aged 27. He had shot his father, May eternal mercy have pity on their poor, sinful souls." This memorial was erected by a local literary association to which, it is said, the last of the Elisabeth family left a sum of 47,000 for the purpose.

The Nicest Way to Know.

A tender affection has two young hopefuls, Minnie Tommie and Maggie, the latter the older by a year or two. A few days ago Maggie Tom came in, whimpering with the tiny sobs of a child. "Have Jesus put his voice shaken on, and I want you, and she wont give him to me." "Why, what's the matter?" "Why, Jesus put his voice shaken on, and I want him, and she wont give him to me." "Did you ask her for them kindly, for sure?" "Yes, I did." "Well, suppose you go back and try again. Ask her just the nicest way you know, and see if you can't get them." The youngster toddled out, and the father from the back window saw Jesus in the shape of two items. "Jesus for God's sake, let me take them, please."

The sugar beets that are coming into the Charlevoix sugar factory this fall beat the record in Michigan for percentage of sugar as well as purity. The average tests are between 16 and 17 per cent sugar content. In fact 15 per cent is as frequent as 15 per cent, which is the lowest that any have tested. This proves the contention that that section of Michigan is the ideal location for a sugar factory.—Michigan Investor.

An old Indian called at this office yesterday and said that "long time go big pluck wite geese fly 'way up high on top ma house, leave no snow 'till autumn December. Last week goose fly 'way up, can't seem um, on top ma house, no go it snow Christmas maybe, can't tell yet." This is one of the signs of the "noble red men" that never fails, so we will probably have another winter in Emmet county sometime.—Harbor Springs Graphic.

The Northern Michigan Teachers' association will meet in Traverse City next year, the local delegation being successful over Reed City, St. Ignace, Ludington and Petoskey. The association is composed of the counties as far south as Ludington and Mt. Pleasant and from those on up north. There were about 300 teachers in attendance at the Cadillac meeting and the local delegation was composed of Prof. I. B. Gilbert, Principal; R. L. Nye, of the High school; Principal Joe Hornsby, of the Hamilton avenue building, Miss Theobald, Miss Addie Johnson, Miss Nettie Gray and Miss Elizabeth Drew. The meeting was an excellent one in every way. President Lancaster, of Olivet, speaking, Prof. C. D. Smith, of the Agricultural college, I. A. Beddow, of the Central Normal, and Congressman J. Adam Bede also delivering addresses.

Badly Mixed Up.

Abraham Brown, of Winterton, N. Y., had a very remarkable experience he says. "Doctor got badly mixed over me; one said heart disease; two called it kidney trouble; the fourth, blood poison, and the fifth stomach and liver trouble; but none of them helped me; so my wife advised trying Electric Bitters, which are restoring me to perfect health. One bottle did me more good than all the five doctors prescribed." Guaranteed to cure blood poison, weakness and all stomach, liver and kidney complaints, by F. G. Hines & Co. druggist, 50c.

RAILROAD PRESIDENT SPEAKS

Charles H. Mellen's Vigorous Speech Before the National Grange Calls Out a Resolution.

The president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad was invited to address the national grange at Hartford at the public meeting held on the evening of Nov. 19. There were numerous other speeches on that occasion, but President Mellen was the one that made his audience straighten up in their seats and take notice. He likened the attack on corporations to a drunken man's delirium, condemned the brass band methods employed, said the investigation endured of his road was instigated by stock gamblers, asserted the holding in Massachusetts was for the purpose of blackmail, showed that it is not a rich man's pale, but the losses must be borne by every man, woman and child, and closed with a tribute to J. Pierpont Morgan and others who had so much to resent in the scant consideration their efforts in behalf of the business interests of the country had received "at the hands of those in authority" and who had put that all aside and had done so much in so short a time and so effectively.

It was a startling speech, replete with frosty and lovelike, and it wasn't quite relished by the leaders of the grange. Had they known what President Mellen was going to say on the occasion probably he would not have appeared on the programme. What the gringes thought about it may be gathered from the following resolution which was adopted at the first session held after the speech was delivered:

Resolved, That the members of the national grange do not when the organization is at the speakers at the public meetings of the national grange, or at any grange meeting, or at any other place, to speak, and its members encouraged to attend its programme adopted with their troubles concerning carried over further some of which should have our cause further the world to a hope of approach of the millennium. Be it resolved that the provisions of the constitution of the national grange be amended so as to read as follows:

TO PREVENT HOARDED DEPOSITS

Postmaster General Meyer Recommends Postal Savings Banks.

In his annual report, Postmaster General Meyer recommends the establishment of postal savings banks for three reasons: "In order to encourage among our people economy and thrift. In order to afford a place of deposit free from any possibility of theft or suspicion for our money which might otherwise be hoarded and kept out of circulation through ignorance or lack of confidence. Mr. Meyer says authentic cases have been hoarded or shipped away by the Italians immigrants who have landed in the past ten years. For want of postal banks, he says, money orders are being bought payable to the purchaser proof for one year. The report further says: "It is recommended that the postmaster general be given authority to designate all money orders postoffices and such other postoffices as may be deemed necessary to receive deposits of money for savings, deposits for account of even children, with $1 as a minimum; postmasters to be required to receipt for the deposits in the pass books, of the depositors and to make duplicate deposits thereof to the automatic postal safes. If a depositor requests at the postmaster, Deposits made in postal savings banks to be at interest of 2 per cent per annum on any amount the deposit to be limited to $500 for any one year and not to exceed $1,000 in aggregate and the interest not to exceed $100 a year. A check book to be issued to each depositor, entitled to draw money on the postmaster at postoffice in general. Funds not withdrawn to be turned over to the chief actuary the bureau of the treasury.

LOWEST BIRTH RATE IN FRANCE.

Shows Big Decrease from Average of Last Ten Years.

Paris, France, Jan. 1.—Statistics in 1906, the decrease in birth, over the five years, amounts to 1,000 a year, or 1 in every 1,000 in the population. Deaths in 1906 are 1,000 less than in 1905, and 1,000 less than the average of the last five years. The population of the country is now a stationary one, the number of births, the accounts show, being equal to deaths. The excess of births over deaths in 1906 is 1,000 against 50,000 in the last five years. The population of the country is now 39,000,000, or 1,000,000 less than the average of the last five years.

THE GRANGE MOVEMENT.

The Parcels Post Plan Which the Grange Favors.

It is only fair to say that at one years the leaders of the grange movement have been thoughtful and conservative. They have been thoroughly convinced of the righteousness of any cause before they have espoused it, but, once so convinced, they have brought to the cause of the grange, gradualists to bear upon the subject in hand and in matters of legislation have been quite notably successful. The rural free mail delivery system, the interstate commerce commission, the denatured alcohol law, to mention no others, are examples of things that stand very largely by grange influence and grange effort.

But there are other problems at hand which the leaders of the Order believe it is within their province to solve or at least to lend a hand in their solution. One of these is the parcels post question. The position of the grange on this subject is this: It eliminates the monopoly idea entirely and proposes the establishment of a schedule of rates based on the actual cost of the service in lieu of a prohibitive monopoly, increasing the postage rates on all matter which is not a service and yet they would make the maximum weight sixteen pounds, on which the rate would be 25 cents from any point in any postoffice to the United States. This rate and weight are reached by easy gradation, thus: Three ounces and under, 1 cent; over three ounces and under six, 2 cents; over six ounces and under one pound, 4 cents; and 2 cents for each additional pound, or fraction thereof. In the rural parcels post they advocate a rate of 1 cent for one pound or less and 1 cent for each additional two pounds up to a maximum of eleven pounds. I have given these details because as they are not generally understood either by grangers or others.—J. H. D. in Tribune-Farmer.

GRANGE NATIONAL BANKS.

Grange National Bankers' Association of America Recently Organized.

Into form its permanently was held at Williamsport, Pa., which is the first of its kind and deserves more time and attention. It was the meeting for the organization of what has been styled the Grange National Bankers' Association of America. Its object is to extend the system of grange national banks which has been so successful in Pennsylvania to other states in the Union where the grange is organized. There are now twelve grange banks in Pennsylvania, and they will secretly five representatives to the Williamsport meeting. John C. McGerry of Benton was elected president of the association and E. H. Harper of Middletown was elected secretary.

Mr. McGerry said that thus far they have in Southern banks a total number of 2,100 stockholders, 105 directors and have in Southern banks a total number of 2,100 stockholders, 105 directors and capital of $882,000 of money invested, and in every instance the holding control of these organizations lies with grange farmers. He also regretted that the unevenness of and arrangements to other banking institutions, and that little is true to show from the fact that while the deposits have exceeded their expectations yet the older banks have likewise met with satisfactory growth in deposits. This may seem strange, but it seems to indicate, since the Twentieth Age, that the farming community had been slower to deposit money in banks and has been hoarding it to different places, if the grange bank movement succeeds in coaxing these funds from their hoarding places a benefit national in its character will be accomplished.

Massachusetts Auto Laws.

At the annual meeting of the Massachusetts state grange to be held at Pittsfield in December the automobile laws of the state will be up for discussion. Senator Moses of Hadgenham a member of the grange, believes that there is a great deal of unnecessary and unfair legislation. Those who ride in autos and the farmers, and he proposes that the grange appoint a committee of one or twelve to confer with a like committee from the State Automobile association and see if some form of law satisfactory to both can be drawn up, and if this can be done a petition will be presented to the Massachusetts legislature in January asking for legislation. Senator Moses thinks there should be no difficulty in getting a law passed that will be satisfactory to both if the parties can unite in their views as to what should be done.

Lieutenant Governor a Granger.

Lieutenant Governor Chanler of New York joined the third Hook grange of Dutchess county at one of its recent meetings. He was invited to make a little talk on the occasion, in which he said that this grange movement is spreading so powerful that if the farmer wants anything that is right there is no reason under the sun why he cannot get it. "But without a firm and intelligent organization," said he, "you stand no chance against the power of the legislature that which you are entitled to receive, and I can imagine no greater safeguard than the presence in Albany of representatives of such an organization as this that will watch for honest legislation in the interest of farmers and for the welfare of the whole people."

Ex-Governor Bell of Vermont says that farmers in that state are putting their money into savings banks now rather than send it out west to buy mining stocks. Getting wise!

A Christening in Sight.

A Mobile lawyer was surprised when his negro gardener called at the office accompanied by a large wheelbarrow. "Marse Robinson," he said, "I wants to know if you'd mind lendin' me some of yo' orthopedics an' dictionaries an' any other big books, sah."

"Upon the word," exclaimed the astonished lawyer. "What on earth are you up to?"

"Very important occasion, Marse Robinson, very important occasion, dese books an' me wants to hunt up a name for de baby."—Success Magazine.

GRANGE AND EDUCATION.

New York State Grange and Public School Management.

The committee that were appointed at the last meeting of the New York state grange to consider certain proposed improvements in the management of our public schools are now put light on the question. They have recently addressed a letter to each grange on the subject, which is of considerable importance. They say: "We have been highly successful in the convention of school commissioners took action which culminated in what was known as the Page bill. The grange was asked to endorse the bill, which it did not do, although legislation along similar lines was recommended, as follows:

"First—By establishing an educational qualification for supervisors of towns.

"Second—To remove the election of such officers as far as possible from political influences.

"Third—That such officers shall devote their entire time to the duties of their office.

"Fourth—That the supervisory districts shall be of such size that the officer may be able to inspect the work of each school under his jurisdiction at least once in each month in order that the rural schools may be brought to as high a standard of efficiency as are the schools of the villages and cities.

"The legislative committee appeared before the senate committee when the Page bill was up for discussion and made a statement as to the grange's position and asked that the committee now ask that the measure be recommitted to the state grange at its next session come prepared to take action upon this whole subject."

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

New Granges Organized During the Past Year, 252; Reorganized 43.

The following is the report of C. M. Freeman, secretary of the national grange, for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30 last:

CHANGES ORGANIZED:

California	2	Minnesota	2
Colorado	1	New Hampshire	1
Connecticut	1	New Jersey	1
Delaware	1	New York	3
Illinois	1	Ohio	1
Indiana	1	Pennsylvania	1
Iowa	2	Rhode Island	1
Kansas	1	Vermont	1
Maine	1	Washington	19
Maryland	1	Wisconsin	1
Massachusetts	1
Michigan	1	Total	252

REORGANIZED:

Indiana	1	New York	1
Kansas	1	Ohio	1
Maine	1	Pennsylvania	1
Michigan	1	Rhode Island	1
Minnesota	1	South Carolina	1
New Jersey	1	Washington	1
West Virginia	1
		Total	43

There were issued during the year:

Dispensations	252
Charters, including reorganized granges	295
Initiated members	32,000
Demits and certificates	15,000
Suspended for non-payment of dues	1,000

The receipts of this office for the year were $9,105.58, of which $1,717 was for sixth degree fees, $125 for seventh degree fees, $5,760 for charter fees, $2,504.43 from sales of stock and $7.15 from dues. The expenses of the office amounted to $7,876.21, of which $416.62 was for postage stamps and $273.04 for express charges.

How to Incorporate.

If a grange desires to incorporate, how shall it proceed? A special act of the New York legislature of 1897 provides that any subordinate grange may file articles of incorporation, for which purpose special blanks are provided with the town clerk, stating name and number of the grange, names of officers and executive committee and specifying a desire to secure the benefits of this act. When such articles of incorporation are filed the grange becomes a corporation and may take, hold, sell and convey property, real and personal, but the total net income from the real estate held by any such grange shall not exceed $500 in any one year. An incorporated grange enjoys all the rights and is subject to all the restrictions granted or imposed by the general laws of the state in reference to corporations. When one is understood, of course, that the obtaining of grange incorporation in New York state ends.

The Grange and Local Fairs.

We believe that the grange should make itself more of a force in its community where it exists. There are many public questions of a strictly local nature which the grange can discuss and act upon and which will be for the benefit of local conditions. We need suggest but a few, such as the public school, village improvement, country improvement, good streets, good sanitary conditions, planting and protecting of shade trees, protection of the right kind of men for local public offices, enforcing local laws and regulations, to the end that better physical and better moral conditions may prevail. We sometimes think that we try too hard to reform state and national matters and too little to make local conditions what they should be.—Country Gentleman.

New York is credited with nearly one fifth of all granges organized in the United States during the year ending Oct. 1. The total number is 252, of which New York has 48. Pennsylvania is second with 34, and Ohio has 23, closely followed by Vermont with 22.

No more mailing of nominations or discussing the merits of candidates for office in the grange in session. The new digest says so.

Railway Tickets of Gold.

All the principal railway companies in England issue railway tickets, made entirely of gold, which entitle the holder to travel free by any class of car and train on any line and by any system in the British isles. They are the size of a dime, but oval in shape and engraved with the particular railway company's coat of arms, with the holder's name beneath, and are intended to be worn on watch chains. These tickets cannot be bought, but are presented by the directors to persons who have earned the railway companies' gratitude.

He was very pale, and the great sweat drops stood on his forehead and under his white hair, but Maddy stared down into his brown eyes as a drowning man while the dark danger threat came and lay at his feet, for she knew that she had opened the medicine by his touch, full of danger, and that the time was long in coming. Then he began to speak, and she listened with a strange, hard smile on her face, while he told her of the Hundale family, and how they had lived there for years, and how Mrs. Hundale had died, leaving a little girl, who had been left to the care of her father, who had married a second time, and had a little child, and when Flora was 15 years old, her father died, and the little child died, and Mrs. Hundale was left alone with her husband and her child, and Flora was, it was said, to be the Hundale heiress, and Maddy grew cold as he told how the Hundales had died, and how Flora was left alone with her father, and how he had married her off to a young man who was a gambler, and had squandered her property, and how, when she was 18, she had gone home to her father's house, and died there, and her husband had followed her in a month, and left her little child with Mrs. Hundale, who was her aunt, and who had died, and left the child to her father, who was her uncle, and who had married a second time, and had a child, and died, and left the child with Mrs. Hundale, who was her aunt, and who had died, and left the child with

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

It has been decided by the republican national committee that the next convention will be held in Chicago June 16th, 1908.

Lieutenant Governor Lelley said last week that he believes the governorship contest will be settled at the primar, election and that Warner will be nominee.

Although the president long ago settled the matter for good, he considered it proper to inform the National committee last week that under no circumstances would he again accept the presidential nomination.

The feature of Tuesdays session of the State Grange at Saginaw was the adoption of a resolution committing the organization to prohibition. A good lusty boom has been started by the grangers for farmer Horton for governor.

Mrs. Louisa Taft, mother of William H. Taft, secretary of war, and widow of Alphonso Taft, attorney general of the United States under Grant, and later minister to Austria and Russia, died at her home in Millbury, Mass., Sunday. Mrs. Taft was born in Boston Sept. 11, 1827.

A conference was held Tuesday between Gov. Warner, Attorney General Bird and Frank T. Glazier, at the conclusion of which the governor announced that he had requested Glazier's resignation as state treasurer and that the latter had refused. Warner says that steps will be immediately taken to remove him from office. Warner in a statement issued declares that Glazier is guilty of gross neglect of duty and that he will cite him to show cause why he should not be removed.

The good King Oscar, of Sweden, died at his capital city Sunday at the ripe old age of 79 years. He is succeeded by his son, who assumes the title of Gustave V. Of all the monarchs of Europe Oscar was the most democratic, scholarly and philanthropic. The loss of such a King is a loss to the world, because Oscar left the world better for having lived in it. The name of Oscar of Sweden will go down in history as one of the world's greatest and noblest men,—a ruler who cared less for the baubles in his crown and sceptre than he did for the pleasant's greeting by the wayside.

Cadillac News. Word comes from Dr. A. G. Oven which will be pleasant news for readers of this paper. When he went to Rochester, Minn., a few days ago it was for the purpose of consulting physicians as to his physical ailments, it having been feared that he had some organic disease of serious nature. The physicians he went to consult were classmates of his and have long occupied a high standing in the medical world, even abroad, for their capabilities, hence his special faith in them. He writes that he has taken every test and finds there is nothing of the nature feared troubling him. His indisposition is pronounced the result of nervousness from lack of rest. He will remain in Rochester for a few days after which he will proceed to St. Joseph, Mo., to visit a brother. His sole object will be to obtain the rest so much needed and his friends will look forward to the time when he will be fully restored restored to health.

Cadillac News. One hundred thousand acres of sugar beets were raised by farmers of Michigan this season and nearly $6,000,000 was paid for the crop, or more than $1,000,000 more than last year's crop brought. The value of the manufactured sugar output by six factories around Saginaw [illegible] $10,000,000, or $2,000,000 more than last year. The other ten factories will do as well in proportion. Wexford county farmers have not thus far grown sugar beets to advantage. Two factors combine to make it hard to make any money on beets, as explained thus to The Evening News: "Our land is not yet in condition for sugar beet culture, and we cannot get the necessary help. Then we are eighty miles from the nearest factory and have to pay the freight, stand all the shrinkage and whatever tare they choose to deduct. If we could weigh up at a station in this county as we do on potatoes more farmers might be induced to go into the business. We ought not to have to pay the freight any more than on potatoes. The beet sugar men get a high enough protection on sugar to make them well able to pay the freight on beets.

Tax Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the December 1907 tax roll is in my hands for collection and that the several amounts appearing thereon may be paid at any time before the 10th day of January, 1908, without any extra charge for collection, aside from what appears on said roll. That after the 10th day of January, 1908, a collection fee of 4 per cent. will be charged on all taxes remaining unpaid at that date. The treasurer's office will be open to receive taxes every week day from 8:30 a. m., to 12 m., and from 1:30 p. m., to 5 p. m., and on Saturdays from 6:30 p. m. to 8 p. m.

Notice is further given that on said roll appear all uncollected taxes on the July, 1907, roll, together with all special assessments unpaid on said roll, all of which are re-assessed on the December roll, with the interest and penalty provided by law and are in my hands for collection at this time.

Hearle Good Advice.

O. S. Wooleve, one of the best known merchants of Le Raysville, N. Y., says: "If you are ever troubled with piles, apply Bucklen's Arnica Salve. It cured me of them for good 20 years ago." Cures every sore, wound, burn or abrasion. 25c at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

Virtue of Exercise.

Do you ever see a woman with her ears covered, no matter how cold it is? Do you ever hear of a woman having her ears frozen?

Well, it isn't because women's ears are made of something different. Not at all. It is because they use their ears, and the exercise keeps them warm. A woman hears everything.—New York World.

How He Lived.

"I can't understand," said the doctor after the operation had been performed and the patient had been prepared for burial, "how your husband was able to live with such an affliction as he had."

"Well, you see," replied the gently sorrowing widow, "it was years and years before we could persuade him to go on the operating table."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Silenced the Sultan.

Sir Charles Euan Smith was once the British minister in Morocco. On one occasion he found it necessary to make some strong remarks, which gave great offense to the sultan. "I could kill you for less than that," exclaimed the dusky potentate, with a grim smile. "Of course you could," replied Sir Charles pleasantly, "but if you did there would never again be a sultan of Morocco." The sultan said no more.

Not Like Lemuel.

Si Medders—What does Lemuel say in his letter, ma?

Mrs. Medders—He wants some more money—Joined one of them frat things with a jingly furrin name to it. He sez the fellers rushed him for a month, whatever that is.

Si—Well, ma, you can depend on it, Lemuel didn't do no rushin' unless the boy hez changed a whole lot.—San Francisco Call.

In Love's Name.

Love and Hate and Jealousy often live in the same house, though you will find only Love's name on the door.—Michael Monahan.

Daily Thought.

Have a heart that never hardens, a temper that never tires, and a touch that never hurts. Charles Dickens.

Cause for Pride.

Young Nobleman (proudly, as he receives the dowry)—First money I've ever earned!—Fliegende Blaetter.

Wisdom from Italy.

No wind can do him good who steers for no port.—Italian.

SHOES at FRAZIER'S.

The best that can be had for the money. Also full line of Rubbers Arctics and Stockings.

F. E. FRAZIER.

One Way to Make Money!

THE MAN WHO SAVES PART OF HIS EARNINGS IS MAKING MONEY. But no matter how much you earn, unless you lay by a part of it you are MAKING NOTHING.

Charlevoix County Bank

Her Wish.

Wee Hector—Mamma, shall I invite Lucy Littney to my party?

Mamma—Certainly. She is the minister's daughter.

"Do ministers' daughters get invited everywhere?"

"Always."

"They has lots of fun, I s'pose. I wish my papa was a minister 'stead of being a miserable sinner."—London Tit-Bits.

The Great White Ants.

The termites, or great white ants, which are highly esteemed as food in central Africa, live in great colonies and build enormous hills. As soon as the rainy season begins, when the termites are full grown and about to leave their nests, they are regarded as choice edibles, and the man who enter them goes forth with his ax and chops his way into their dwelling place in order to kill them.

A la Mode.

"Which is the first and most important sacrament," asked the Sunday school teacher of a girl preparing for confirmation.

"Marriage," was the prompt response.

"No; baptism is the first and most important sacrament," the teacher corrected.

"Not in our family," said the pupil haughtily; "we are respectable."—Ladies' Home Journal.

One of the smallest coins in value is the Japanese mushing, which is worth the fiftieth part of a cent. What a frugal people they must be!

A False Premise.

According to the logic of empty-headed persons who are perfectly open because they have nothing to hide, people who do not speak of their own affairs must have something suspicious to conceal.—Balzac.

The Contraries of Speech.

"Cannot I help you at this trying time?" asked the cook's admirer. "No," replied the cook, "for this is my hour of friend." And she forthwith proceeded to work the dough.

Musical South Africa.

One of the greatest markets in the world for musical instruments is South Africa, which spends on an Average $1,000,000 a year, about $500,000 of which goes in pianos.

Truth in a Sentence.

Pride goeth before a fall. No nutmeg is so great that sooner or later it won't stack up against a grater.

Uncle Allen.

"Take everything as it comes," advised Uncle Allen Sparks. "You bump into half the troubles of this life by trying to dodge the other half."

Australian Butter in England.

Far distant Australia is shipping more than 100 tons of butter a day to England.

Spanish Sauce.

To make Spanish sauce for fish add half a green pepper and half an onion, both chopped fine to a regular tomato sauce.

London Uses Much Soap.

It is estimated that London's population uses more than 700 tons of soap a week.
